confirm my statement that we have done everything we could do to help them and that we have always been subject to calls from them. They are fine men. That working relationship will continue. If there is the slightest evidence, at any time, that anyone associated with the Commission has failed to cooperate, I assure you the Commission will review any statement charging failure to cooperate, and will publicly censure anyone who is guilty of failing to cooperate.

If the committee will permit, I would like to make one more statement. I have been through a lot of investigations during my years as an employee on Capitol Hill. I suspect that some representatives of some organizations may be a bit reluctant to appear before this committee, for the purpose of criticizing the Commission, or its staff. They may fear that they might have cases henceforth before the Commission and they might suffer because of some ill-will they might develop through being witnesses here. Because of that possibility, I prepared this two or three minute statement so that I could assure you that it had the unanimous support of the Commissioners. It has.

The Commission assures every prospective witness that no greater service could be done for the Commission than that of presenting constructive criticism of the Commission to this Committee. We shall not only welcome such criticism. We shall also state that any employee of the Commission would be faithless to his oath of office if he were in any way to express resentment against those who testified. For the Commission, I pledge our expression of appreciation to everyone who will cooperate with the Committee in laying bare any fact, or condition, which will be helpful to us in serving the public interest.

The Commission will be ready to appear whenever you desire us to appear, Mr. Chairman. I should say that we were grateful for the respite given to us because we are endeavoring to complete as much of our case work as possible before the end of this fiscal year, and, because of that work, I doubt that any member of the Commission has used much of any day in intensive work on the questions which may arise during this inquiry.

LETTER OF A. J. HAYES, INTERNATIONAL PRESIDENT, INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF MACHINISTS, ADDRESSED TO THE SMALL-BUSINESS-ANTIMONOPOLY CONFERENCE AT A MEETING ON JULY 26, 1949

MR. CHAIRMAN: We, in organized labor, or at least in the organization for which I can speak, the International Association of Machinists, are becoming increasingly interested in the value of our wage dollars.

We are interested in, and concerned about, the powers that might determine the price of the things we buy.

We are interested in, and concerned about, that thing we know as monopoly.

Now, as we understand, another committee of the House, the Committee on the Judiciary, is investigating monopoly. Until we see what that committee does, it would seem that we should not, in anything we propose here, duplicate that work.

The cause of small business is our cause because every member of our organization is a small-business man. He has to sell his labor through our various associations which make up the International Association of Machinists, just as the corner druggist or grocer has to sell his labor. We are just as much opposed to the monopolist as is any grocer or druggist because we know that the end of that road, monopoly, is total.

But we want to suggest something which we think will have unanimous support from this conference, and we line it up as follows:

1. The Federal Trade Commission was established to create a free and fair and honest market place where we and others, the buyers or consumers, would be assured of a fair deal under a fair and free—bona fide free enterprise system.

2. It is true that despite the existence of the Federal Trade Commission throughout some 35 years, monopoly has developed and has waxed strong until today the only answer we find is that whenever monopoly is challenged we have demands that the United States Congress shall grant a moratorium for monopoly. That is the answer we find now proposed in the Capehart-Johnson bills. We found this in the field of insurance. We hear it proposed in the field of medical care. We hear it discussed in the field of finance and credit.

3. Therefore, we propose that this conference shall ask the House Committe on Small Business to do the following:

(a) Ask the Federal Trade Commission to advise the House Committee on Small Business:

(a) 1. What is its Federal Trade Commission authority and its responsibilities with reference to the development of monopoly and monopoly power.

(a) 2. Why is it that monopoly and monopoly power has developed throughout the years despite the authority and the responsibility granted to the Federal Trade Commission.

(a) 3. Does the Federal Trade Commission need greater authority of a statutory nature and, if so, what additional authority?

(a) 4. Does the Federal Trade Commission need greater assistance in the way of appropriations from the Congress?

(a) 5. What suggestions would the Federal Trade Commission have to make the Commission an educational and informative Commission to advise and assist us, the members of organized labor and of organized farmers, and of organized small business, and of cooperatives, and for the purpose of insuring to all of us a free and fair and honest market where we could spend our wage dollars?

(a) 6. Should the Federal Trade Commission be reorganized to make certain that it would become an agency, with sufficient authority and power and support in the way of appropriations to insure to all of us a free and fair and honest market in which we could spend our wage dollars?

4. We propose that the House Committee on Small Business shall ask the Federal Trade Commission for a statement with reference to these points we have raised.

5. We propose that when this statement is made, the House Committee on Small Business shall duplicate that statement and send a copy of it to each of the organizations participating in this conference.

6. We propose then that the House Committee on Small Business shall organize a series of hearings and under a plan through which each of the organizations here represented shall have the opportunity and the right to examine the representatives of the Federal Trade Commission.

7. We propose then that this conference shall consider any recommendations made by the Federal Trade Commission and shall take these recommendations back to their organizations and endeavor to organize a Nation-wide campaign of education in support of a free and fair and honest market.

In support of these proposals, we present only the obvious. We have always understood that the responsibility of the Federal Trade Commission was that of keeping the United States Congress—and through the United States Congress, the responsibility of keeping us informed and alert—to the dangers of the march of monopoly power.

Despite that we have had the Federal Trade Commission in existence for more than 35 years, we have the facts before us, and those facts are:

1. We have monopoly power developed until the danger of monopoly power causes the Congress to create a Temporary National Economic Commission, and it exposes only that monopoly power has grown until it controls and dominates our country.

2. We have now the committees of the House and Senate investigating monopoly and monopoly power.

3. We have investigations upon investigations—all of which should have been made by the Federal Trade Commission and under some plan or program through which we, in organized labor, organized agriculture, organized small business, and organized cooperatives should have been kept alert to the menace of monopoly power.

Now, we in the International Association of Machinists think that this was the job of the Federal Trade Commission. We think the Commission should have had the authority and the appropriations to do this job from week to week and month to month, so that we, in organized labor, would have been informed. We think the Federal Trade Commission was created to be the watchman in the tower. We want to know why the Commission has not done its job. In saying this we do not want to criticize the Commission or any member of the Commission because we are informed that the Commission has never had support from organized labor, organized agriculture, organized small business, or organized cooperatives. It has only had the opposition of the monopoly interests.

We are just proposing now that through this conference we should begin to look at this entire subject realistically. We propose that we should get the facts and then begin to act.

A. J. HAYES,
International President,
International Association of Machinists.

STATEMENT OF A. J. HAYES, INTERNATIONAL PRESIDENT, INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF MACHINISTS, BEFORE THE HOUSE SMALL BUSINESS COMMITTEE IN CONNECTION WITH THE INVESTIGATION OF THE ANTITRUST LAWS, JUNE 26, 1950

I am very glad to appear before your committee this morning. The work of the House Small Business Committee is always of particular interest to the International Association of Machinists. This is so because among the large unions of the Nation, we are one whose prosperity is intertwined with that of business. At present, for example, the International Association of Machinists has some 12,000 separate contracts with employers, the bulk of which are with small firms. What prospers general business in the economy, therefore, is of direct bread-and-butter benefit to many of our members. Because of this fact, the IAM has always been aggressive in going to bat for the interests of business whenever we have the chance.

When the late war descended upon the Nation, many small businesses were faced with the critical problem of obtaining Government contracts for war production or of going out of business.

Because small business was not as well represented in Washington as big business, its quest of war contracts was, for a period, quite unsuccessful. Many small businesses folded because they were not organized to demand and receive a fair share of Government war orders. In this crisis for small business, the International Association of Machinists, at its own expense, set up a bureau to assist small-business men to locate Government contracts. Our organization was in the forefront of the battle to create the Smaller War Plants Corporation which, when it was finally established, did a spendid job of putting to work the productive powers of small business in the war effort. We know it saved many thousands of small concerns from the fate of bankruptcy.

Today the House Small Business Committee under your able chairmanship, Mr. PATMAN, is embarging on an inquiry which we believe to be of the greatest importance to the Nation in general and to small business in particular. You are looking into the question of whether the existing antitrust laws are doing an effective job of protecting and preserving free enterprise in the Nation's business.

The essence of free enterprise is simply the existence of free and fair competition in business.

In a free-enterprise economy there may be both large and small businesses. But whatever the size of a business, if free enterprise is to be protected and preserved, it must not be allowed either to suppress competition in an industry or to engage in unfair methods of competition against its rivals.

The opposite of free enterprise is monopoly. When businessmen suppress competition and establish a monopoly control of markets, free enterprise perishes. When businessmen can engage in unfair methods of competition, the result is to unfairly destroy competitors and to destroy competition in industries. Not infrequently unfair competition has been used to whittle competition away to such an extent that monopoly emerges and the history of our business shows that it has been a powerful weapon in the hands of those who have fashioned monopoly controls in the marts of our commerce.

The fundamental purpose of the antitrust laws is to safeguard free enterprise in two ways. First, to prevent monopoly in business by enforcing standards of fair competition among businessmen. Second, to break it up and restore competition where it does emerge in the economy. The Sherman law—the basic antitrust statute enacted in 1890—and the Federal Trade Commission Act passed in 1914, empower the Department of Justice and the Federal Trade Commission to break up monopolies.

Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act vests in the Federal Trade Commission the power to define and declare unlawful unfair methods of competition. Provisions of the Clayton Act—also passed in 1914—spell out in the law certain methods of unfair competition such as discriminatory discounts and allowances and prohibit them. The Robinson-Patman Act passed in 1936 strengthens the provisions of the Clayton Act forbidding certain forms of unfair competition. The Wheeler-Lea Act enacted in 1938 implements the power of the Federal Trade Commission to ban false and misleading types of advertisement—a formidable method of unfair competition.

The enforcement of fair competition in markets is of permanent importance to small business. To thrive in trade a businessman must have business ability. But sheer ability will not make him a success. He must have access to capital. But ability and capital are still not enough. If he is a small-business man he must be protected from unfair methods of competition, particularly when such methods are employed by larger rivals whose resources are many times his own. If an unfair competitive battle, victory generally goes automatically to the competitor that has the greater staying power measured in terms of its resources. There are many forms of unfair competition which will bankrupt the business of a small-business man no matter how great his efficiency or ability.

In other cases, a small-business man may manage to stay alive, but the result of the unfair competition to which he has been subjected will ultimately rob him of his business. If one customer of a large oil company can obtain its gasoline unfairly for 18 cents a gallon while his other rivals are charged 22 cents, he can sell at a profit at 20 cents a gallon but his rival in meeting his price would be selling at a loss of 2 cents a gallon. If a large concern cuts its prices below cost in a region, survival is merely a matter of the staying power of the contestants. Small competitors will inevitably be pushed out. If a large concern engages in fraudulent and misleading advertisement, the result will be to take business away from smaller rivals. For example, during the late war, one concern, starting from scratch and employing the unfair practice of false advertisement, throve to such an extent on this device that by the end of the war it had become the largest in a region which took in three States. Unfair competitive practices have been responsible for the death of literally hundreds of thousands of small businesses and have robbed the survivors of billions in trade that would otherwise have been rung up in their cash registers. For more than half a century the greatest obstacle to the legitimate progress of small business in the Nation's economy has been the flourishing of unfair methods of competition in business in spite of law on the statute books forbidding them.

Now I don't mean that small-business men do not perish from incompetency. They do and should. But we do believe that one of the important factors in the high mortality rate of small business for many years has been the failure of the antitrust laws to protect small business adequately from unfair competitive practices. Against such practices, we repeat, the small-business man has been helpless, whatever his efficiency.

From their inception, the antitrust laws have been a failure in our opinion. They have neither prevented the growth of monopoly in business nor broken it up effectively where it triumphed over competition. Part of the responsibility for their failure lies in the long years of delay in even facing the problem of monopoly by Congress and in the defectiveness of some of the laws enacted to combat monopoly. The Sherman law was passed in 1890. It empowered the Government to break up monopoly where it appeared. Yet not until 24 years later did Congress wake up to the problem of preventing the growth of monopoly. In section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, the Commission was directed to define and prohibit unfair methods of competition. In section 2 of the Clayton Act, the Commission was directed to prohibit one of the deadliest forms of unfair competition—discriminatory discounts and allowances in trade.

In section 7 of the Clayton Act, Congress struck at one of the prime ways that monopoly grows—through the consolidation and merger of competitors. Wall Street had discovered that one of the most efficient ways to get rid of competition was not to drive it out of business by methods of unfair competition, but to buy it out of business through merging competitors in giant corporations. At the time Congress finally acted in 1914, great areas of business had already been denuded of effective competition by this technique. So Congress forbade one concern from buying the stock of another where the effect might be to substantially lessen competition in any line of commerce.

All this looked good. But in a few years much of this work of Congress turned out to be futile. Jokers were discovered in sections 2 and 7 of the Clayton Act. Section 2 was hamstrung by a provision that discriminatory discounts and allowances were legally condoned where a seller was meeting competition in good faith. The Federal Trade Commission soon found that price discriminators invariably turned up with this defense of their acts—and so price discrimination leaped clear of the Clayton Act. The prohibition against price discrimination in the Clayton Act was thus reduced to a nullity.

Not until 1936—some 24 years later—did Congress move to close this fatal loophole in section 2 of the Clayton Act by enacting the Robinson-Patman Act. Under the Robinson-Patman Act price discriminators were no longer allowed to justify their acts where competition had in fact been injured or where the effect of their discriminatory discounts and allowances might be to injure competition or competitors. Only recently big business has conducted an all-out 2-year fight to put back in the law the fatal loophole of the old Clayton Act which would make the meeting of competition in good faith a complete defense to a charge of price discrimination—to undo the Robinson-Patman Act which cured this loophole in the original Clayton law. They succeeded in actually passing a bill through both the House and Senate to accomplish this reactionary purpose and to leave small business a complete prey to price discrimination which has long been one of the most efficient methods for robbing and destroying small business.

Only a courageous veto of this bill by President Truman saved the day for small business—and by his act Mr. Truman has won the deserved gratitude of the Nation's millions of small-business men.

Section 7 of the Clayton Act also became a dead letter because of defective drafting. It forbade one concern to absorb another through the purchase of a controlling interest in its capital stock where the effect might be to substantially lessen competition in an industry. This was neatly and completely circumvented by having one concern purchase the assets of another concern instead of its capital stock. Since section 7 did not prohibit the purchase of assets the way kept open for the unimpeded onward march of mergers which progressively wiped out competition in business. For 36 years section 7 of the Clayton Act has remained a dead letter. Even under the New Deal efforts to cure its defectiveness failed. There is now pending in Congress, the O'Mahoney-Kefauver bill to finally put teeth in this section. But to date its chances for passage are reported slim.

All the above is a rather dreary picture of our Nation's effort to keep monopoly out of business. It becomes even drearier when other factors are taken into account. From their inception to date, the antitrust laws have been in substance toothless so far as providing penalties that would effectively deter businessmen from attempting monopoly. Illegal monopoly is a form of robbery. The monopolist takes money out of the pockets of persons just as surely as does the successful pickpocket. The difference, however, is that monopolists take a great deal more.

For thousands of years monopoly has been the most profitable form of robbery. The monopolist by charging higher prices for his products than would be charged under competition can tap the pockets of thousands, hundreds of thousands and even millions of persons. In history the profits of monopoly have been fabulous. The other evening I was reading Hendrik Van Loon's The Fall of the Dutch Republic and I found out some interesting facts about the profits of the famed East India Co. which flourished a few centuries ago in the modern world. A few merchants who owned the company were granted by the Estates General of Holland in 1602 a complete monopoly over all trade in the eastern colonies of the Republic. Five years after it was founded it paid 75 percent dividends. During 180 years of its existence the company averaged yearly dividends of 21 percent. During a period of 80 years upon one share of the company's stock, costing originally 3,000 guilders, no less than 107,665 guilders were paid in dividends and this share could have been sold regularly at 18,000 guilders. The company bought its spices in India for 30 cents a pound. She sold them at home for $36 a pound—a gain of 1,200 percent.

The East India Co. was a legal monopoly. In America we have legal monopolies—public utilities. But monopoly in utilities is allowed by Government because it would be too wasteful to have two gas companies or two telephone companies in towns and cities.

Competition is abandoned because it is considered unsatisfactory as a regulator of business in the utility field. But wherever competition can work in trade, a monopoly, whether legally conferred by act of government or illegally achieved by acts of private parties, has always had the same result—robbery of the many for the enrichment of the few. In America illegal monopoly—monopoly achieved in violation of the antitrust laws—has been a prolific source of illicit profit and unearned billions. The old Standard Oil trust produced 20 or 30 of the richest Americans. The House of Morgan, through its monopolistic control of security markets for many years, spawned forth its crop of multimillionaires. Great fortunes have been made by monopolists in timber, steel, copper, aluminum, pullman cars, farm machinery, glass, munitions, electrical equipment, tobacco, and many other products. The record on this point is beyond gainsay. That being so, let us look at the penalties provided in the antitrust laws for deterring businessmen from seeking the fabulous profits of monopoly. Our criminal laws bear down heavily on the ordinary thief. But the monopoly thief for more than 50 years has been little worried about being caught up with by the law. The penalties provided have amounted to an open invitation to flout the law.

In antitrust enforcement the Department of Justice has been mainly concerned with breaking up monopolies by proceedings under the Sherman law. It can proceed either on the criminal or civil side against offenders. For a successful criminal prosecution two penalties are provided in the Sherman law. The officers of the convicted corporation or corporations may be sent to jail for a year. Or, fines may be imposed on either such officers or on their corporations. The court decides in its discretion what penalties will be applied. In practice the jail sentence penalty has been so seldom used as to be worthless. In only one case since the enactment of the Sherman law in 1890 have businessmen actually been sent to jail for monopolizing trade. The usual practice is for courts to impose the penalty of fines and to impose such fines not on the officers of offending corporations but on the corporations themselves. The trouble with this penalty is not only that the human agents responsible for violating the Sherman law escape the fines imposed, but that the fines decreed have been utterly inadequate to deter businessmen from risking the law in their quest for monopoly profits. A fine of a few thousand dollars or even a hundred thousand dollars on a corporation with resources of a billion dollars has little deterrent effect. This is particularly true when it is realized that the loot raked in by monopolists prior to their conviction is generally many times the fines assessed.

Where the Department of Justice proceeds against offenders on the civil side under the Sherman law no penalties are provided. Defendants convicted simply receive what is called a litigated decree of the court—one that merely prohibits them from continuing their monopolistic practices in the future. When it is realized that the bulk of cases prosecuted under the Sherman law by the Department of Justice are reported to have been on the civil side, the encouragement to monopolists is obvious.

There is still another way in which the Department can deal with offenders under the Sherman law. This is known as the consent-decree method. It is simply an agreement between the Department of Justice and offenders, approved by a court, that the latter will not repeat their monopolistic practices and prescribing frequently certain things that the offenders may do and certain things that they may not do. Under a consent decree also there are no penalties.

Now suppose our criminal laws against common thieves were recast to bring them in line with the judicial treatment accorded monopolists. Imagine the rejoicing among that fraternity that lives admittedly by taking the property of others. If prosecuted criminally they would have little to fear from a jail sentence. If fined, the fine would be much less than the loot obtained. If prosecuted civilly they would, at worst, merely be told by the court not to do it again and be permitted to keep all that had been swiped. If they took advantage of the consent-decree method they would merely agree not to repeat their offense and also be permitted to keep what had been stolen. Such a recasting of the criminal laws against thievery would obviously create a thieves' paradise—and theft would certainly be encouraged to run wild.

With this in mind, let me turn to the Federal Trade Commission, The Commission cooperates in the enforcement of the Sherman law—but only on the civil side of the docket. Its special mission, however, is to enforce rules of fair competition in business as provided by the Federal Trade Commission Act, the Clayton Act, the Robinson-Patman Act, and the Wheeler-Lea Act. But whether the offense is monopoly achieved or the employment of a destructive method of unfair competition by a defendant, the Commission is powerless to punish. In both classes of offenses it issues a cease-and-desist order, which merely orders a defendant not to repeat his offense in the future. When the Federal Trade Commission was being created by Congress it was intended to arrest monopoly or unfair competitive practices in their incipiency and before they could do much damage to the economy.

But in the evolution of the Commission, it has become concerned with monopolies long established and with unfair trade practices which have flourished for some time and resulted in considerable damage to competition and competitors. In such cases a cease-and-desist order is too mild a penalty if monopoly and unfair methods of competition are to be effectively deterred.

Now, Mr. PATMAN, I am not a lawyer. My analysis of the penalty provisions of the antitrust laws is entirely that of a layman. But we do think that the existing penalties in these laws have encouraged rather than restrained monopoly and unfair competitive methods.

Another important factor in the failure of the antitrust laws has been inadequate appropriations by Congress for their enforcement. There are thousands of industries in America, hundreds of thousands of individual businesses turning out millions of different kinds of products. Every one of the products of industry can become the focal point of an attempt at monopoly or the initiation of an unfair and destructive method of competition. The world of business in America has been a vast labyrinth for many years. Two years ago Mr. Wendell Berge, Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice from 1943 to 1947, made some revealing statements about the inadequacy of congressional appropriations for the enforcement of the antitrust laws. He pointed out that it was not until the fiftieth year of the Sherman law that there was as much as $1,000,000 appropriated annually for its enforcement. Between 1908 and 1935, the appropriations varied between $100,000 and $300,000 annually. In 1936, the figure was increased to $439,000. In 1939, it had increased to about $800,000. For the fiscal years 1940 and 1941, appropriations were at an all-time high of $1,300,000. Since that date appropriations have increased, but when the increased cost of hiring a staff is taken into account, he declared that the antitrust law-enforcement staff of the Department in 1948 was not much larger in manpower than the prewar staff on a much smaller appropriation.

Mr. Berge declared that during a large part of the history of the antitrust laws, enforcement has been little more than a token. In the days when President Theodore Roosevelt was supposed to be scotching the dragon of monopoly, the entire enforcement staff of the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice consisted of only five lawyers and three stenographers. In World War I, when prices skyrocketed the number of lawyers increased to 18. In the twenties when mergers and the creation of monopolistic power proceeded at a fantastic pace, the number of lawyers did not exceed 25. Not until 1938 were as many as 50 lawyers actually employed and not until 1939 did the professional personnel reach 200 lawyers and a half dozen economists.

For almost its whole life, Mr. Berge concluded, "the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice has been a kind of corporal's guard."

A striking statement of the problem of adequate appropriations and personnel for antitrust enforcement is found in one of the TNEC monographs entitled "Antitrust in Action," by Walton Hamilton and Irene Till. One paragraph of this volume says:

"A brief comparison of antitrust with the metropolitan police is suggestive. As $1,325,000 is being used to police industry, break up restraints, enforce competition throughout the United States, a sum around $60,000,000 is spent to preserve peace and order within New York City alone. The Antitrust Division now has 200 attorneys, while the police force of New York City runs to an aggregate of 20,000 persons. An analogy between unlikes must not be pushed too far; but, niceties aside, here is evidence of basic weakness in giving effect to the Sherman Act."

In 1939 the combined staff of the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice and the Federal Trade Commission was less than 1,000 persons including charwomen and janitors. Yet when the Government ununder OPA sought to enforce an open price system—one far easier to enforce than a secret one which monopolists practice and which must be discovered by costly and often extensive investigation—34,000 persons were hired. Without adequate appropriations the soundest antitrust laws cannot preserve free enterprise.

Now, Mr. Chairman, a program to make the antitrust laws function at maximum effectiveness would certainly include more than adequate penalties and adequate appropriations. I am making no attempt to go into all that might be done to achieve such a goal. Rather I am suggesting that your committee come forward with two programs—one for immediate achievement and one which will be longer and require more effort and time to enact into law. In the short program I would include adequate penalties and appropriations and a measure to put life into section 7 of the Clayton Act so that the Federal Trade Commission may prevent in the future, mergers which substantially lessen competition in industries. Such a program if enacted into law would, in our opinion, go a long way toward the goal of antitrust enforcement which will stop monopoly and unfair competitive methods in business. It would bring an immediate and large amount of relief to small business. Because of the shortness of such a program and the wealth of material already available to support it, there would be, it seems to me, more than a fair chance of securing its adoption by Congress. I am afraid that I am a bit of a pessimist about making the antitrust laws effective. We have had a number of investigations of the subject, but practically nothing has come of them.

Ten years ago the TNEC conducted one of the most exhaustive inquiries into the deficiencies of the antitrust laws in our history. This inquiry cost several millions of dollars. The data collected filled many volumes. Many recommendations were ultimately made in the committee's final report. Yet not one of them has been even considered by Congress since. All that was gleaned was packed away in moth balls. Only a few years ago the House Small Business Committee made another investigation of the antitrust laws and also submitted a long list of corrective measures. None of these either has received the attention of Congress. The truth is that we already know a great deal about the weaknesses of the antitrust laws. What has been long needed is action here and now. So I hope that one of the chief fruits of this committee's work in its present inquiry into the antitrust laws will be the formulation of a short program for making those laws more effective. Behind such a program labor, the farmer, and small business should mobilize their united political strength, and if they do, I believe such a program will be approved by Congress.

Before concluding my remarks I would like to touch briefly on a matter which may be raised before this committee in the course of these hearings. Many people in America at the hour are busy warning the people that free enterprise in the economy is on its last legs. The bulk of this warning comes from important businessmen—big businessmen. As they see it, Government, labor, and the farmer are responsible for this impending tragedy. In their apportionment of the blame, however, these gentlemen are understandably silent about the primary responsibility of capital and management for its existence and for its continuation. This responsibility is camouflaged by picturing capital as thoroughly competitive and labor and the farmer as dangerous monopolists who are undermining the system on the flank and at the bottom.

The picture of big business as thoroughly competitive, is either wishful thinking or deliberate misrepresentation. An example of this kind of strategy is furnished in the address of Mr. Benjamin Fairless, president of the United States Steel Corp., to the Baltimore Association of Commerce a month or so ago. He insisted that it is nothing less than fraud to attempt to pin the label of monopoly on his corporation and implied that United States Steel has had a glorious record of free enterprise activities. Mr. Fairless ought to know better. From 1870 to 1898, the steel industry was competitive. It was a period of great technological progress in the industry. The price of steel rails declined from $116 a ton to $16 or $17 a ton. The price of pig iron fell from $33 a ton to $19 a ton. But in 1898, the United States Steel Corp. was put together by the guiding hand of Morgan. It was a merger of scores of businesses formerly independent and competitive with one another. One of the first acts of the new giant corporation was to peg the price of steel rails at $29 a ton—a price that was maintained without variation until World War I. By 1920 United States Steel was before the United States Supreme Court on a charge of violating the Sherman law. The majority opinion of the court dismissed the charge. True, there had been the Gary dinners commencing around the beginning of the twentieth century. But the Gary dinners had been discontinued for a number of years and the highest court could not, therefore, discover any acts of the corporation fixing or attempting to fix prices. So United States Steel thankfully bowed itself out of court.

However, in our judgment and unbeknown to the learned Justices of the Supreme Court, there was plenty of evidence that United States Steel was fixing prices in the industry and had been so doing for many years. The Gary dinners became unnecessary because United States Steel had established a pricing system called Pittsburgh Plus. The price of a steel product was its base price at Pittsburgh, plus freight to destination. This was known as the single basing point system. It is our considered opinion that under its operation, competition ceased to exist in the industry and the Sherman law had been completely circumvented. Three years after the decision of the highest tribunal that United States Steel was not violating the Sherman law, the Federal Trade Commission exposed the monopolistic nature of Pittsburgh Plus and convicted the corporation of practicing monopoly. Shortly after this decision of the Federal Trade Commission, the corporation switched to a multiple basing point system, the effect of which, in our judgment, was exactly the same as that of Pittsburgh Plus. From shortly after 1923 to 1948 the multiple basing point pricing system prevailed in the steel industry.

In that year the highest court convicted the cement industry of using a multiple basing-point system to suppress competition in that industry. Following that decision, United States Steel announced it was abandoning its multiple basing-point system. But, if true, this does not necessarily mean the end of monopoly in this important industry. It still remains to be found out whether prices are not being fixed at the mill. In our judgment, however, for practically half a century United States Steel has consistently and brazenly flouted the Sherman law.

Is unionism what is really destroying free enterprise in the economy? Let us look at this problem realistically. There are only three known ways in a free enterprise economy to raise the wages and living standards of workers. One is called the price-reduction method, the other is through the activities of labor unions, and the third is by a combination of the other two.

What is the price-reduction method? Under competition, increased technological efficiency in business results in a lowering of prices which, in turn, increases the buying power of existing wages. In consequence, workers receive an increase in wages. But this method depends for its workability on the existence of free and fair competition in business. Under conditions of monopoly the method cannot work. An increase in business efficiency will then not result in lower prices. It will result only in increasing profits and the firing of workers since with greater efficiency, less workers can do the job.

Under conditions of competition, the lowering of prices not only increases workers' wages, but enables consumers to buy an increased output by business. The increase in output which follows prevents the discharge of workers. The workers discharged when prices do not fall under monopoly conditions are retained under conditions of competition to produce more of a product at its lower price. Thus under competition technological unemployment is curbed.

As far back as the thirties the Brookings Institute passed an illuminating judgment on the price reduction method for raising wages and expanding markets. The institute, of course, is hardly suspect of radicalism, or of being a baiter of big business or a friend of labor. In a study of the American economy the institute concluded:

"It is, however, evident from the facts disclosed in our general study of the distribution of income, that the competitive process upon which we rely to disseminate the benefits of progress have failed to function with expected effectiveness. The method of continuously expanding markets through a persistent reduction of prices as efficiency increases has, in a considerable measure, ceased to operate in American business. Price stabilization policies have in many lines come to stand in the way of a dissemination of the benefits of business progress, and have, therefore, tended to nullify the results of technological advance. The basic economic policy which we are enunciating does, however, definitely attack what we regard as a serious abuse of the profit system and the institutions of private capital which have grown up in modern times. This is the tendency to centralize economic advantage, to protect existing business enterprises by protecting the price structure. For more than 50 years this tendency has been developing through the devices of corporate consolidations, pools, trusts, cartels, trade associations, and code authorities.

"Particularly since the World War, and often with the active assistance of Government, efforts have been going forward to stabilize existing business situations and to underwrite the prosperity of individuals, corporations, or large business groups by attempting to stabilize prices. We believe the evidence is clear that such attempts, however well intentioned, are dangerously shortsighted."

The fact is that the price reduction method in business has been paralyzed. Labor had no hand in this painful result. It has been accomplished solely through the monopolistic efforts of businessmen. It is simply foolish to charge that labor is slugging the free-enterprise system to death in America.

Are the farmers destroying free enterprise in the economy? There are only two ways open to the farmer to improve his standard of living, to claim his fair share of an increase in the productive power of the Nation's business machine. He can sell his products in competitive markets and buy his industrial necessities in competitive markets, or he can insist on price supports for his products or demand outright compensation from the Government sufficient to keep his standard of living from being exploited.

The first way presumes the existence of free and fair competition in all business. The farmer cannot sell his products in competitive markets but buy his industrial necessities in monopolized ones. He found out that that kind of a deal drove him into the gutter. But if monopoly has seized control of industrial markets what can the farmer do but cling to price supports or direct compensation from the Government. Again businessmen may be highly critical of price supports and wasted surpluses, or see in outright compensation to the farmer from the Government a looming shadow of socialism. But whose fault is it—the farmers' or businessmen's?

Is Government destroying free enterprise in the economy? According to certain businessmen, Government is infernally sticking its nose into their affairs through the medium of investigations, harassing, and intimidating the freedom of business. The trouble with the Government is that it has not been diligent enough in relentlessly exposing monopoly and unfair methods of competition in business. Due to this lack of diligence on its part, Government has permitted businessmen to strike the free-enterprise system in America a deadly blow which may prove fatal—to destroy competition in business.

If free enterprise is really to be saved in America, businessmen must cease to block and dam up the competitive process in business. Only by restoring competition in business and maintaining it is there any hope to save free enterprise in the Nation.

STATEMENT OF WATSON ROGERS, PRESIDENT OF NATIONAL FOOD BROKERS ASSOCIATION, JUNE 26, 1950

Mr. Chairman and gentleman of the committee, my name is Watson Rogers, I am president of the National Food Brokers Association, which is a national organization composed of independent local sales representatives, with headquarters in the Munsey Building here in the District of Columbia.

First, I should like to announce that it was with a great deal of hesitancy and reluctance on our part that I appear before you today. By way of explanation I should like to state that our organization has long followed a policy of strictest cooperation with the various Government agencies, as it is our firm belief that it is the responsibility of business and business representatives to work closely with such agencies. Likewise, I might add, it is our belief that it is the responsibility of the Government agencies to work closely with business, as well as with the citizens of our land.

Since this hearing is in regard to the activities of the Federal Trade Commission, I should like to be more specific regarding our experience with that Government agency.

I have literally thousands of personal contacts in the food industry, at the producing, wholesale, and retail levels, and in my travels around the country and day-to-day correspondence with my friends and acquaintances in the food industry, I say most emphatically that it is my belief that the overwhelming majority of the members of the food industry believe in the purposes of the Robinson-Patman Act and want 100 percent enforcement of that act. But these men are disturbed over the appearance of dangerous pricing practices which are cropping up in the case of different food commodities. At every opportunity I have extolled the purposes of the Robinson-Patman Act and I have spoken loudly in praise of the job the Federal Trade Commission has done in the enforcement of that act. But time and again my friends and acquaintances in the industry have said to me how can you speak so loudly in praise of the Federal Trade Commission when destructive pricing practices and violation of that law keep coming to light.

Generally speaking, we have felt that the Federal Trade Commission has done a very fine job in enforcing the laws under its jurisdiction.

In FTC's enforcement of these laws, there have been a few instances when some of our own members have been involved. But I should like to state here—and our records will confirm this—that at no time have we been critical of the Federal Trade Commission in this respect. I might add further that when it was proved by the Federal Trade Commission that any of our members were in the wrong, and they willfully violated the laws of the land, we have expelled them from our association.

The members of the National Food Brokers Association work under a very strict code of ethics. It is generally conceded that they cannot adhere to our strict code of ethics and at the same time be found guilty by the Federal Trade Commission. Again I say, at no time have we ever been critical of that agency for its action in enforcing the law.

I merely give you this background to try to show you, Mr. Chairman, and gentlemen of the committee, that there is no association or organization in America which has worked any more closely with the Federal Trade Commission than has the National Food Brokers Association.

I still think the Federal Trade Commission has done a marvelous job. Its batting average in securing court decisions upholding its orders is pretty nearly 1,000 percent. One must wonder why, then, there should now be a number of violations of the Robinson-Patman Act when the Commission and the courts have made the meaning of that act clear in so many factual situations. Granted the Commission has achieved a marvelous record, it seems clear that it cannot stand still, but must do something to preserve its record of enforcement. To this end I have three suggestions.

First, there is a criminal provision in the Robinson-Patman Act carrying a $5,000 fine or a year's imprisonment for violation of that act. So far as I know this provision has never been invoked. It is my understanding, of course, that criminal proceedings of this kind are the responsibility of the Department of Justice. I don't know whether the Department of Justice or the Federal Trade Commission has been softhearted in staying away from criminal prosecutions, but it does seem to me that there must be many cases where the Federal Trade Commission instead of proceeding for the usual cease and desist order might turn such cases over to the Department of Justice for criminal prosecution. There is no better way of showing that the teeth of this law can bite, and I think the great majority of law-abiding members of the food industry would like to see the bite put upon the fringe of chiselers who are working to discredit the law in the manner that the prohibition law was brought into disrepute. I, therefore, suggest that the Federal Trade Commission and the Department of Justice start a program of close cooperation with a view to imposing the criminal penalties provided in the Robinson-Patman Act for violations thereof.

My second suggestion has to do with cease and desist orders already issued by the Federal Trade Commission. I understand there are over 4,000 such orders already in force. Not long ago I heard producers of a certain commodity complaining to the Commission that a respondent under one of those cease and desist orders was continuing to violate the order. It seems that the Commission would like to check into things like that, but they have a small staff of only eight people to look after over 4,000 cease and desist orders. Gentlemen of the committee, I think this is a weak spot in the Federal Trade Commission organization. If respondents aren't going to comply with cease and desist orders the proceedings to secure cease and desist orders become a joke. It is my understanding that wherever a respondent violates a cease and desist order, the Federal Trade Commission can ask the Department of Justice to go to court to collect a penalty of $5,000 for each such violation. So far as I know the Federal Trade Commission has never asked that such a penalty be imposed, either because they don't have enough of a staff to make such a case or because of a lack of an effective program of cooperation between the Federal Trade Commission and the Department of Justice. Accordingly, I suggest that if the Commission doesn't have enough money to set up an adequate division to investigate and enforce compliance of its outstanding cease and desist orders, Congress should be asked to give the Commission the necessary funds for this terribly important enforcement activity; and I suggest that the Department of Justice and the Federal Trade Commission have a plan and policy of cooperation to make sure the cease and desist orders are complied with under such penalty of the law.

My third suggestion has to do with the delay of the Federal Trade Commission in coming to a decision in cases where its trial examiners have completed the taking of evidence and the findings of facts and opinions as to violations of the law.

An example of such a case is that of the Independent Grocers Alliance Distributing Co., docket No. 5433. The Federal Trade Commission issued a complaint against this company on April 18, 1946, for alleged illegal brokerage receipts in violation of section 2 (c) of the Robinson-Patman Act.

The Federal Trade Commission held a hearing on this complaint and in a report filed March 25, 1948, the trial examiner found that during the 10-year period, 1937–46, the company had handled brokerage payments of about one-half million dollars a year from sellers. The trial examiner stated in his opinion that the handling of these brokerage collections was illegal and violated section 2 (c) of the Robinson-Patman Act and recommended that the Federal Trade Commission issue a cease and desist order against any further violation of that provision of the law.

As indicated above, this report of the trial examiner was prepared over 2 years ago. The parties filed exceptions to the trial examiner's report and the case was argued on the merits before the Commission on November 23, 1948. The months passed but no announcement on the case was forthcoming. Finally in 1950 it was announced that the case would be reargued before the Commission on March 29, 1950. This date was canceled and the reargument was tentatively set for the end of May. At that time we learned that the hearing had been indefinitely postponed.

Because of the seriousness of this matter we wrote Chairman Mead on May 26, 1950, as follows:

"DEAR CHAIRMAN MEAD: I feel confident that I reflect the sentiments of the entire membership of this association when I express to you my own gratification over the President's selection of you to be the Chairman of the Commission under the recently enacted reorganization plan. The officers and members of this association have a deep and abiding respect for the accomplishments of the Federal Trade Commission since its creation over three decades ago.

"Knowing the sentiments of the members of this association and its officers toward the Federal Trade Commission, I am less apprehensive of incurring their displeasure in speaking to you on my own personal responsibility concerning a matter which in my judgment is undermining much of the good work and many of the fine achievements of the Federal Trade Commission since the enactment of the Robinson-Patman Act.

"In addition to many contacts with the members of this association, I have as many or more contacts with other segments of the food industry and during the past few months I have been asked repeatedly how it is I can go about praising the Federal Trade Commission and its enforcement of the Robinson-Patman Act when the Commission itself seems to have pigeonholed a case which is alleged to be one of the 'worst' cases ever to arise in the enforcement of that act. The case referred to is that of the Independent Grocers' Alliance Distributing Co.

"I am not familiar with the record of this case, and therefore, have no opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the respondent therein. I have been told repeatedly, however, that the Commission's proceeding established the fact that that respondent has collected an average of almost one-half million dollars of brokerage per year and that the trial examiner found that these brokerage collections violated section 2 (c) of the act and recommended that the Commission order the respondent to cease and desist collecting such brokerage. These critics in the food industry say that the trial examiner made his report over 2 years ago but that argument on the merits of the case has been repeatedly postponed and that at the present time no date has been scheduled for such argument and the prospect of a decision by the Commission seems to be fading as time goes by.

"I know of my own personal knowledge that represenatives of this respondent have been trying to get the Robinson-Patman Act changed so as to legalize their brokerage receipts. Many responsible persons in the food industry have the same knowledge and have expressed to me the concern that maybe this respondent in one way or another is being treated differently than others. My sole purpose in bringing this matter to your attention, Mr. Commissioner, is simply this, to inquire whether or not it is true that further proceedings in the case have been indefinitely postponed, and if so, for what reason. I would like this information in order that I may answer the many inquiries that have been coming to me concerning this case."

In answer to this letter we received the following reply from Chairman Mead dated June 7, 1950:

"DEAR MR. ROGERS: I have received and carefully considered your letter of May 26, 1950, in which you inquired whether or not further proceedings in the above-entitled case have been indefinitely postponed and, if so, for what reasons.

"This matter was scheduled for reargument before the Commission on the merits last spring. The reargument was scheduled because of the changes which have taken place in the membership of the Commission since the date of the original oral argument before the Commission on the merits. Among the reasons for the postponement of the reargument to October 26, 1950, is the prospect of having on the Commission before that date an additional new Commissioner. He would not have been available for participation in the consideration of the case if the reargument had been held as scheduled in the spring of this year.

"I trust that you will find the above explanation fully responsive to your inquiry.

"With kindest personal regards."

You will note in the above letter this is now set for a rehearing on October 26, 1950.

Now, gentlemen, sellers and buyers in the food industry at large are genuinely concerned with this case. Here we have a company which was charged and proved to have handled brokerage of about one-half million dollars a year over a 10-year period, before the complaint was filed. So far as we know that company is still handling that much brokerage in almost the same way 4 years after the complaint was filed and no decision has been reached by the Commission.

The grocery industry had thought that such brokerage had been forever condemned by the law and the decisions of the courts upholding the law in similar cases decided by the courts 10 years ago. The delay by the Federal Trade Commission in acting upon the trial examiner's recommended decision issued over 2 years ago has given rise to disturbing inquiries.

Another disturbing aspect of this case lies in the fact that about a year ago this respondent, IGA, secured the introduction of a bill in Congress specifically designed to emasculate the brokerage section of the Robinson-Patman Act, thereby making its present activities legal. Of course, if this bill were enacted into law (which I seriously doubt it will be) before the Federal Trade Commission reached a decision in the pending case, the Federal Trade Commission would then have to dismiss the complaint on the ground that the case had become moot, FTC cease and desist orders operate in the future only, not in the past.

However, I have no fear that Congress will make this possible, as evidence will show that after the introduction of this bill wholesalers, retailers, and businesses of all descriptions rose up in arms over this proposed emasculation of the Robinson-Patman Act, which has been their greatest protector. They all realized that without the protection afforded them under the Robinson-Patman Act many of them would find it impossible to operate against discriminatory competition.

Many of the wholesalers and retailers affiliated with the organization mentioned are customers of members of the National Food Brokers Association. It is not in opposition to them that we appear here, but rather as much for their future protection as for the rest of the industry. If there is a loss of respect for the law, because of weak enforcement, these said members would be penalized as great as, if not greater than, many other organizations in the food industry.

I have gone into detail on this case alone although a very similar statement undoubtedly can be made against the handling of other cases pending equally long periods before the Commission.

This is no indication that the Commission has streamlined its activities to maintain current schedules and to insure prompt handling of all cases. It definitely is not in accord with recent widespread publicity that the Commission's calendar would be up-to-date by June or July.

I thought this committee would be particularly interested in these matters. You might want to investigate the reasons for this unnecessary delay in handling. In addition to clarifying the situation on this case, it might be the means to insure speedier handling in future cases.

The foregoing, gentlemen of the committee, is the reason for my being here today. I am sure you know that for the future protection of the majority of American business, the Robinson-Patman Act must be vigorously enforced.

You will recall what happened in the prohibition days. Because there were so many flagrant violations the citizens soon lost respect for the law. After the people lost respect, Congress and the people deemed it advisable to repeal the law. Because it is so important in the protection of the free-enterprise system of America, we cannot think of letting such a thing happen to the Robinson-Patman Act.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ZABLOCKI asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in two instances and include extraneous matter.

Mr. MULTER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in four instances and include extraneous matter.

Mr. RAINS (at the request of Mr. BATTLE) was given permission to extend his remarks and include a speech.

Mr. EVINS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include an interim report from the Tennessee Valley Authority and other extraneous matter.

Mr. SADOWSKI (at the request of Mr. O'BRIEN of Michigan) was given permission to extend his remarks in three instances and include quotations in each.

Mr. JENKINS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include an article.

Mr. JONAS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include a radio address by Col. Robert R. McCormack, of the Chicago Tribune.

Mr. MACY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include an address.

Mr. REES asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include some resolutions.

Mr. VELDE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include an editorial.

Mr. HOEVEN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include a copy of a letter.

Mr. SCUDDER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include an editorial.

Mr. SMITH of Kansas asked and was given permission to extend his remarks.

Mr. GWINN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in two instances.

Mr. YOUNG asked and was given permission to extend his remarks.

Mr. BUCKLEY of Illinois asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include therein a speech he delivered at the Statler Hotel in New York City yesterday, and also a speech made on that occasion by the president of the Letter Carriers' Association.

Mr. MANSFIELD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include an address delivered by Col. Melvin J. Maas, United States Marine Corps Reserve, at the first postwar convention of the Marine Corps Reserve Officers Association, notwithstanding the fact that it will exceed two pages of the RECORD and is estimated by the Public Printer to cost $218.68.

Mr. HALE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include a letter.

Mr. BECKWORTH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks.

Mr. RICH (at the request of Mr. D'EWART) was given permission to extend his remarks in two instances and include editorials.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. CASE of New Jersey (at the request of Mr. TOWE), on account of official business.

To Mr. HAND (at the request of Mr. WOLVERTON), for 1 day, on account of sickness in family.

To Mr. WAGNER (at the request of Mr. BREEN), for an indefinite period, on account of serious illness in the family.

To Mr. DEANE, for an indefinite period, on account of official business.

To Mr. PLUMLEY (at the request of Mr. ARENDS), for balance of week, on account of official business.

To Mr. WERDEL (at the request of Mr. HINSHAW), indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. AUCHINCLOSS (at the request of Mr. ARENDS), for 2 days, on account of official business.

To Mr. SADLAK (at the request of Mr. ARENDS), to attend funeral.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mrs. NORTON, from the Committee on House Administration, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 1606. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of Auf der Heide-Aragona, Incorporated, and certain of its subcontractors against the United States;

H. R. 3783. An act authorizing the transfer of part of Camp Joseph T. Robinson to the State of Arkansas;

H. R. 5943. An act to provide for the erection of a bronze and stone monument at the grave of Constantino Brumidi; and

H. R. 6692. An act for the relief of Sgt. Blaine W. Hughes.

S. 2269. An act to provide for the enlistments of aliens in the Regular Army; and

S. 3771. An act to provide transportation on Canadian vessels between Skagway, Alaska, and other points in Alaska, between Haines, Alaska, and other points in Alaska, and between Hyder, Alaska, and other points in Alaska or the continental United States, either directly or via a foreign port, or for any part of the transportation.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mrs. NORTON, from the Committee on House Administration, reported that that committee did on June 22, 1950, present to the President, for his approval, bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 1243. An act to amend the Hatch Act;

H. R. 4895. An act to permit the prospecting, development, mining, removal, and utilization of the mineral resources within the national forests in Minnesota, and for other purposes;

H. R. 8198. An act to provide for the organization of the Army of the Department of the Army, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 480. Joint resolution extending the time for the release, free of estate and gift tax, of certain powers.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, June 27, 1950, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1513. A letter from the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, relative to the Department of the Navy proposing the transfer of a 40-foot torpedo retriever boat to the Junior Midshipmen of America, Inc., located at New London, Conn., to be used in training boys in seamanship, navigation, boat handling, and related subjects; to the Committee on Armed Services.

1514. A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill entitled "A bill to amend the Synthetic Liquid Fuels Act, as amended (58 Stat. 190, 62 Stat. 79)"; to the Committee on Public Lands.

1515. A letter from the Secretary of the Army, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated May 10, 1950, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers, on a review of report on the Arkansas River and tributaries, with a view to modification of the recommendations contained therein with respect to flood control on Hickory Creek. This investigation was requested by a resolution of the Committee on Flood Control, House of Representatives, adopted on April 19, 1946; to the Committee on Public Works.

1516. A letter from the Acting Attorney General, transmitting copies of orders of the Commissioner of the Immigration and Naturalization Service suspending deportation, as well as a list of the persons involved; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1517. A letter from the Acting Attorney General, transmitting a letter relative to the case of Pedro Albarez-Salgado, file No. A-4374799 CR 25988, and requesting that it be withdrawn from those before the Congress and returned to the jurisdiction of the Department of Justice; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1518. A letter from the Acting Attorney General, transmitting copies of the orders of the Commissioner of the Immigration and Naturalization Service granting the application for permanent residence filed by the subjects of such orders; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE

TUESDAY, JUNE 27, 1950

(Legislative day of Wednesday, June 7, 1950)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

Rev. Gerhard E. Lenski, D. D., pastor, Grace Lutheran Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

God of the nations, great and mighty, Thou who hast given unto us, the American people, a fair land and a goodly heritage and blessings too many to be named or numbered, we thank Thee this day for all Thy love toward us and for all Thy confidence in us.

In this solemn hour of world history help us, we pray Thee, to measure up to this confidence and to fulfill the destiny Thou hast planned. As war clouds darken on the horizon, as heavy pressures are imposed, as important issues demand our vote and our decision, help us, O omnipotent and all-righteous God, to look to Thee and to be guided by Thee in all things. Let Thy will be our will, Thy way our way, Thy truth and righteousness our shield and buckler. So may we face today unafraid. So may we build for peace in a world into which war can so easily come. So may Thy holy will be done on earth even as it is done in heaven above. All this we ask in Jesus' name and for His sake. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. MCFARLAND, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Monday, June 26, 1950, was dispensed with.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States submitting nominations was communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3776) to amend and extend the provisions of the District of Columbia Emergency Rent Act, as amended, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate; that the House insisted upon its amendment, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. MCMILLAN of South Carolina, Mr. ABERNETHY, and Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 2887. An act to amend the Architects' Registration Act for the District of Columbia in order to safeguard life, health, and property, and to promote the public welfare;

H. R. 7881. An act to amend sections 675 and 676 of the act entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1901, regulating the disposal of dead human bodies in the District of Columbia;

COMMUNIST ATTACK ON SOUTH KOREA—COMMUNICATION FROM AMBASSADOR OF KOREA

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Ambassador of Korea, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

KOREAN EMBASSY,
Washington, D. C., June 26, 1950.

The honorable the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit to you an appeal received this morning by cable from my Government, with the request that it be forwarded to the Congress of the United States. The text of the message is as follows:

"Beginning in the early morning of June 25 the North Korean Communist army began their armed aggression against the south. Your Excellency and the Congress of the United States already are aware of the fact that our people, anticipating an incident such as today's, established a strong national defense force. In order to secure the bulwark of democracy in the East and to render service liberating us, and in establishing our Republic, we, facing this national crisis and putting up a brave fight, furthermore appeal for your increasing support and ask that you at the same time extend effective and timely aid to us in order to prevent this act of destruction of the peace of the world. The above appeal was adopted by the National Assembly of the Republic of Korea on the morning of June 26 at its regular session."

Please accept, sir, the renewed assurances of my high consideration.

JOHN M. CHANG,
Ambassador.

PETITION AND MEMORIAL

A petition and a memorial were laid before the Senate and referred as indicated:

The memorial of Bertha E. Mullin, of Philadelphia, Pa., remonstrating against the recognition of any regime in China other than the Nationalist government; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

DEVELOPMENT OF LOW-COST PUBLIC ELECTRIC POWER—RESOLUTION OF NORTHEASTERN ELECTRIC COOPERATIVE ASSOCIATION

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, more and more groups throughout New York State and New England are expressing their concern over delay in the development of low-cost power along the St. Lawrence and at Niagara Falls. Recently at a meeting in Burlington, Vt., the New England and New York State Associations of Electric Cooperatives merged and formed the Northeastern Electric Cooperative Association representing some 20,000 farm member consumers. I ask unanimous consent to insert in the body of the RECORD and appropriately referred a resolution adopted at that meeting favoring the public development of power in New York and the northeastern region.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Public Works, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RESOLUTION OF NORTHEASTERN ELECTRIC COOPERATIVE ASSOCIATION

Whereas the Northeastern Electric Cooperative Association favors the development of the St. Lawrence seaway and hydro power project and other sources of low-cost power which would strengthen the economy in the Northeast and, in turn, of the entire Nation; and

Whereas it has come to the attention of this association that the New England Council and other organizations interested in maintaining the status quo have opposed such public developments at various times and places: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That this organization go on record as deploring the attitude of the New England Council and other interests for their short-sighted opposition to the development of low-cost public power; and be it further

Resolved, That this association publicly renew its stand in favor of the St. Lawrence seaway and hydro project and other feasible hydroelectric developments, and that this association urgently petition Congress to approve the pending St. Lawrence legislation providing for approval of the United States-Canadian agreement of 1941, and to make provision for a detailed survey of the proposed Passamaquoddy development and other potential sources of low-cost power. We further approve public development of low-cost power. We further approve the public development and control of such power as may be generated at Niagara Falls under the Canadian-United States Treaty of February 27, 1950.

H. R. 7881. An act to amend sections 675 and 676 of the act entitled "An act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1901, regulating the disposal of dead human bodies in the District of Columbia; and

H. R. 8709. An act to change the designations of Health Officer and Assistant Health Officer of the District of Columbia, respectively, to Director of Public Health and Assistant Director of Public Health; ordered to be placed on the calendar.

REORGANIZATION PLAN NO. 24—ANNOUNCEMENT AS TO RESOLUTION 290

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I notice that the press carried a statement this morning to the effect that I would call up Senate Resolution 290, disapproving Reorganization Plan No. 24, on July 7 next. That was a mistake. I canvassed the situation as carefully as I could, and it was my intention to move to take the resolution up on Thursday, July 6. I merely want everyone to know that that is my intention.

INVASION OF SOUTH KOREA

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to be recognized for 1 minute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Senator from Massachusetts is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I hope the President will exert firm leadership to retrieve what has been lost in Korea, and I pledge him my support in all possible efforts to that end. Weakness now would create a host of new dangers and would greatly threaten the encouraging beginnings of strength in Europe. A firm policy may mean risks and inconveniences, but we must not shrink from them.

I hope also that the military strength of America and the other free nations will increase so rapidly that Communist imperialism will no longer have the initiative, as it now has, and that we can then advance together to lasting peace.

AMENDMENT OF MUTUAL DEFENSE ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1949

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3809) to amend the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that tomorrow at 4 o'clock the Senate proceed to vote upon the bill (S. 3809) to amend the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949; provided, that no vote on any amendment or motion shall be had prior to said hour of 4 p. m. on said day; that no amendment which is not germane to the subect matter of said bill shall be in order; and that, after said hour of 4 p. m., debate on any amendment or motion shall be limited to not to exceed 10 minutes, to be equally divided between the mover thereof and the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations; provided further, that the time between 12 noon and 4 p. m. on said day be equally divided between the proponents and the opponents of the measure.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I requested yesterday that time be given until at least, we could canvass the minority, as well as other Members of the Senate, as to fixing a suitable time to vote on the pending bill. I cannot at this time consent to the request. I think in the best interests of getting the bill through expeditiously, it would be well to afford time to work this out this afternoon, and then present the request later on. We might at that time have some information which we do not now possess. At this moment, I know that several Senators want to make speeches on the bill, but they are not ready to speak today.

The bill which now confronts the Senate presents a question which not only involves $16,000,000 for aid to Korea, but which might involve the entire foreign policy of the United States. It ought to be thoroughly debated on the floor of the Senate. I think it is all out of proportion to try continually to force through a unanimous-consent agreement on a measure of this kind, upon which there has been scarcely any debate at all. The movement for unanimous consent was started last night. I want the acting majority leader to know, however, that I am absolutely in sympathy with expediting the work of the Senate, and shall attempt to cooperate. For myself, I hope that a unanimous consent can be worked out as early as possible, in order that a vote may be had on this particular measure, but at this time I must say that I cannot consent to the request.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I desire to express my disappointment at the action of the minority leader. Yesterday when an effort was made to fix a date for voting on the amendment of the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, I understood the Senator from Nebraska to give assurance that if the matter were allowed to lie over until today, he would cooperate in undertaking to fix a time for voting on the bill.

Mr. President, it is of the highest importance that the United States Senate act promptly on this bill, and not play with it or fumble with it. The condition of the world and the issues facing the world require that the United States Senate speak promptly. If a Senator does not want arms implementation, let him say so. But if the Senate wants it, we ought to have the right to vote for it. The Senator from Nebraska says there are many Senators who want to make speeches on the bill. Why have they not made them? They have had plenty of time in which to make them. The bill has already been before the Senate for several days.

I am very hopeful that the Senate will fix a time for voting on this important bill—important not alone to Senators who desire to make speeches. Shall the progress of the world be stopped in order that some Senator may deliver a speech? The question involved in this measure is more important than any campaign document, or the promulgation of the views of Senators. We want a vote. We want action. We have had enough words. We have had enough yah-yah and flag waving. Every Senator knows what he wants to do with this bill.

Mr. KEM rose.

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. KEM. I do not want the Senator from Texas to yield. I want to obtain the floor in my own right.

Mr. CONNALLY. Very well—the Senator from Missouri wants the floor in his own right. He is another Senator who wants to make a speech.

I know how I am going to vote; of course, I know how I am going to vote;

I am going to vote wrong, but I want to make a speech about it. Let the Senate wait; let the world wait on my speech. No one will listen to my speech, probably, but I want to make it just the same. My speech is beamed toward Missouri. It is beamed directly to Kansas City. It is beamed directly to the voters who are going to vote. I have got to make a speech, regardless of the welfare of the world, regardless of the security of western Europe, regardless of the psychology of voting now in view of the public attitude and the situation confronting the world. No; we will not fix a time to vote. All I will agree to is to fix a time for my speech.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I realize fully that the distinguished Senator from Texas regards it as an act of supererogation for any other Member of the Senate to express an opinion on the foreign affairs of the United States.

Mr. CONNALLY. Oh, no.

Mr. KEM. I heard him say that to the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] on an occasion not long ago. I am sure that if the Senator from Texas believes that to be so in the case of the distinguished Senator from Ohio, a fortiori he believes it in the case of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. President, I wish to say that I think there are several matters in connection with the pending measure which have not received adequate consideration on the floor of the Senate.

Yesterday the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], discussing the crisis in Korea, said:

> This is a matter of tremendous importance. We want to solve the problem presented, but we want to solve it after we know all the facts; we want to solve it in the light of our obligations and duties; we want to solve it in the light of our own safety and national integrity and national security.

Mr. President, those are eloquent words, and I should like to associate myself with them.

Mr. President, I need not remind the Senate that the pending measure and the crisis in Korea are very closely related. The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] tells us that of the $1,222,500,000 authorized by the bill, $16,000,000 is allocated to Korea and the Philippines, and $75,000,000 to countries in the general area of China.

I submit that this, too, is "a matter of tremendous importance." We want to solve the problem presented, but we want to solve it after we know all the facts. We do not have all the facts.

It occurs to me that before we vote to send additional millions of dollars to Korea, we should know just what the President and his Secretary of State are going to do about the situation in Korea. What is to be our policy there? What is to be our policy in regard to other countries in the general area of China? It would seem foolish indeed to continue pouring arms into Asia if our policy there is to continue to be, as has been said, "waiting for the dust to settle."

How about Formosa? How about southeast Asia? Just where do we stand? What is our policy?

Mr. President, we are now reaping the harvest for the tragic transactions at Yalta in 1945. It was at Yalta that the deal was made to divide Germany. It was at Yalta that a still-secret agreement is believed to have been made to split Korea in half along the thirty-eighth parallel.

As the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MALONE] said yesterday, after considerable investigation it appears not to be possible to find out just where the agreement to divide Korea at the thirty-eighth parallel was made.

It was also pointed out yesterday by the Senator from Nevada, and I should like to say that I do not think it can be referred to too often, that one of the leading State Department advisers for the President at Yalta was Alger Hiss.

The far-reaching decisions at Yalta were made in secret, without the consent of the Senate of the United States, as required by the Constitution.

Yalta should serve as a warning to the American people to stand by the principles of the Constitution. Yalta is a warning not to turn over to the President and the bureaucrats surrounding him the duty and responsibility of making decisions that may affect the peace of the world for generations to come. Such matters should be debated here and should be debated on the floor of the other body of the Congress. There is no reason to believe that when we put a pair of striped pants on a man and give him a high-sounding title and an elaborate office in the State Department, he acquires any of the characteristics of a demigod or gains a capacity for unerring judgment.

I am among those who believe, as did the British statesman who was referred to the other day, there is no such thing as an inevitable war, and that if war comes it will be from a failure of human wisdom.

We want peace. Our people hope and pray for peace. So far as the American policy is concerned, it should be decided by all the people, acting through the President and their duly elected representatives in the Congress. I do not favor shifting these important decisions to the bureaucrats of the State Department. I believe these questions should be threshed out on the floors of the two House of Congress. The arguments should be weighed in the balance of public opinion.

In a time of crisis such as this, the decisions of the Government should be the product of the joint thinking of all of us.

THE PRESIDENT'S STATEMENT ON THE KOREAN SITUATION

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I rise to place in the RECORD a statement just made by the President of the United States and released to the press upon the very question the distinguished Senator from Missouri has been discussing.

I hope every Senator on the floor will listen to the statement if he has not already seen it, because it presents a very serious situation to the country and the world in connection with Korea and other places in the Far East.

This is the statement:

STATEMENT BY THE PRESIDENT

In Korea the Government forces, which were armed to prevent border raids and to preserve internal security, were attacked by invading forces from North Korea. The Security Council of the United Nations called upon the invading troops to cease hostilities and to withdraw to the thirty-eighth parallel. This they have not done, but on the contrary have pressed the attack. The Security Council called upon all members of the United Nations to render every assistance to the United Nations in the execution of this resolution. In these circumstances I have ordered United States air and sea forces to give the Korean Government troops cover and support.

The attack upon Korea makes it plain beyond all doubt that communism has passed beyond the use of subversion to conquer independent nations and will now use armed invasion and war. It has defied the orders of the Security Council of the United Nations issued to preserve international peace and security. In these circumstances the occupation of Formosa by Communist forces would be a direct threat to the security of the Pacific area and to United States forces performing their lawful and necessary functions in that area

Accordingly I have ordered the Seventh Fleet to prevent any attack on Formosa. As a corollary of this action I am calling upon the Chinese Government of Formosa to cease all air and sea operations against the mainland. The Seventh Fleet will see that this is done. The determination of the future status of Formosa must await the restoration of security in the Pacific, a peace settlement with Japan, or consideration by the United Nations.

I have also directed that United States forces in the Philippines be strengthened and that military assistance to the Philippine Government be accelerated.

I have similarly directed acceleration in the furnishing of military assistance to the forces of France and the associated states in Indochina and the dispatch of a military mission to provide close working relations with those forces.

I know that all members of the United Nations will consider carefully the consequences of this latest aggression in Korea in defiance of the charter of the United Nations. A return to the rule of force in international affairs would have far-reaching effects. The United States will continue to uphold the rule of law.

I have instructed Ambassador Austin, as the representative of the United States to the Security Council, to report these steps to the Council.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. LUCAS. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. KEM. I notice that in the President's statement he says, "I have ordered the fleet to prevent any attack on Formosa." Does that mean that he has arrogated to himself the authority of declaring war?

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator from Missouri will have to place his own interpretation upon the President's statement.

Mr. KEM. Can the Senator from Illinois, as leader of the President's party on the floor of the Senate, elucidate that statement?

Mr. LUCAS. I do not care to debate that question with the Senator from Missouri. I do not believe that it means war but the Senator can place his own interpretation on it.

Mr. KEM. I am not asking the Senator to debate it; I am asking for information.

Mr. LUCAS. I shall not debate it with the Senator. I repeat he can place his own interpretation upon it. Obviously, it is a very firm commitment in respect to Formosa. It is in line with suggestions made a number of times in the past by Senators on the Republican side of the aisle.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. KEM. I should like to ask the Senator this question: Of course, it is true that the Constitution places in the Congress the authority to declare war; is it not?

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator is correct.

Mr. KEM. Can the Senator tell me under what authority of the Constitution the President of the United States has authorized the fleet to make an armed attack?

Mr. LUCAS. I do not agree with the Senator that the President has authorized the fleet to make an attack, but I can assure him that history will show that on more than 100 occasions in the life of this Republic the President as Commander in Chief has ordered the fleet or the troops to do certain things which involved the risk of war. I shall not be drawn into a long debate on the point. A little later the Senator can exercise his own right on the floor of the Senate and debate it as long as he desires.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I am merely giving this information to the Senate for fear that perhaps other Senators might make a speech similar to the one made by the Senator from Missouri. I thought when he made his speech he had not read the President's message. He talked about the dust settling on our foreign policy in the Far East. The Senator now talks about the President of the United States having practically declared war. So it does not make any difference what the President may do. I doubt that any thing would satisfy my friend from Missouri.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I should like to say, if the able majority leader will permit me, that I think this statement of the President of the United States today has drawn a line in the Far East which was essential to be drawn at some time. Certainly the free world could not protect itself if the line were to be drawn in Europe, with no similar line in Asia. I believe that in this very important step which the President of the United States has taken in order to uphold the hands of the United Nations and the free peoples of the world, he should have the overwhelming support of all Americans, regardless of their partisan affiliation.

Mr. LUCAS. I am very grateful to the Senator from California for the contribution he has made to the debate. That was going to be my closing appeal to the Senate.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I was simply going to say to the majority leader that it seems to me the responsibility of the President of the United States is to protect the security of the United States, and as I listened to the message I thought we had an opportunity to protect the security of the United States without declaring war or without any desire to go to war. I personally approve of the action.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator is absolutely correct. What we are trying to do is to avoid going to war through this unilateral action with respect to the defense of Formosa, the Philippines, and other nations of the Far East. In other words, it is a matter for our own defense and our own security, as the President has so aptly set forth in his statement.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one more question?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Should not the majority leader add to the words "the security of the United States," the words "the peace of the world"? What we are trying to do is to bring about peace in the world today.

Mr. LUCAS. Of course. I wholeheartedly agree with the Senator from Massachusetts. To try to obtain everlasting peace for all mankind has been the basis of our foreign policy and of the bipartisan foreign policy of this Nation at all times.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. WATKINS. I could not hear the Senator when he read the first part of the President's statement. I am particularly interested in knowing what action he ordered with respect to Korea.

Mr. LUCAS. I shall read it again:

> In Korea the Government forces, which were armed to prevent border raids and to preserve internal security, were attacked by invading forces from North Korea. The Security Council of the United Nations called upon the invading troops to cease hostilities and to withdraw to the thirty-eighth parallel.

This is the first clear-cut case which has been presented to the United Nations in which an aggressor actually moved in, in an act of war. I read further:

> This they have not done, but, on the contrary, have pressed the attack. The Security Council called upon all members of the United Nations to render every assistance to the United Nations in the execution of this resolution. In these circumstances I have ordered United States air and sea forces to give the Korean Government troops cover and support.

Mr. WATKINS. I understand that means that our forces have been ordered to support the Korean Government by armed action.

Mr. LUCAS. I shall read it again to the Senator, and he can place his own interpretation upon it:

> In these circumstances I have ordered United States air and sea forces to give the Korean Government troops cover and support.

Mr. WATKINS. Does the Senator construe that to mean active armed support?

Mr. LUCAS. I could not construe it in any other way. We are giving them armed support, so far as covering and supporting South Korean troops may be concerned.

Mr. WATKINS. Does the Senator consider that an act of war between this Nation and those who are attacking?

Mr. LUCAS. Does the Senator mean the North Koreans?

Mr. WATKINS. Yes.

Mr. LUCAS. No; I do not. There have been many similar occurrences in our past history which could have been considered acts of war and were not. I do not consider this is an act of war.

Mr. WATKINS. Should it not have been called to the attention of the Congress before ordering our fleet and our Air Force to support the government of South Korea?

Mr. LUCAS. I am willing to leave what has been done in the hands of the Commander in Chief, and I wholeheartedly support his statement from beginning to end; I wholeheartedly concur in what has been done. I do not think we could take any other course as a result of the aggressive action upon the part of the North Korean Government.

Mr. WATKINS. May I say to the Senator that I was asking for information. I had not caught the full purport of what had just been said, that the President had actually ordered the Air Force and the Navy to support the South Koreans against the North Koreans. Naturally, the question arises whether it is an act of war and whether Congress should be consulted and given an opportunity to take some action with respect to it.

Mr. LUCAS. A state of emergency exists.

Mr. WATKINS. I realize that. It is a serious emergency, and I am taking that into consideration. But does the Senator consider the action taken justified by the fact that we have ratified the United Nations Pact and have become a member of it, and if a request is made by the United Nations, through the Security Council, to send support, whether the President would be justified, by that alone, in sending support which might result in a war?

Mr. LUCAS. I read again the following paragraph from the President's statement:

> The Security Council of the United Nations called upon the invading troops to cease hostilities and to withdraw to the thirty-eighth parallel. This they have not done, but on the contrary have pressed the attack. The Security Council called upon all members of the United Nations to render every assistance to the United Nations in the execution of this resolution.

Based upon the action of the United Nations Security Council, the President of the United States has ordered action. It is a demonstration of our keeping the faith.

Mr. WATKINS. That is the Senator's interpretation of our agreement, and the force and effect of the United Nations Charter?

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BRICKER. Am I correct in saying that the President's action was taken as a result of the cease-fire order issued by the Security Council of the United Nations?

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BRICKER. The Senator from Illinois does not interpret the cease-fire order as an order to the United States or any other member of the United Nations to bring about military action on their part.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BRICKER. My question is whether, according to the Senator's information, any other member of the United Nations is cooperating in our efforts at this time to repel the invasion of Korea in accordance with the cease-fire order of the United Nations Security Council.

Mr. LUCAS. I cannot answer that question.

Mr. BRICKER. Does the Senator know whether any negotiations to that effect are being carried on at this time?

Mr. LUCAS. I can answer that question in the affirmative. I do not think that I can go any further than that.

Mr. BRICKER. Is the Senator in a position to give any assurance that cooperative effort will be made.

Mr. LUCAS. I can go no further than to state that I am satisfied there will be.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. As the majority leader has read the statement of the President, and as I read it, it is perfectly clear that the action which the President has taken is distinctly in line with action previously taken by the Security Council.

Mr. LUCAS. That is correct.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. It is in line with the action of the Security Council in asking for the war to stop, and for the invaders to withdraw. The invaders have shown no intention to comply with the request of the United Nations Security Council. Therefore the Security Council was put in the position where their order needed implementation with some force. I refer to chapter VII, article 39 and following, of the United Nations Charter. In line with the fact that there is no United Nations force in existence which can be called upon, we, along with other nations were asked to implement the order of the Security Council. The President's statement is in line with our responsibility under the United Nations Charter to meet this crisis.

I understand that negotiations have been begun with other members of the United Nations. I am advised that at 3 o'clock this afternoon the Security Council of the United Nations is meeting to determine what further action should be taken. However, the action which has been taken is distinctly in line with our responsibility, as agreed to in the United Nations Charter.

I wish to join with the Senator from California in the statement that this is a clean-cut and direct stand by the United States to carry out our obligation to the United Nations to make the United Nations exist as an organization which can function in an emergency. That is our responsibility, and that is what we have done.

As the Senator from California has stated, I feel that all of us should back up the action of the President in what I believe to be a real stand in the Far East, comparable to the stand we have taken in the Atlantic area.

Mr. LUCAS. I am grateful to the Senator from New Jersey for his statement. The Senator was present at the conference in the White House this morning, and he knows what transpired there. Without violating any confidence, I think I can say that all who were present agreed with the statement, and agreed that it was the only thing which could be done under the distressing circumstances which presently exist.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to say to the Senator from Illinois, as I indicated earlier, that I applaud the firm leadership of the President of the United States. I wish merely to add the hope that he will not shrink from using the Army, if the best military judgment indicates that that is the effective course to take.

Mr. LUCAS. I thank the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield to the distinguished minority leader.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to ask the distinguished majority leader if the course of action which has been taken by the United Nations Security Council also includes the action being taken by us with respect to Formosa. As I understand it, the President had ordered one fleet of our Navy to defend Formosa. Was that also in accordance with the resolution of the United Nations Security Council?

Mr. LUCAS. That is in accordance with unilateral action on the part of the United States Government, on the theory that our security and safety are involved in this section of the world, as a result of the aggressive action taken by the Government of North Korea.

Mr. WHERRY. I take that to mean that the administration is now drawing a line in the Pacific, which may be defined as an outpost which it is necessary to maintain in order to defend the United States of America.

Mr. LUCAS. I think that is a very fair statement of the situation.

Mr. McMAHON. I should like to say that we have not drawn the line. The Communists are drawing the line, because they have been the aggressors, and they are picking the places of conflict.

Mr. LUCAS. That may be true. Nevertheless, under the statement which has been made by the President, which I have read to the Senate, and which is now being debated by Senators, that fact is definitely stated. It is so important, that I should like to read it again. It is:

> Accordingly I have ordered the Seventh Fleet to prevent any attack on Formosa. As a corollary of this action I am calling upon the Chinese Government on Formosa to cease all air and sea operations against the mainland. The Seventh Fleet will see that this is done. The determination of the future status of Formosa must await the restoration of security in the Pacific, a peace settlement with Japan, or consideration by the United Nations.
> I have also directed that United States forces in the Philippines be strengthened and that military assistance to the Philippine Government be accelerated.
> I have similarly directed acceleration in the furnishing of military assistance to the forces of France and the associated states in Indochina and the dispatch of a military mission to provide close working relations with those forces.

In other words, through this statement we advise the world definitely what we intend to do in accordance with what we contend are our rights in the Pacific, which we shall defend.

Mr. KEM and Mr. NEELY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator yield; if so, to whom?

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I am seeking recognition in my own right.

Mr. LUCAS. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. KEM. I should like to ask the distinguished majority leader if we may expect the President to consult with the Senate as the situation develops?

Mr. LUCAS. I will say to the Senator from Missouri that the President had at least 12 to 15 Members of the House and the Senate attend the conference at the White House this morning.

Mr. KEM. By whom were the members of the conference selected?

Mr. LUCAS. I do not know who selected them.

Mr. KEM. Were they supporters of the so-called bipartisan policy, or were any representatives drawn from the so-called critics of that policy?

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] was there, and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] was there. Most of the Members of the Senate and the House who attended the conference are members of the Committees on Armed Services, the Committee on Foreign Relations, and the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I should think that they would be the appropriate committees from which members for such a conference should be selected.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I want to say to the able majority leader that present at the conference were members of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations and the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, and members of the Senate and House Committees on Armed Services. Both Democrats and Republicans were present. As I observed the conference I felt that an attempt had been made to have both sides of the aisle in the House and in the Senate present when this important decision was made. Military and naval representatives were also there.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator is correct.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. CAIN. I should like to inquire of the distinguished majority leader whether he is still endeavoring to get a unanimous-consent agreement to vote on Senate bill 3809, the unfinished business?

Mr. LUCAS. No; I am not seeking to get a unanimous-consent agreement on that bill. I rose merely to discuss the statement issued by the President. I am glad the debate has taken place. I hope as we discuss the President's statement we can reach an early conclusion of the unfinished business, because of the importance of the President's statement in dealing with conditions in the Far East. On the other hand, I do not like to deny anyone the right to debate the question if he so desires. However, it does seem to me that we ought to consider very seriously whether we are for or against the bill and move along with as much expedition and speed as possible, because we are faced with a great emergency.

Mr. CAIN. The Senator from Washington wishes to make a brief observation concerning the unanimous-consent request, but absolutely has no desire to interfere with the remarks currently being offered by the majority leader.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. I presume the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] is going to discuss a matter other than the message of the President, and with the permission of the Senate and the Senator from Illinois, I should like to make a very brief statement along the lines of the comments of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. I shall be delighted to yield to the Senator from Oregon for that purpose.

Mr. MORSE. I think it should be obvious to all of us that in an hour of great crisis in America the Commander in Chief of the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force becomes President of all the people for the purpose of meeting that crisis. I believe we stand in the shadow of such a crisis at this moment.

As a Senator on the Republican side of the aisle, I wish to say that I join with the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND], the Senators from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL and Mr. LODGE], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], and the other Senators in their expression of what I consider to be a clear pledge to back up the President in his statement for the defense of America's security in Asia. I, too, pledge whatever support to junior Senator from Oregon can give to the President in this hour of crisis.

However, I think we should pause, and calmly and seriously consider the implications of the President's action. I believe we have at long last—and I think it has been too late in some respects—made clear to the freedom-loving peoples of the world that the false, lying, vicious Communist propaganda which would make it appear that they cannot count on the United States to defend freedom in the world is really false and lying and vicious. The historic statement of the President makes clear to the freedom-loving people of the world that we are not going to tolerate Communist aggression upon free people. It makes clear that the President, as Commander in Chief of the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force is carrying out his duties under section 2 of article 2 of the Constitution in reference to the executive powers of the President. Those of us who have studied constitutional law know that the so-called Commander in Chief powers of the President of the United States as referred to in the Constitution have yet to be defined fully in the decisions of the Supreme Court. In my opinion, they are very broad powers in times of emergency and national crisis.

Mr. President, I intend to support the hand of the President in carrying out what I think are the clear implications of the Presidents' historic statement. However, I think that we should take cognizance of some of the great mistakes America has made in recent years in handling our Asiatic problems. Back in 1945 we made a most serious mistake in the Senate at the time we ratified the San Francisco Charter, when on that occasion we turned down an opportunity to recognize then and there the provincial government of Korea. We had a great opportunity to give force and effect to the meaning of the principle of the self-determination of people in exercising freedom of choice in determining their own economic and political systems. Korea was entitled to her freedom then under the spirit and intent of the San Francisco Charter. We joined with Russia in denying it to her. It is a black mark against our international record. We need to do what we can to make amends for our mistake of 1945.

It was argued then that we should not recognize the Provincial Government of Korea because Russia was opposed to it. Not in a spirit of "I told you so," but by way of reference to the RECORD, on July 28, 1945 the junior Senator from Oregon sought to get the Senate of the United States to recognize the Provincial Government of Korea. That speech speaks for itself.

At that time the junior Senator from Oregon warned of Russia's intentions in regard to Korea, and a few months later our country participated with Russia in the partition of Korea. That was a great mistake, and in the eyes of history we are not going to be able to justify the partition of Korea. But having been one of the wrong-doers in partitioning Korea, that action placed upon us a great responsibility. That responsibility, it seems to me, was to protect the freedom-loving people of South Korea from Communist tactics seeking to overrun the people of South Korea, which have finally resulted in the aggressive action taken by the Communists of North Korea.

Mr. President, I believe it to be true that we provided too little too late for South Korea, but we have an opportunity now, in spite of the tremendous international risks which I am sure we all recognize we are running, to come to the assistance of the freedom-loving Korean people, whose country we participated in partitioning. We have a responsibility to make clear to all the peoples of Asia that we do stand ready and willing, within the framework of the United Nations, to protect their freedom from Russian aggression. The President's statement on Korea and Formosa which he has just released makes very clear that he proposes action within the framework of the United Nations.

Mr. President, let us consider the most serious implications of this action of the President, because I think there should be a closing of the ranks in America today. I believe there should be a uniting of the patriotic forces in America to stand behind the President in regard to his statement concerning both Korea and Formosa. The Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND] was very statesmanlike in the understatement he made on the floor of the Senate today when he pledged his support of the President's action. After all, we need to keep in mind that we have not recognized the Communist Government of China. In view of the fact that we have not recognized the Communist Government of China, so far as international law is concerned, we stand in the position of having certain responsibilities in regard to maintaining American security in the Pacific with respect to Formosa. We also have certain responsibilities with respect to the Government which still prevails in Formosa. The President's statement proposes to carry out those responsibilities. It makes clear that Formosa shall be defended until a peace treaty is completed. It makes clear that the Nationalist Government in turn shall cease its attacks on the mainland.

treaty is completed. It makes clear that as a result of Yalta and Cairo, from an international law standpoint, Formosa was in effect deeded to whatever government ruled China, nevertheless I wish to say today, as the Senator from California has been warning for months past, we nevertheless have a great interest in Formosa from the standpoint of America's security in the Pacific. I think events in Asia make clear that we now must protect Formosa until that time comes when the nations of the world including Russia will be willing to settle the crisis in Asia through the procedure of the United Nations.

Therefore, Mr. President, I go along with the President's action in seeing to it that aggression against Formosa is not carried on until the legal status of Formosa can be determined in the international tribunals of the world, through the United Nations.

Let me convey to the majority leader, Mr. President, my feeling that as the hours immediately ahead of us pass, we are going to find the American people standing behind the President. I believe the President is deserving in this hour of emergency, of the united support of the American people in carying out his constitutional duties as Commander in Chief of the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force, in seeing to it that America's security the world around is protected and maintained from Communist aggression. By his action the President has given renewed hope of freedom for peoples of the world who are still willing to stand up for freedom in spite of growing Russian threats.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. McFARLAND. In answer to the inquiry with regard to the unanimous-consent request, I made inquiry yesterday evening to determine whether an agreement could be reached, and I followed through this morning because I thought the distinguished minority leader indicated that he would have an agreement worked out this morning. I merely wish to state that in making the request, I did so in good faith, in conjunction with the distinguished senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, and in consultation with many Senators on the other side of the aisle.

Mr. President, as I see the situation, it is not appropriate during this crisis in the world, to discuss whether we should not have done something different in the past, but it is time for us to support what is being done now, if we believe in what is being done.

One of the measures up for consideration is Senate bill 3809, having to do with mutual aid and assistance among nations. I do not believe we should cut off debate upon this important question, and no one is trying to do that; but Senators on both sides of the aisle have consulted with me and said that it would help them in their work if they knew when they could count on a vote being had on this important subject. This is a measure which is important in the crisis which confronts us, and I am hopeful that we can work out a unanimous-consent agreement for voting at an early date.

Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McFARLAND. Was the unanimous-consent request objected to?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As the Chair understands, the junior Senator from Nebraska objected.

Mr. WHERRY. I stated that I would have to object at this time to the unanimous-consent request.

Mr. McFARLAND. Then I should like to make the same unanimous-consent request, but with the date being changed to Thursday at 4 o'clock p. m.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I appreciate very much the ambitions of the distinguished Senator from Arizona and his endeavor to secure a unanimous-consent agreement. I believe I have made my position absolutely plain. A sufficient number of questions have been asked on the the floor within the last hour to indicate that certainly the Mutual Defense Assistance Act should be debated by the United States Senate. Many Senators are not yet ready to participate in a full dress debate until they have secured the facts. We have not even talked to those who were invited to the White House. There are many things we need to know. I happen to be a member of the Appropriations Committee, and each time the committee has a hearing I am amazed at some of the things we learn. I tell the Senate there are many things involved in this question. All I want is that opportunity for free debate be given to Senators who are interested. I do not know whether any Senator is ready to proceed this afternoon.

I want to advise the distinguished majority leader that I am not delaying action on the measure simply to put it off for another day. All I want is that some date be selected which is acceptable to Members on both sides of the aisle. At this time I am unable to suggest a date which will be satisfactory, but I assure the distinguished Senator from Arizona, the acting majority leader, as well as the majority leader, that just so soon as we can canvass Members on this side of the aisle, and as soon as some of the facts can be brought to our attention, then I shall be glad to do my level best to cooperate and obtain agreement on a date on which we can vote on this important bill.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. NEELY. What is the regular order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, Senate bill 3809. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] has the floor.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, the Senator from West Virginia is attempting to obtain the floor for the consideration of a privileged matter, but when he obtains the floor for that purpose the same Senators who have talked and who are now talking will be able to talk as long as they want to upon the subject now under discussion. I hope the Senator from West Virginia will not crowd me. I think Senators are entitled to ask me further questions about the matter we are now discussing.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I am obliged to attend an important committee meeting. I should like to return at 4 or 5 o'clock and obtain consideration of a privileged matter.

Mr. LUCAS. In my judgment these are questions which are more important than the privileged matter the Senator from West Virginia has in mind.

I shall now continue to yield for questions, and I yield to the Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN].

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, if the majority leader thinks it proper, I should like briefly to respond to the request and the observation just made by the distinguished Senator from Arizona [Mr. McFARLAND], because the junior Senator from Washington is one of those with whom the minority leader has conferred in a desire to reach a date to vote on the unfinished business.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, my thought was that perhaps after Senators have examined the statement of the President of the United States carefully and then, as the Senator from Nebraska said a moment ago, discussed the question with Senators who visited the White House this morning and attended the historic conference, we might be able to expedite the passage ot the unfinished business as the result of such consultations among Senators. I am satisfied that no Senator desires to delay the passage of the bill. I am sure that when every Senator realizes the emergency involved in the President's statement as to what the country has done today, we will not have too much trouble in securing passage of the pending bill. That does not mean cutting off legitimate debate upon the measure.

But even though Senators may be opposed to what the President has done, though they may be opposed to the pending bill, I am satisfied that in the best interest of our own security and safety we ought to move along as rapidly as possible. I am positive that we will do so because of the extraordinary emergency that has arisen, and because, as the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] said a moment ago, the time has come when we should close ranks. It seems to me that in view of the world conditions as they exist, there was never a time when it was more important than it is now to move with a certain amount of speed to demonstrate to aggressor nations that after all America is united, that America means business, that it will continue to uphold the freedom and independence of freemen everywhere, and especially of the free people in the United States of America.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, I came into the Chamber late. Was the document referred to by the Senator from Illinois a message to the Congress?

Mr. LUCAS. No; it is a statement by the President that was given to the conference this morning, and also to the press of the country. No doubt every newspaper in the United States has it on the front pages now. The commentators have it. I am sorry that the statement was not passed around. I brought one copy from the White House. Perhaps it would have been much better if I had brought a number so that every Senator could have had a copy on his desk.

Mr. WATKINS. Will the Senator yield further so I may make an observation?

Mr. LUCAS. Certainly.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, I have asked a number of questions with respect to this entire matter, and particularly with reference to the power of the President to order our Air Force and our sea force to back up the southern Koreans against the northern Koreans. In spite of the fact that the distinguished majority leader has said that that power is pursuant to the power granted to the United Nations to require a defense of nations, which are subjected to aggression, it seems to me that the action taken is a step which in effect is war.

Mr. LUCAS. Just a moment.

Mr. WATKINS. Will the Senator permit me to finish?

Mr. LUCAS. Yes.

Mr. WATKINS. It is in effect war or a step leading to war. It may be that that is the very thing we ought to do. I am not one of those who have been taken into the confidence of the President and the Defense Department of the Government, so I do not know the facts. But it seems to me that this should have been called to the attention of the entire Congress. The Congress is now in session, and unless there is power in the United Nations to order our forces into an action of this kind which may result in a major world clash, then I think we should have been informed by the President direct by a message to the Congress today. As I recall, we were told time and again when we were considering the Atlantic Pact, that nothing would take us into war under that pact without action by the Congress. The President could not do it.

Mr. LUCAS. Let me say——

Mr. WATKINS. Just a moment, please. Now, according to the action taken, by the mere order and the request of the United Nations our troops can be sent into a fighting war without the Congress saying "yes" or "no." That is the observation I wished to make.

Mr. LUCAS. In reply to the Senator from Utah, I should like to read from the statement by the President again:

> The Security Council of the United Nations called upon the invading troops to cease hostilities and to withdraw to the thirty-eighth parallel.

The Senator from Utah will not deny that they had the right to do that under the United Nations Treaty?

Mr. WATKINS. I think that is true.

Mr. LUCAS. I continue to read:

> This they have not done, but on the contrary have pressed the attack. The Security Council called upon all members of the United Nations to render every assistance to the United Nations in the execution of this resolution.

After we have become a member of the United Nations in good faith, and the United Nations Security Council by unanimous vote made that sort of a request, what would the Senator from Utah do if he were President of the United States?

Mr. WATKINS. I will reply. I would have sent a message to the Congress of the United States setting forth the situation and asking for the authority to go ahead and do whatever was necessary to protect the situation.

Mr. LUCAS. The first thing the Senator would have done would have been to nullify the request made by the United Nations Organization. By so doing you would have repudiated the United Nations Organization. You would have destroyed it for all peaceful intents and purposes.

Mr. WATKINS. A question that has never been finally determined is whether that can be done without the consent of the Congress.

Mr. LUCAS. Well, it has been done.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield, to permit an observation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEHMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, it appears to me that the statement of the President of the United States is one that is temperate and one that is firm. It also appears that it is the sort of language and the sort of clear-cut statement and public policy definitely needed in this very grave hour of crisis.

I think every Senator should be mindful of what happened in Ethiopia, when there was delay, when there was indecision, and when there was ineffective action. I think we should be mindful of what happened in the Ruhr and the Rhineland when Hitler marched in with his legions and took over, and when no effort was made by the democracies to prevent that kind of aggression.

I believe that our President and the United Nations and the distinguished members of our Foreign Relations Committee are mindful of history. The fact that the President has conferred with members, on both sides of the aisle, of the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House and the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate, and the fact that he has sought the advice of our military commanders, indicates that this is a policy which has been announced after serious thought and in view of a grave and a serious international crisis.

The President's action indicates that he is exercising the leadership and the statesmanship which the people require of the President.

I say there is not a word in the President's statement which does not go right down the line with the policy of our Government, a policy which has been joined in by the Senate of the United States.

First, the President is acting within the Charter of the United Nations, and, in particular, in accordance with the recent resolution of the Security Council, and is giving the assistance which was requested in the third point of the Security Council's resolution.

Second, the President is acting, in terms of the Formosan situation, not as a partisan of one side or the other, but to preserve a condition of peace until the problem of Formosa can finally be resolved by the Councils of the United Nations and by treaty with Japan.

Third, the President is acting in accordance with the action we have already taken in the defense of the Philippines. Believe me, Mr. President, communism seems to be contagious. It is constantly on the march as an aggressor. The action of the President in bolstering the defenses of the Philippines should be cheered by every person in the world, and surely by every American.

So far as southeast Asia is concerned, the Communist sore and infestation is there. I think the President is to be congratulated. The fact that he has acknowledged the request of the French Government and the request of the Government of Bao Dai in Indochina to bolster the defenses in that area, where communism has moved into southeast Asia, is most encouraging.

In vew of what has been so courageously and in such statesmanlike words expressed by the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], the Senators from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL and Mr. LODGE], and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], I hope every Member of this body will stand by our President and our country in this hour of crisis. If we stand firm now, we may save ourselves from war. However, if we back up now, we may find out that we shall be involved in a complete replaying of the tragic history of the thirties.

I believe this is a fatal hour. I believe the decision the President has made may save the lives of millions of people, and may ultimately save the peace of the world.

I pray God in all reverence that all the people will give their support to this policy, so that we shall not find ourselves driven by our own indecision and our own inaction into the cataclysm of a third world war. This may be the greatest move for peace in the twentieth century.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an observation?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. KEFAUVER. I wish to associate myself with the sentiments expressed by the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] and many other Senators on the floor of the Senate today, to the effect that this is a time to close our ranks, to forget political considerations, and to stand behind the President in the vital decision he has made. It seems to me that if the President had done any less we would have forfeited the position of leadership of the United States in the free world today. In addition, if the President had done any less in backing up the decision of the Security Council, we would have had to mark off the United Nations as an instrumentality for the maintenance of peace and security in the world.

Undoubtedly also, Mr. President, if the President had done less, and if the United States had allowed Communists to have gotten by with this effort on their part, without any resistance on our part, it would have precipitated from time to time worse and worse situations, until finally we would have been confronted with one in which we would have to make a stand which would be more apt to throw the world into another war than is the courageous and definite action of the President in this the first Communist military invasion in violation of treaty and in defiance of the Security Council.

However, Mr. President, I wish to say that one disturbing thing in connection with this matter is that apparently we have not learned very much from the lessons of history. Unquestionably, the evil men of the Kremlin calculated that this would be the best time to make a move such as the one which has been made in Korea—at a time when there was a parliamentary crisis in France, and at a time when other democratic countries, after 4 or 5 years of piecemeal effort, were divided in their foreign policies or in their military or other arrangements or determination to keep the peace. If we had been united in these respects, I doubt very much if the Communists would have started this action.

So the distressing thing now is that we have had to go into this situation in the beginning alone. Of course, we hope that other nations—allies and friends—will back up the decision which has been made. However, it seems to me that if we had undertaken some effort, shortly after the war, to have had at least some method by law of obtaining unity of action among the democracies of the North Atlantic, we would have had such strength and such influence and would have thereby given knowledge to every would-be aggressor that we would act together, that the present situation never would have developed. However, that is past history.

I think the second great thing we can do, in addition to voting for the military aid program, to let the Communists and everyone else know where we stand, in order to make of this matter a lesson which will be valuable and which will give us a chance to have peace, is to adopt Senate Concurrent Resolution 57. This would require the President to invite representatives of the nations which sponsored the Atlantic Pact to meet, to explore what kind of an agreement for unity or federation we and they may be able to agree upon, so that we shall not be caught in the position of being divided, and shall not be in a position in which we can be picked off one by one, so that we shall not encourage aggressors to continue their illegal invasions on the theory that the democracies cannot get together.

Mr. President, I believe that the adoption of the resolution showing the determination of the free people of the North Atlantic that in this crisis and in crises to come we will have unison in our foreign policy for the preservation of peace and peace treaties and the free world, will do much to deter further Communist aggression.

I hope, Mr. President, that the Foreign Relations Committee may immediately report this resolution favorably to the Senate.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President——

Mr. LUCAS. I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, we face a national crisis as well as an international crisis. I wish to make an appeal to the Members of the Senate and the country generally to stand behind the President of the United States in the statement he has submitted, which is before the Senate.

I congratulate Senators who have expressed their views on this subject. We cannot hesitate; we cannot divide. Any division here, by a speech or by any other expression of sentiment would be placarded all over the world as evidence that the United States is cautious or is afraid or is quaking in its boots. Such is not the fact.

The statement which the President has made is not a selfish statement. We seek nothing for ourselves. We seek the peace of the world. We seek action by the Security Council. Let me say to you, Mr. President, that we have the support of the United Nations. Its action already taken has outlined the position which the Security Council takes, namely, that it condemns the attack upon South Korea and appeals to the governments of all the members of the United Nations, including the United States, to condemn the action of North Korea in violating the integrity, the soil, the rights, and the freedom of the people of South Korea. The Security Council wants the support and aid of all the nations who are members of the United Nations, including our Nation. We are members of the United Nations. We signed the Charter. We ratified it here in the Senate. We ratified it before the world.

I congratulate the President on his having made this statement. It is one of firmness. It is one of clarity. It expresses the views of the United States. We do not seek war. The President's statement is that the Chinese Government on Formosa must cease its attacks against the mainland of China. That is in the interest of peace. That is in the interest of peace in the entire eastern area of Asia.

We want peace, but we want a peace with honor, a peace with integrity. We want peace with an assurance that it is in the interest of the peoples of the world.

Mr. President, this is a time for the people of the United States to stand together. It is no time for individual carpings and individual criticisms of what happened at Yalta. Yalta is in the past. We cannot undo what was done at Yalta—not here, at least, at the moment. This is a clarion call to the people of the United States and to the people of the world to condemn aggression, to stand up for the ideals of the United Nations, to stand up for the peace of the world. It is an appeal to all the peoples of the world who have rallied in large measure to the support of this declaration. Let not the United States be lagging. Let not the Senate of the United States be hesitant and afraid. Shall we quake, shall we quiver in our boots at the prooucement of a totalitarian government and at the tyrannical action taken by North Korea against South Korea? No, Mr. President. Let us stand together. Let us back up the President of the United States in his courageous and statesmanlike utterances, expressed in the statement which is before us.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I merely want to make a brief statement in conclusion. I want to read further from the statement by the President. In the next to the last paragraph he says:

> I know that all members of the United Nations will consider carefully the consequences of this latest aggression in Korea in defiance of the Charter of the United Nations.

As I see it, that is an appeal to all members of the United Nations, including Russia, which is a member of the United Nations. Whether Russia will attend the meeting of the Security Council this afternoon I do not know. But, Mr. President, Russia has a responsibility in keeping the peace of the world, if she so desires, just as America has. Russia could, if she desired, use her influence in North Korea with respect to following out the action taken by the United Nations organization in the historic meeting held yesterday.

Mr. President, in conclusion, I should like to make this kind of an appeal: As one who has been in the Senate for 12 years, I believe I am fully cognizant of the great emergency which is now before the Congress of the United States, the executive branch of the Government, and all the people of America. I believe I understand the implications of this emergency as it affects not only this country but the entire world.

We may talk about one-world government, but that will get us nowhere at this particular time. This is a time for action, and not a time for words. We can discuss what happened at Yalta from now on through the remainder of the week, and honest men will disagree as to whether the Yalta agreement was correct or incorrect. That, Mr. President, will not solve the situation with which we are presently faced. It is amazing how men with hindsight are able to tell you what should have been done, if a mistake was made, and yet had they been in a position to make the decision, it is doubtful that any different conclusion would have been reached. Mr. President, this is not the time to talk about the meeting in Cairo. It is not the time to talk about whether the partition of Korea was right or wrong, correct or incorrect. This is the hour when all America, and especially the Members of the Congress of the United States should forget their differences and close ranks. We should back to the limit the statement by the President of the United States, in order that we may demonstrate to the world, and particularly to any aggressor who seeks to challenge our freedom and our free institutions, that we stand where we have always stood in every great crisis, united and determined that justice and freedom shall continue to reign in this noble land which God has given us.

EXTENSION OF RENT CONTROL IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, the House has passed, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, the bill (S. 3776), to amend and extend the provisions of the District of Columbia Emergency Rent Act, as amended. I ask that the amendment adopted by the House and the message from that body be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3776) to amend and extend the provisions of the District of Columbia Emergency Rent Act, as amended, together with a message from the House insisting upon its amendment and requesting a conference with the Senate thereon:

Resolved, That the bill from the Senate (S. 3776) to amend and extend the provisions of the District of Columbia Emergency Rent Act, as amended, do pass with the following amendment. Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That section 1 (b) of the District of Columbia Emergency Rent Act, as amended (D. C. Code, 1940 ed., sec. 45–1601 (b)), is hereby amended by striking out 'June 30, 1950', and inserting in lieu thereof 'January 31, 1951, unless the Congress shall by joint resolution insert a later date.'

"'SEC. 2. (5) (a) After June 30, 1950, the provisions of this act shall not apply to, and no maximum-rent ceiling or minimum-service standards shall be prescribed for any furnished nonhousekeeping housing accommodations which are rented as rooms without kitchen privileges or facilities for cooking (but not in a suite of two or more rooms), and when and for such period as all of the housing accommodations in any building consists of rooms rented as furnished nonhousekeeping housing accommodations without kitchen privileges or facilities for cooking (but not in a suite of two or more rooms) the provisions of this act shall not apply to, and no maximum-rent ceilings or minimum-service standards shall be prescribed for, any such building.

"'(b) After June 30, 1950, self-contained family units (as defined by regulations issued by the Administrator) located in hotels shall continue to be housing accommodations subject to maximum-rent ceiling and minimum-service standards unless the Administrator issues an order decontrolling them, or any of them, which he shall issue if he finds that such hotel is primarily engaged in furnishing accommodations for transients.'

"SEC. 3. Subsection (b) of section 4 of such act is hereby amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof a colon and the following: 'Provided further, That the Administrator may by order adjust the maximum-rent ceiling or minimum-service standard hereunder although the landlord fails to produce evidence of facts occurring in the period from January 1, 1941, to December 31, 1945, if the landlord proves circumstances which in the opinion of the Administrator excuse the failure to produce evidence of such facts.'

"SEC. 3. (a) Where rooms or accommodations are decontrolled in the foregoing section, the building in which said rooms or accommodations are located shall also be decontrolled.

"SEC. 4. Section 5 (b) (2) of Public Law 45, Eighty-first Congress, first session, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 5. (b) (2) The landlord seeks in good faith to recover possession of the property for his immediate and personal use and occupancy as a dwelling: Provided, That in the case of housing accommodations for which the rent does not exceed $85 per month, in a structure or premises owned or leased by a cooperative corporation or association no such action or proceeding under this paragraph or paragraph (3) of this section shall be maintained unless stock or membership in the cooperative corporation or association has been acquired by persons who are or were tenants in occupancy of at least 65 percent of the dwelling units in the structure or premises at the time said cooperative corporation or association either (1) acquired or leased said structure or premises, or (2) entered into a contract or option to acquire or lease said structure or premises, whichever date is earliest, and who as such stockholders or members are entitled to possession of their respective dwelling units in the structure or premises by virtue of proprietary leases or otherwise, and this provision shall apply whether such corporation or association acquired or leased such structure or premises or entered into a contract or option to do so prior to or after the effective date of this amendatory act or unless as the holder of stock or membership acquired in the cooperative corporation or association prior to March 1, 1949, a stockholder or member was entitled to possession of a dwelling unit in the structure or premises by virtue of a proprietary lease or otherwise, or.'"

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, U. S.,
June 27, 1950.

Resolved, That the House insist on its amendment to the bill (S. 3776) to amend and extend the provisions of the District of Columbia Emergency Rent Act, as amended, and asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That Mr. MCMILLAN of South Carolina, Mr. ABERNETHY, and Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota be the managers of the conference on the part of the House.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate disagree to the House amendment, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint conferees on the part of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEHMAN in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. NEELY. I yield to the distinguished minority leader.

Mr. WHERRY. Will the distinguished Senator from West Virginia explain what is at issue between the House and the Senate?

Mr. NEELY. Certainly. Very briefly, the agreements and disagreements of the two bills are as follows:

Under the Senate bill the controls continue until December 31, 1950, and thereafter may, by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, be continued until June 30, 1951. Under the House amendment, controls are continued until January 31, 1951, and may be thereafter extended by the Congress.

Section 2 of the House amendment is identical with section 2 of the Senate bill.

Section 3 of the House amendment is identical with section 3 of the Senate bill.

Section 3 (a) of the House amendment is new. It would cover all the facilities of any building in which any decontrolled room, rooms, or apartments are situated.

Section 4 of the House amendment is new. Its purpose is to permit premises to be sold to tenants on a cooperative basis in cases in which 65 percent of the occupants have consented thereto, as under the present law, if the rental of the apartment exceeds $85 a month.

The House amendment does not contain the language of section 1 of the Senate bill, which, in permitting the District Commissioners to decontrol property, would grant them discretion in selecting the housing accommodations to be decontrolled after December 31, 1950.

Mr. President, there is nothing further to explain.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. NEELY. I yield.

Mr. CAIN. I think it is very clear to the junior Senator from Washington and to most of the other Senators that the bill, as it has been returned by the House, is substantially the bill which was recently passed by the Senate, with one major difference. The Senate, practically unanimously—I believe there was not a dissenting vote—agreed to extend rent controls in the District of Columbia for 6 months, with authority for an additional 6 months vested in the Commissioners. The House saw fit to recommend an extension of 7 months. That is the only major difference between the two bills.

The question I wish to address to my friend, the distinguished Senator from West Virginia, is this:

Would he have any strong opposition to a motion being made, partly because there are more Senators on the floor at this moment than is generally the case, and partly because no Senator voted in opposition to the provision of the Senate bill for an extension of 6 months, with authority vested in the Commissioners to extend controls for an additional 6 months, which would amend the House bill by striking out 7 months and replacing it with the original Senate provision of 6 months with authority to extend for an additional 6 months?

Mr. NEELY. That would be objectionable. I desire a vote on my motion.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, would the Senator please state his motion?

Mr. NEELY. My motion is that the Senate disagree to the House amendments, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint conferees on the part of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from West Virginia.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. KEFAUVER, Mr. LEAHY, and Mrs. SMITH of Maine conferees on the part of the Senate.

EFROSINI ABAD

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEHMAN in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1672) for the relief of Efrosini Abad, which was, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That, in the administration of the immigration and naturalization laws, the provisions of section 4 (a) of the Immigration Act of 1924, as amended, pertaining to the unmarried child under 21 years of age of a citizen of the United States, shall be held to be applicable to Efrosini Abad, of Istanbul, Turkey, who is the daughter of a citizen of the United States.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I move that the House concur in the House amendment.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator explain the bill briefly?

Mr. McCARRAN. On April 19, 1950, the Senate passed Senate bill 1672 for the relief of Efrosini Abad. The bill as it passed the Senate provided that the beneficiary, who is the daughter of a citizen of the United States, would, for the purpose of the immigration laws, be deemed to be a child under 21 years of age. The purpose of that language was to enable the daughter, who, because of circumstances beyond her control, had been unable to receive a visa before reaching 21 years of age, to enter the United States. The House amended the bill by substituting different language which will accomplish the same objective that would have been accomplished by the language of the Senate bill. The effect of the House language is to make available to the beneficiary the nonquota provisions of the immigration law.

Mr. WHERRY. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Nevada.

The motion was agreed to.

INCORPORATION OF RESERVE OFFICERS ASSOCIATION OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I am wondering if the Senator from Nevada has the intention of bringing up for consideration House bill 5002, which is a bill to incorporate the Reserve Officers Association of the United States. The reason I ask the question is because their national convention is scheduled for tomorrow, and they would like to adopt the language of the bill at the convention.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, that bill was reported yesterday afternoon, and with it was another bill, both of which I should like to have the Senate consider favorably and pass. One was to give a charter to the Future Farmers of America, and the other was the bill with reference to the incorporation of the Reserve Officers Association.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I wonder if there is any objection to their being considered at this time.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I withdraw my request, and will take it up later in the afternoon.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Maurer, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7058) to amend laws relating to the United States Military Academy and the United States Naval Academy, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 492) making temporary appropriations for the fiscal year 1951, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 492) making temporary appropriations for the fiscal year 1951, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

NOMINATIONS OF MEMBERS OF THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF THE EXPORT-IMPORT BANK

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, as in executive session, I report favorably the nominations of four members of the Board of Directors of the Export-Import Bank. I may say, Mr. President, that we did not have a quorum present at the committee meeting this morning, but I have had the clerk of the committee poll the members of the committee and find that a majority of them have approved of the nominations of the four members of the Board of Directors.

I conferred with the Senators from the States from which each of the nominees comes. Mr. Arey's nomination was approved by the Senators from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER and Mr. WHERRY], Mr. Gaston's nomination was approved by the Senators from New York [Mr. IVES and Mr. LEHMAN], the nomination of Mr. Gauss was approved by the Senators from Connecticut [Mr. MCMAHON and Mr. BENTON], and the nomination of Mr. Stambaugh was approved by the Senators from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER and Mr. YOUNG].

The reason I am reporting the nominations today is because the terms of these gentlemen expire on the 30th day of June. If these nominations are not approved before that date, the bank will have no directors. Furthermore, under the rules of the Senate the names of nominees must lie over until the following day. I merely wished to make that explanation at this time. I regret that the committee could not have a quorum present this morning. Some members had to attend a meeting of the Committee on Appropriations. As I said, the Senators representing the States from which these men come have approved the nominations, and I trust that when the nominations are reached on the calendar the Senate will confirm them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nominations will be received and placed on the Executive Calendar.

The nominations ordered to be placed on the Executive Calendar are as follows: Hawthorne Arey, of Nebraska; Herbert E. Gaston, of New York; Clarence E. Gauss, of Connecticut; and Lynn U. Stambaugh, of North Dakota, to be members of the Board of Directors of the Export-Import Bank of Washington for terms of 5 years each, expiring June 30, 1955.

THE RAILROAD STRIKE

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that in this morning's New York Times there appears an article entitled "Stalemate Goes On in Railroad Strike." The subhead of the article reads: "But switchmen's head says he is ready to consider offers—four of five roads paralyzed."

I call attention to the fact that the opening sentence of the dispatch, which emanates from Chicago under date of June 26, reads as follows:

> The strike of the Switchmen's Union of North America, an affiliate of the American Federation of Labor, against five railroads operating in the Midwest and West continued through its second 24 hours tonight with no indication that it soon would be settled.

I call attention to the further fact that in the course of this article is this paragraph:

> As a result of the walk-out, operations of four of the struck carriers were at a standstill today. These are the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad Co., the Chicago Great Western Railway Co., the Denver & Rio Grande Western Railroad Co., and the Western Pacific Railroad Co. The Chicago Great Western is largely a freight carrier.

The next succeeding sentence reads:

> Reports from the Twin Cities, Minnesota, indicated that the Great Northern Railway Co., the fifth road involved in the strike, has maintained near-normal passenger service, although its freight operations have been crippled.

Mr. President, at this point in my remarks I ask unanimous consent that the entire article from which I have quoted be set forth in the body of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STALEMATE GOES ON IN RAILROAD STRIKE

BUT SWITCHMEN'S HEAD SAYS HE IS READY TO CONSIDER OFFERS—4 OF 5 ROADS PARALYZED

CHICAGO, June 26—The strike of the Switchmen's Union of North America, an affiliate of the American Federation of Labor, against five railroads operating in the Midwest and West continued through its second twenty-four hours tonight with no indication that it soon would be settled.

Arthur J. Glover, president of the switchmen's union is here from his Buffalo headquarters at the request of Francis A. O'Neill, Jr., chairman of the National (railway) Mediation Board. He declared he would "sit down with anybody, anywhere, if they are ready to bargain in good faith." He was ready, he added, to confer with Mr. O'Neill and Leverett Edwards, a member of the board, "whenever they have anything to offer."

Mr. O'Neill said tonight that he was trying to get in touch with Glover, and expressed the hope that he would have an encouraging statement to make later.

STRIKERS HAVE KEY YARD ROLE

Mr. Glover called the strike of 4,000 union members at 6 a. m. yesterday in a move to enforce demands for shorter hours with automatically increased pay. Their role in railroad operation calls for their working of manually-operated yard switches.

As a result of the walkout, operations of four of the struck carriers were at a standstill today. These are the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad Company, the Chicago Great Western Railway Company, the Denver & Rio Grande Western Railroad Company and the Western Pacific Railroad Company. The Chicago Great Western is largely a freight carrier.

Reports from the Twin Cities, Minn., indicated that the Great Northern Railway Company, the fifth road involved in the strike, has maintained near-normal passenger service, although its freight operations have been crippled.

The switchmen are demanding a 40-hour week with 48 hours' pay, or the equivalent of an increase of 31 cents an hour. Their work week is now 48 hours.

BOARD PLAN REJECTED

A Presidential fact-finding board recommended a 40-hour week and a wage increase of 18 cents an hour. This, the union rejected.

Meanwhile, Mr. O'Neill said that officials of the Brotherhoods of Railroad Trainmen, the Order of Railway Conductors, both independent, and the Railroad Yardmasters of America, A. F. of L., have agreed to confer with the board tomorrow to seek a way of heading off a strike by the three groups on or after July 15. All are legally free to strike. Their membership totals 325,000.

The three cases are similar to that of the striking switchmen. The trainmen, conductors and yardmasters also are demanding a 40-hour week with 48 hours' pay. They, too, rejected the fact-finding board's recommendation that they settle for a 40-hour work week, with an 18-cent increase to make up some of the pay lost through the reduction in working hours.

OVERALL SETTLEMENT SOUGHT

Members of the board were apparently seeking to reach an accord between the carriers and the three unions in the hope that members of the smaller switchmen's group would then accept the same terms and return to work.

A strike of the three large unions would affect almost all of the country's Class I railroads.

A fifth strike is threatened by the Pullman Conductors Division of the Order of Railway Conductors. This walkout is scheduled for 6 a. m., at standard time in the four zones, on July 11. This is expected to be postponed for 60 days by the appointment of a Presidential fact-finding board.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I desire also to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that in this morning's Washington Post there appears a very interesting and important editorial entitled "Abuse of a Right." The editorial relates to the switchmen's strike, which, as the editorial writer states, has halted four midwestern and western railroads. I call the attention of the Senate particularly to this language in the editorial:

The tide of public opinion is bound to run heavily against any group that asserts the power to stall part of the Nation's transportation system, rather than accept the recommendations of impartial experts speaking for the Government. Such arbitrary conduct has become much too common. It is breaking down public confidence in the procedures of the Railway Labor Act and strengthening the demands for compulsory arbitration of such disputes. The brotherhoods ought to realize that every time they flout the findings of a fact-finding board they bring closer the day when they will lose the right to strike in situations of this kind.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at this point in my remarks the entire editorial be set forth in the body of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ABUSE OF A RIGHT

The switchmen's strike, which has halted four midwestern and western railroads, is accompanied by a fog of conflicting statements. Perhaps the most serious of these is the claim of Arthur J. Glover, president of the Switchmen's Union, that no board heard the dispute in accord with the provisions of the Railway Labor Act. Technically, his statement is true. But it ignores a background of fact that puts an entirely different face on the situation. The Switchmen and the Brotherhood of Trainmen are rival unions, with the trainmen having a majority of the yardmen involved in the general controversy. In recent months both have been engaged in a drive for a 40-hour week. As neither could effect a settlement by collective bargaining, the President appointed an emergency board to examine the dispute involving the trainmen's and conductors' unions and then asked the same board to look into the switchmen's controversy. It is true that the boast postponed its specific recommendations until its analyses had been completed in both disputes. In the meantime the 30 days in which the report on the switchmen's dispute was due expired. But that is obviously a fact of minor significance. The union waited until the board did make recommendations applicable to its members and then called a strike.

Nor can Mr. Glover's claim that "the major issue in this dispute is the 40-hour week" be taken at face value. The 40-hour week was the original source of controversy. But the emergency board recommended a 40-hour week and a pay increase of 18 cents an hour. The railroads have accepted that proposal. The unions had demanded the same pay for 40 hours that their members now receive for 48 hours, which would amount to an increase of 31 cents an hour. In other words, the switchmen have refused to compromise their 31-cent wage demand for 18 cents.

The tide of public opinion is bound to run heavily against any group that asserts the power to stall part of the Nation's transportation system rather than accept the recommendations of impartial experts speaking for the Government. Such arbitrary conduct has become much too common. It is breaking down public confidence in the procedures of the Railway Labor Act and strengthening the demands for compulsory arbitration of such disputes. The brotherhoods ought to realize that every time they flout the findings of a fact-finding board they bring closer the day when they will lose the right to strike in situations of this kind.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I call attention also to the fact that in the Christian Science Monitor of June 17, 1950, there appears an exceedingly important editorial entitled "Alternate Routes," which relates, generally speaking, to the railroad firemen's strike and the proposed legislation in Senate bill 3463. Although the bill is not named by number, the editorial evidently refers to it by description. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at this point in my remarks the editorial be set forth in full.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ALTERNATE ROUTES

Every time a labor dispute makes the American people begin to worry about their fuel, food, light, or freedom of movement, somebody starts talking about compulsory arbitration and outlawing strikes.

This is an understandable reaction on the part of the innocent bystander—the general public—and it has always come as a surprise to find that management opposes compulsory settlements as vigorously as does labor. (Witness United States Steel's campaign against a fact-finding board.)

Out of the recent and brief railroad firemen's strike came Senator FORREST DONNELL's bill to outlaw strikes and require binding arbitration in rail disputes. This time three top members of management—the presidents of three big eastern roads—vigorously endorsed the idea.

That this break in management's front should come in public utilities is not surprising. For their rates are already set under regulation by one Government board, which in turn would pretty much have to consider wage awards which might be made by another.

The Donnell approach is appealingly direct and logical. But for that very reason it ought to be studied and weighed with greatest thoroughness and caution. Some such solution might have to come. The rail brotherhoods in the last 7 years have tended to push disputes clear through mediation and fact finding to the emergency stage. If it should come, the law should provide a maximum of prior voluntary commitments by the unions and the roads on the make-up of standing arbitration panels.

But other and less revolutionary remedies should be considered first. One factor in several difficult disputes has been a log jam of cases before the railway adjustment boards—sometimes several years' accumulation. Perhaps the machinery of the National Railway Labor Act needs a factory overhaul.

Another road toward an answer lies in spelling out in advance and specifically just how the President could use his powers to keep essential freight and travel moving to protect the national safety and welfare.

After all, here lies the only indisputable ground for Government compulsions—not to force terms upon either side but to protect the general public.

The brotherhoods of trainmen and of conductors, just denied a wage increase by a fact-finding board, now have it within their grasp to demonstrate the railroaders' belief in solution by reason, or to push public opinion toward the flat prohibitions of the Donnell bill.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senate also to the fact that in the Brooklyn (N. Y.) Eagle of June 18, 1950, there appears an editorial entitled "Compulsory Arbitration in Threat of Railroad Strike Seems Desirable."

I ask unanimous consent that at this point in my remarks the editorial in the Brooklyn Eagle may be set forth in full.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COMPULSORY ARBITRATION IN THREAT OF RAILROAD STRIKE SEEMS DESIRABLE

Public hearings are being held on the Donnell bill which would provide for compulsory arbitration in case of a threatened railroad strike. William Green, president of the A. F. of L., has appeared before the Senate Labor Subcommittee advocating seizure of the railroads by the Government as a substitute measure. By seizure Mr. Green makes very clear what he means. The Government should take over the business of running the railroads and pocket the profits for the duration of the emergency.

The objection to the compulsory arbitration plan, according to witnesses opposing the bill, is that the technique would spread to other industries and destroy the whole collective-bargaining set-up. It is contended that there is no continued threat of strikes on the roads. Compulsory arbitration is a form of force against the workers. The final argument supported by Senator NEELY is that once compulsory arbitration becomes the law of the land it would be difficult to discern how our handling of the problem differs from that prevailing in Soviet Russia.

We may be a bit nearsighted, but we fail to see why each of the arguments presented by the opposition to the bill could not be applied to their own proposal for seizure by the Government. It would have a similar effect on collective bargaining; it would be a form of force against the company; it would be much more, we think, like the Russian pattern.

The testimony of the witnesses seems to bring out one point clearly. Unilateral action by Government against one side in such a dispute must be avoided. An injunction would penalize the workers; seizure penalizes the employer. Compulsory arbitration merely transfers the final decision in the dispute to a third party. The would-be strikers continue to draw their wages, the company continues to accumulate profits. Both are deprived of the privilege of freely consenting to the terms of the contract. They have, however, left themselves open to that contingency by failing to agree. The public welfare demands a peaceful settlement.

They have no right to fight out their private antagonisms at the expense of the public. If they do not want Government compulsions, the door of voluntary arbitration is still open to them. Let them set up their own mutually agreed upon board of arbitration and request the public authority to vest the final decision with the sanction of law. It will be one or the other.

The one thing that is as clear as the nose on your face is that Nation-crippling strikes can no longer be tolerated. If compulsory arbitration will impress upon the contestants the need and the reasonableness of voluntary agreements or voluntary arbitration, we would advocate the enactment of the Donnell bill. An amendment allowing for that possibility should be made a part of the legislation.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I shall not take further time of the Senate except to state that the various articles and editorials which I have placed in the RECORD by unanimous consent of the Senate again emphasize the utmost importance of the enactment into law of Senate bill 3463, to make unlawful any strike or any lock-out by a carrier arising out of or in connection with a dispute falling within the purview of the Railway Labor Act. I call further attention to the fact that in the disputes between these great national interests, the real parties in interest are not exclusively the strikers or the railroads, but that the great predominant interest is the interest of the public of the United States. I most earnestly urge that it is of highest importance that the Congress of the United States enact promptly Senate bill 3463, which would make unlawful any strike or any lock-out by a carrier arising out of or in connection with any dispute such as I have named, namely, those falling within the purview of the Railway Labor Act.

RESERVE OFFICERS ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar 1913, House bill 5002, to incorporate the Reserve Officers Association of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the bill by title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 5002) to incorporate the Reserve Officers Association of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment on page 4, line 8, after the word "to", to strike out "assist in" and insert "promote."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

THE ADMINISTRATION HAS NO FOREIGN POLICY—THEY ARE STILL SHARPSHOOTING

THE SITUATION IN KOREA

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, in the present crisis, as always, there is only one question to be resolved, only one question confronting this Nation, which is, What areas in Europe, Asia, and Africa and other parts of the world is it necessary to currently protect for our own ultimate safety?

OBJECTIVE—OUR OWN ULTIMATE SAFETY AND INTEGRITY

Mr. President, the aim of our foreign policy should always be the protection of the integrity of this country and the well-being of our own people. This point seems to be completely missed and disregarded in the State Department's stupid, helpless meandering throughout the earth, in their seemingly never ending quest for a new type and kind of trick foreign government to fasten upon the American people.

GUNS—THEN MEN

In a newspaper dispatch this morning the President of Korea is quoted as saying that the Koreans expect us to furnish the arms and that they will do the fighting. I believe we have heard that one before—Mr. Churchill—prior to World War II. I quote direct from the New York Daily News of Tuesday, June 27, where the President of Korea is quoted as saying:

> What we need is weapons and equipment. We don't expect American soldiers to shed their blood for us. We will do the fighting and the dying. Our boys are fighting to do their best. They are dying. But the weapons did not come in time.

Mr. President, I now quote direct from the New York Times a special dispatch from Lake Success dated June 26:

> The United Nations Commission on Korea reported today that the cease-fire resolution adopted by the Security Council Sunday may prove academic. That is a master understatement. The United States is now expected to propose that the Security Council give a second warning to the northern Korean invaders.
> The United States, in fact, has been studying the possibility of asking the Security Council to authorize the use of United States troops, but a usually well-informed source said tonight that he did not believe it would go this far because of the increasing deterioration of the situation in southern Korea.

Indicating that southern Korea would not last long enough to get United States troops that far, but this Nation expected the United Nations Commission on Korea to grant this permission.

ADMINISTRATION—THROUGH TWO WORLD WARS—NEVER CONFIDED IN THE AMERICAN PEOPLE

Mr. President, never through two World Wars, and with a third now threatening, has the executive branch of our Government, the President, the State Department, and the National Defense Department ever confided in the American people, if they knew, or now know, what areas or what nations in the world are important to our ultimate safety, and what areas or what nations it is necessary for us to protect at this moment for the ultimate security of this Nation.

Mr. President, in the President's statement of this morning there is a paragraph which says:

> Accordingly—

Meaning since this attack has been made in south Korea—

> Accordingly I have ordered the Seventh Fleet to prevent any attack on Formosa. As a corollary of this action I am calling upon the Chinese Government on Formosa to cease all air and sea operations against the mainland.

THE NATIONALIST GOVERNMENT MUST CEASE FIGHTING

Against what, Mr. President? Against the Communist Government of China, which they have been fighting since the close of World War II. First it was the Japs and then the invasion of the Communists. So the Seventh Fleet will see that this directive is observed. They must cease to fight for their country. In other words, Chiang Kai-shek is through. He is not to be allowed to fight Communists any more.

WE SAVE THE COMMUNISTS FROM THE NATIONALISTS

What does that mean, Mr. President? It means that the Communist areas will not be attacked further by the Nationalist Chinese Government.

CLEAN FIELD FOR ENGLISH-COMMUNIST TRADE

The Communists will have more time to help the northern Korean Communists attack the southern Korean citizens, and it will give a clear field for the trade which England has been conducting through Hong Kong into Communist China continually since the Communists took over China. Not only has there been no decrease in the trade, there has been an acceleration of the trade, the British sending them everything they needed to consolidate their gains, and for northern Korea to consolidate their gains, to fight a world war III with us, and to fight south Korea. The Nationalist Government of China has been the only drawback to a free flow of trade from England, and perhaps some of the other European countries, through Hong Kong to Communist China.

THE ULTIMATE SAFETY OF THIS NATION PARAMOUNT

Mr. President, I want it well understood that I am not objecting to anything that is necessary to be done. In fact, I will support anything that is necessary to be done to protect an area anywhere in the world that the executive branch of this Government, which is charged with fixing foreign policy, says is important to the ultimate safety to the United States of America.

I have read the statement by the President dated June 27, marked "Immediate Release," very carefully, not once, but two or three times, and nowhere in that message do I find any such area named. Not only is the area under discussion not named, but I find no area in the world named, with a specific statement to the effect that the defense of such area is important to our ultimate safety.

I believe the American people are going to inquire about that, as to where we are headed and just what areas it is necessary to protect, and then they may inquire why arrangements have not already been made to protect those areas—we have had 5 years since the war closed.

THE CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE AGENCY—MR. HILLENKOETTER

Mr. President, I now wish to quote briefly from a very well known man, as he is quoted in the New York Daily News of Tuesday, June 27, 1950. His picture appears in the center of a group of three national figures. I read: It is stated in the caption that Rear Adm. Roscoe Hillenkoetter, chief of the Central Intelligence Agency, tells two members of the Senate Appropriations Committee that the Korean invasion had been expected for a year, but that it was impossible to predict the specific timing.

INVASION EXPECTED BUT NO FOREIGN POLICY

Mr. President, what has the specific timing got to do with it? If for a year they knew this invasion was going to take place, and if they had 5 years—which they have had sinrce World War II—to determine the areas—the nations in the world whose integrity was important to our ultimate safety, if they had positive information, as Admiral Hillenkoetter says they did that this invasion was going to take place, why then the surprise?

ONLY SURPRISE IS THAT ANYONE WAS SURPRISED

The surprising thing is that anybody would be surprised in view of the foolish, stupid policies of the State Department in Asia since World War II. And then we have the confession that we knew all about this invasion, but since we were just not able to time it to the hour, we were not ready.

Mr. President, I read further from the statement by the President:

THE DIVISION OF KOREA—THE THIRTY-EIGHTH PARALLEL

> The Security Council of the United Nations called upon the invading troops to cease hostilities and to withdraw to the thirty-eighth parallel.

Mr. President, the junior Senator from Nevada already has called attention to stupid division of Korea at the thirty-eighth parallel. Who fixed the thirty-eighth parallel? No one will now admit he had anything to do with it. It is an exact parallel case, Mr. President, to that of India, from which the English withdrew. There are now really three nations made out of India. There is now a divided India—one called Pakistan. Pakistan is in two sections 3,000 miles apart—this nation that was set up with the full knowledge that it cannot possibly survive.

DIVISION OF KOREA CANNOT SUCCEED

The people who fixed this thirty-eighth parallel, Mr. President, whether at Yalta, where we had the great and good and profound advice of Mr. Hiss to fix that thirty-eighth parallel, or elsewhere, knew it could not work because they cut the manufacturing section and the power supply section of Korea away from the farming section.

PRESIDENT DOES NOT SAY INTERVENTION NECESSARY FOR OUR SAFETY

Therefore it was impossible for such a division to be successful. But the United Nations has ordered the North Koreans to withdraw to that parallel. Our President does not say whether the area south of the parallel is important to our ultimate safety or not. He does not say that the area north of the parallel 38 in Korea is not necessary to be protected for our own ultimate safety. He said nothing about that. He has called upon the American people to support the United Nations in whatever they say, and I think it has been made plain many times that there are Communist sympathizers at the head of that organization, including Mr. Lie himself.

UNITED NATIONS DIVIDED

Mr. President, we go further in the President's statement. He says in this statement, which is well written:

> I know that all members of the United Nations will consider carefully the consequences of this latest aggression in Korea in defiance of the Charter of the United Nations.

Mr. President, he thinks all nations are going to do that, when as a matter of fact, the State Department, the Department of National Defense, and the executive branch of the Government are continually maintaining that one member of the United Nations—Russia—is supporting this insurrection and those trying to capture the entire Korea south of the thirty-eighth parallel. The President continues:

> A return to the rule of force in international affairs would have far-reaching effects. The United States will continue to uphold the rule of law.

WILL COOPERATE WITH DEFINITE FOREIGN POLICY

Mr. President, to make definitely and doubly clear, the junior Senator from Nevada is not objecting to sending material and assistance into Korea if first the executive department of our Government in accordance with the Constitution of the United States will fix a foreign policy and say what areas are important to be protected at this time for our ultimate safety. That has never been done, Mr. President, and I called attention to that fact in March 1948, standing upon this floor, again in March 1949, again in September 1949, and again on January 24, 1950, and almost on every other occasion when the question was being debated upon this floor.

AMERICAN PEOPLE SHOULD WAKE UP TO THE STUPID PROGRAM

Our administration, our State Department, had made many stupid blunders. This body, in backing up the State Department in these matters, has acted just as stupidly. The administration was warned of this crisis and did nothing, Mr. President. If we squeak through this crisis without another world war, it should awaken the American people to the total ineptitude of our State Department.

Mr. President, let us clear the atmosphere. Let us face the facts. Let us tell the American people the truth. This Government should decide what areas are important to our ultimate safety and integrity, and then prepare to defend those areas.

WE SHOULD JUDGE AREAS IMPORTANT TO OUR SAFETY

We should be the judge of what areas are important to us, and no other nation should be the judge. Yet we are faced by the head of a great intelligence department who said, "We knew for a year this invasion was coming. We just could not time it to the minute or to the hour, so we made no preparation whatever, no preparation to defend against the attack"—and no decision as to whether or not the area was important to our ultimate safety.

Apparently no decision has been made up to this minute as to what areas in Korea, as to what areas in China, as to what areas any place on earth we must protect at this moment for our ultimate safety.

NO AREAS NAMED—A SHOTGUN ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STENNIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. MALONE. I yield.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am sure my good friend from Nevada has read the statement which the President issued this noon.

Mr. MALONE. I have read it three times.

Mr. DOUGLAS. From it it is apparent that we will defend Formosa, that we will defend Indochina, and that we will defend the Philippines. In other words, all points in danger will be defended by the United States.

Mr. MALONE. Is that a question?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Yes. Is that not true?

Mr. MALONE. That is true. It is another shotgun announcement—no complete areas or nations included. It is simply a random statement. It does not say that China itself is important to our safety. It does not say that Formosa is important to our safety. It does not say what parts of Asia are important to our ultimate safety. It is simply another shotgun opinion.

THE MONROE DOCTRINE

Why do we not take the time—we have had 5 years of time—to determine the areas in Asia, the areas in Europe, the areas in Africa, every one of the areas in the world that are important to our ultimate safety, just as we determined 127 years ago that the Western Hemisphere was important to us to protect for our ultimate safety when Mr. Monroe, who was President at that time, said that we would protect the Western Hemisphere because it was necessary for our ultimate safety? He said that any government that seeks to extend its system of government into that area—I state the sense of the language—would be guilty of an overt act against the United States of America, and every nation in the world knew and every citizen of America knew that we would fight to protect that area. It was a warning—the world was on notice.

What do we know about this shotgun opinion? Aside from Indochina, it does not say anything about the Malayan States. It says nothing about Indonesia. It says nothing about any other area other than those contained in the shotgun opinion of today—and it does not say that it is important to our safety.

STUPID TO SIGN PACTS

Why are we protecting South Korea? Because the United Nations says we must. The President does not say it is necessary for us to do so in order to protect our ultimate safety. I make that statement simply to clear the record.

Mr. President, while that question has been brought up let me say that in the opinion of the junior Senator from Nevada it is a stupid procedure to sign specific pacts, such as the Atlantic Pact. Of course, the Senator from Nevada explained that in some detail when the Atlantic Pact was under debate. To sign specific pacts is a stupid procedure because all of history shows that no foreign nation has ever kept a treaty or an agreement when an emergency arose and when it was not to its best interest to maintain the treaty. All history shows that regardless of whether there is an agreement or not, wherever the interests of foreign nations lie they will go.

The reason why it is stupid, in my opinion, to sign these pacts, so that some other nation can say that it has been attacked, and that we must, under the pact, help resist the attack, although the attack may be on an area which is outside the area which we currently regard as essential to our own safety, is because the offensive and defensive weapons change so rapidly over the years.

OFFENSIVE-DEFENSIVE WEAPONS CHANGE

A certain weapon or weapons will be dominant for a while, and later a defense will be found for it. Such weapons have continued to change over the years, and they are undergoing great changes at this moment. To say what the policy will be in regard to ability to defend the Western Hemisphere or areas at a certain distance around the Western Hemisphere—or at a lesser distance, that would be the case at this moment—and to say that we would not change our decision as to the area if the situation changed, to my mind is foolish and stupid business.

We cannot hold the world status quo—we cannot prevent the normal expansion changes over the generations ahead over the whole world—but we can determine the areas which we must protect for our own ultimate safety and integrity and deal with the problem in an honest and straightforward manner—and quit sparring with the nations of the world and above all quit fooling our own people.

CONGRESS CANNOT DETERMINE FOREIGN POLICY

Congress cannot determine policy. Congress can only debate the foreign policy determined by the executive department. If a treaty is submitted to the Senate, the Senate can debate it; the Senate can adopt or reject it; or the Congress can declare war or can refuse to declare war. Of course it may be, as was true in the last two wars, that very little will be left to be done toward declaring war by the Congress when the matter is finally submitted to Congress. The Executive may have moved so far ahead that the question of actually declaring war becomes academic because we would actually be in war when the issue reaches the Senate floor. However, Congress cannot decide on foreign policy in any case. The Constitution of the United States leaves determinations of foreign policy to the President. It charges the executive branch of the Government with that definite responsibility; just as the Constitution originally charged the Congress with the responsibility of regulating foreign trade—regulating the national economy through the regulation of imports, but in 1934 the Congress, just as stupidly, transferred that authority to the executive branch of the Government through the 1934 Trade Agreements Act.

SHOOTING AT A HAT

Mr. President, while we were hauling coal into Berlin at a cost of several hundred dollars a ton and were patting ourselves on the backs at the great job we were doing there, the Communist enemy was taking over China. We were shooting at a hat while the real objective escaped us. Korea is not the entire picture.

Let the executive branch decide now what areas are important to our own safety and security. That is the important point. We remember that while all eyes in America were focused on Berlin and on the great job we were doing in hauling coal by airplane into Berlin—at a cost of several hundred dollars a ton—and at a time when there was no traffic on the rivers in that area or on the railroads, or on the highways, due to the presence of a few Russians armed with rifles and bayonets, at that very time the Communists were laying the foundations for taking over China.

MAYBE WE ARE AGAIN SHOOTING AT A HAT

Mr. President, is it not possible that the Communists are just as smart now as they were then? The mark of a great general is his ability to get the eyes of the enemy focused on something other than what he is going to do. I wonder whether it is possible that now, with our eyes focused on Korea—although for a year we knew that the Communists were going to move there, according to the head of our Secret Service, and still no decision was made as to whether that area was important to the American people—the Russians are planning to move into other areas.

Now the decision is made on our part to hold South Korea. Why should we hold only that area, Mr. President? Is not North Korea important to us, also?

However, Mr. President, while all eyes are focused on Korea, there is a little spot called Iran, Irak, and Saudi Arabia next to Russia, which we should consider. It was my privilege to visit that area of the world in 1947, and I believe that while I was in that area and in adjacent areas I saw practically every oil well in the Middle East. It just could possibly be that the Communists are now getting ready for a little push there to get the oil which they really want.

I cannot imagine that South Korea is important enough to the Kremlin to start a war now—before they are ready.

ARMS TO EUROPE—ATLANTIC PACT

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MALONE. I am glad to yield.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Is not the present order of business the bill for the supplying of arms to Europe?

Mr. MALONE. Yes; and in my opinion there was never a more stupid thing. No opinion has ever been expressed by an authority that we can arm the European area under $50,000,000,000 to $100,000,000,000 and 10 to 15 years' time so it could offer decent opposition to Russia. The cost of arming the North Atlantic Pact nations would be so far above the amount carried by the little bill before us, by which it is hoped to supply small quantities of arms that no good effect can come from it. Furthermore, as was said a few minutes ago, we have yet to decide what areas in that part of the world are important to us. Mr. President, if we have to protect other areas, for our own ultimate safety, I think we had better start naming those areas and quit fooling the American people and the nations of the world.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I merely wish to point out—in view of the Senator's observation that all eyes are turned to Korea—that, after all, the Senate is now in the process, at least, of putting its energies toward sections of the world other than Korea. It seems to me that if we enact this measure, we shall be doing something in regard to the situation about which the Senator from Nevada is complaining.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, I would say to the distinguished senior Senator from Washington that if he considers he is going to take care of the situation by having the Congress appropriate a billion and one-half dollars, he is not only greatly mistaken, but is, in the opinion of the junior Senator from Nevada, doing great harm by giving our people a false sense of security for one thing, and for another committing ourselves to a pact which calls for war on our part whenever one of the pact members gets into trouble—without regard as to whether our own safety is threatened.

After all, the present arrangement is that when one nation is attacked, that nation will be the judge of whether we shall go to war. We ourselves will not be the judge of that matter. As I said yesterday, it amounts to having a man reach for his gun—in this case, reaching to almost every place in the world—but failing to be ready to use the gun. Mr. President, the tradition of the old West was that men did not reach for guns unless they were ready and determined to use them. The further we go with these stupid pacts, which require us to defend some areas and nations whose defense may not be necessary to our own safety, or pacts which may require us to go to war if some of these nations are involved the greater our difficulties will become.

POLICY MUST BE DETERMINED

The sooner we determine definitely what our foreign policy really is the better we will stand among the nations of the world, and certainly the little measure now before us, which is just fooling the public, will not do the job.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MALONE. I am glad to yield again.

THE PRESIDENT'S VETO

Mr. MAGNUSON. Unfortunately I did not hear all the Senator's speech, but I should like to ask him if he finds fault with the action the President has taken today.

Mr. MALONE. I say to the Senator that I have just explained that there is no foreign policy determined by his statement today. In other words, the President has not said in his message what is important in Asia or in the Pacific to the ultimate security of the United States. The President merely says that because the United Nations has made a statement, we shall back up that statement.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Does the Senator object to backing up the United Nations?

Mr. MALONE. I object to backing up anyone until we make our own decision as to where our interest in those areas lies, because the only nation which can cause trouble is not even sitting with the United Nations—a fact which the Senator from Washington should know by now.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I know that, but I wanted to understand the position of the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. MALONE. That is my view.

Mr. MAGNUSON. First I should like to inquire whether the Senator objects to the President's statement; second, whether the Senator objects to having us back up the United Nations.

Mr. MALONE. I certainly object to backing up the United Nations without determining whether or not our ultimate safety is involved since only about half the area of the world is interested in keeping the peace. The only nation in the world which could cause us any trouble is not operating with us in the United Nations.

However, we take the order from the United Nations, without ourselves having made any investigation, without having made any determination that this move which could result in war is important to our own ultimate safety.

Mr. President, I read in the newspaper—yesterday, I think, although it may have been earlier than yesterday—a statement to the effect that the United Nations hastily met, passed the resolution to stop this war, put it on the radio, and then retired to the lounge, cocktail I suppose, to await the results. It sounded about like the usual action of the United Nations.

Mr. President, I return to the security question. I have discussed this problem before, and I think my position is very well known. It is that we had better know what we intend to do before we move in. We did not do that when we started to haul the coal in airplanes, while we allowed China to be taken. Let us not repeat that action in the matter of the Middle East oil wells. If it is not important, let us say so. Let us determine which of these areas are important to our ultimate safety.

STATEMENT IN 1948—SENATE

Early in March 1948, the junior Senator from Nevada stood on the floor of the Senate for 3 or 4 hours, and at that time he said:

It is impossible to determine any policy, particularly any foreign policy, to say nothing of a bipartisan policy, until we know what the foreign policy is going to be.

I stated at that time that as a prerequisite for any action, we should determine the nations whose national integrity is important to our ultimate safety, that nothing could be accomplished until that were done. The American people have never been told that the protection of these oil areas of Iran, Iraq, and Saudi Arabia are important to our ultimate safety. It has been debated on the floor of the Senate, but the President of the United States, Mr. President, makes the foreign policy and he has never said that the area must be protected. Until the President fixes the foreign policy and says what is important to us, we can only debate. And, since we transferred our constitutional authority to regulate foreign trade to the executive branch—about all we have left is either to approve or adjust the appropriation bills which the President may send to the Congress. That is about the extent of the authority of the Congress of the United States at this time.

RUSSIA SUCCESSFUL IN DIVERTING ATTENTION

Russia may even now be diverting our attention to Asia while she is preparing to move in on certain of the oil areas of Iraq, Iran, and Saudi Arabia.

The test of a great general is whether he can divert the enemy's attention from his real objective. Russia has been extraordinarily successful in diverting the attention of our State Department from her real objectives.

THE 1948 DEBATES—FOREIGN POLICY

Mr. President, 2 years ago I stood on the floor of the Senate and warned of the approach of this crisis. I should like to read a few sentences from my statement at that time. The March 4 and 5 debate was so prolonged that on March 8, the junior Senator from Nevada collected certain recommendations that had been made during the debate for continuity in the RECORD. Under the title "Peace and Safety of the United States," on March 8, 1948, the junior Senator from Nevada said:

1. The peace and safety of this Nation is seriously threatened, through the complete absence of a definite foreign policy, telling our own people and the nations of the world what we consider will threaten our ultimate peace and safety, and the complete absence of a military organization spearheaded by an air corps to enforce our pronouncement.

2. The basic subject of foreign policy has never been discussed with the American people, through two world wars, and now the Marshall plan is in the same category. The basic subject at issue (as it was in 1823 when the Monroe Doctrine was established to protect South America and the Western Hemisphere from encroachment from the European empire-minded nations) is what areas—and naming the nations in the European and Middle East countries, including Asia and the South Seas—is it necessary for us to currently protect for our own ultimate safety? Until this decision is made no plan to make it effective can be intelligently discussed.

I challenge the State Department to name the nations of the 59 member countries of the United Nations Organization, whose integrity we must currently protect for our own ultimate safety, to tell the world and the American people the truth, so that any empire-minded nations may be apprised of our intentions and thus avoid what could well develop into a third devastating world war, and that our own people may prepare for their own defense, through rebuilding our military organization spearheaded by an air corps that could keep any other nation on the ground in the event of war.

Mr. President, what did that mean? It meant that if we had named these nations and had said, "Let us support the Monroe Doctrine over these areas that we say are important for our ultimate safety," and had warned every nation in the world, not mentioning one—and why mention one, when there are others who would like to control us? Had we done that, what would have been the result? Should we not say, as President Monroe said 127 years ago, that any nation which seeks to extend its form of government into those areas will be considered as committing an overt act against the United States of America, and then follow it up and make good our declaration by building an air corps, an army, a national defense organization that would bear silent evidence of our ability to enforce the pronouncement?

Mr. President, what might have happened had Russia known that we would go to war and were prepared to do so if she invaded Korea? In my opinion, Russia would not have invaded Korea. It is further my opinion that if we were to definitely say it today, she would not continue, but would turn back.

STOPPING AID TO NATIONS ASSISTING COMMUNIST AREAS

On January 24 of this year the junior Senator from Nevada introduced a joint resolution which would stop assistance from us to nations assisting the Communist Nations to arm. At that time I made a statement, from which I shall quote but one paragraph:

Today I intend to show, first, Mr. President, that we have no definite foreign policy; second, that we are aiding Russia to consolidate her gains in eastern Europe and in Communist China; third, that we are assisting Russia to arm for a third world war; and fourth, that the Secretary of State should make up his mind, relative to our foreign policy, as to whether the Russian Communists are dangerous to us; and, if so, that we should stop all aid to nations which are assisting Russia—the iron-curtain countries—China, or any Communist area; and that we should form our own policy, and not be pushed into it by other nations with whom we are dealing.

What did that mean? What did the junior Senator from Nevada mean by that statement? It meant that we were repeating the mistakes we made with Japan prior to World War II. The junior Senator from Nevada formerly maintained a branch office in San Francisco, from which he could look out over the Bay, in 1937, 1938, and 1939. What was happening? One could see boatloads of scrap steel and boatloads of petroleum going to Japan. Every veteran's organization in the United States of America raised a violent protest. What good did their protests do? We kept trading with Japan as usual. We kept sending them the materials they needed in order to be able to make war upon us.

ARMING RUSSIA FOR WORLD WAR III

Mr. President, I want to say this much for our Government. We learn, and we certainly improve. This time we not only are furnishing them everything they need to fight world war III, but to consolidate their gains in eastern Europe and in China. We have learned in 1938, 1939, and 1940, that the Japanese bought oil and scrap iron and paid someone for it. They had to manufacture the guns and the munitions which they were going to shoot back at us in World War II. But now we are away beyond that. What we now do is to have the Marshall plan and the ECA furnish everything needed, not only to reestablish their industry, but we have raised their industrial index up to approximately 125 to 130, based on the 1937–38 industrial index so that the same nations which are receiving huge sums of money, everything they need from us, including the money to make up their trade-balance deficits, are shipping the processed and manufactured goods to Russia and the iron-curtain countries.

They have 96 trade treaties with the iron-curtain countries and with Russia, and they are manufacturing the material for them, so it is much handier for them. They are receiving ball bearings, tool steel, electrical equipment, locomotives, heavy farm machinery, and heavy road machinery. As a matter of fact, hundreds of products which they could get nowhere else Russia and the iron-curtain countries are securing from the 16 Marshall-plan countries, and, Mr. President, to add insult to injury, our greatest ally, England, recognized Communist China, so they can speed up their trade by sending through China anything which Russia and Communist China needs.

COMMUNIST CHINA HELPING FIGHT SOUTH KOREA

I would venture the guess that what they are getting in Korea is some of the same material shipped through eastern Europe which England is shipping through to Communist China, and no doubt a part of it is coming through Korea. That would not be a bad guess, we will find, if we will take the trouble to look at the map.

We have improved a great deal, because those nations do not now have to go through the throes of manufacturing all the stuff they need; all they have to do is wait for it to come to them from our allies.

Mr. President, in the New York Sunday Mirror of June 25, 1950, I find a very good article by Dr. Ruth Alexander, entitled "Our America." I want to read a part of that article. It is a very good one. It reads, in part, as follows:

I'm tired of those silly words: "We won the war but we lost the peace." Aren't you? We lost the war and we might as well face it. We lost it to an "ally"—not to our enemy of the moment. But we lost it nevertheless. We are not goose stepping to Hitler. But we are goose pimpling with fear of Stalin every time he blows his hot breath down our neck by some new victory in this ill-named cold war.

With that I agree, Mr. President. We say we are fighting a cold war. We have sold America on the cold war. Let us analyze it for a moment. We say we will not sell Russia anything it can use to consolidate its gains or to fight world war III, but we sell everything necessary to 16 of our hoped-for allies, and they sell everything to Communist Russia which she needs to fight us and to consolidate her gains in eastern Europe and in China. If that is a cold war, Mr. President, I am simply in the wrong pew.

Dr. Ruth Alexander goes on to say:

What's cold about it—when shots still ring round the world at Stalin's command?

The only cold thing about it is the cold calculation of Communists, their "liberal" friends and their political proteges in the United States of America. They would sell us down the river in no time flat. Make no mistake about that.

As of the moment, their activities are confined to insidious methods of destruction. Capitalism has proved hardy and its collapse has not taken place on schedule. So what do they do—with their devilish oriental patience?

Slowly but surely, their gang here is broadening the base of our inflationary spiral, by pyramiding our debt to astronomical figures. Slowly but surely, their gang is debauching our monetary system by deficit financing and prodigal spending.

Stalin waits like a vulture for a possible recession when he could capitalize on the corpse of capitalism—and freedom.

THE FATE OF THE WORKINGMEN AND INVESTORS

Mr. President, every move we have made for the past 15 years has helped to build up a resistance to the investments of venture capital. We started it in 1934 when we passed an act which gave over to the State Department the right to lower tariffs approximately a total of 75 percent, and by that act we put into the hands of an industrially inexperienced academic Department the fate of every workingman and investor in the United States of America. We placed in the hands of the Secretary of State the right to say what industries shall survive and what shall be sacrificed on the altar of "One Economic World." That tended to stop venture capital going into business. Try to get some new capital in the textile business, the mining business, the lumber business, the precision-instrument business, the watch business, the glass business, with Europe sending in glass and the boys in Ohio and Illinois becoming unemployed as a result. Try to put some new capital into those businesses and see how far you get.

Every time we pass such legislation it fastens its vise-like grip upon venture capital a little tighter. Today, with the basic tax structure as it is, if anyone invests venture capital in any business and makes a few dollars, Uncle Sam takes the money; if he loses it, it belongs to him.

The Securities and Exchange Commission, with its engineers, mostly without experience, with its technicians who have no practical experience in business, says that before securities are sold, whether they relate to the mining business, or some other business, that Commission must decide that it will be a feasible business.

I have stated before on the Senate floor, Mr. President, that I had an opportunity, when I was chairman of the Economic Subcommittee of the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee, to ask a few of those engineers of whom I had never heard in the engineering business, although I had been in that business for 30 years, I said, "If you can look on the top of the ground and tell whether a vein of ore will widen out and get richer or pinch out and get leaner, I can make you some money, because no other engineer I have ever seen can do that."

Mr. President, Dr. Ruth Alexander goes on to say:

Why do we play ball with this outfit? Why do we go on shadow boxing with the United Nations? What is the sinister purpose of those who claim it is better that we sit than that we part? Do you want to sit at the table with your executioner? Would you ask him to your home? And the site of the United Nations is your home—thanks in part to Alger Hiss.

The latest travesty on decency is our idiotic assent to let the Chinese in if only the Russians will come back. Of course they will come back—when they get their way. Another crisis and they take another walk. Another "promise" and another default—for any resemblance between Russian promise and the truth is purely accidental.

Continuing with Dr. Alexander:

This latest shame proves them the victors and we the vanquished. Words have trapped us once again.

Mr. President, we have not yet heard of the withdrawal of the Communists from South Korea in obeyance to the order from the United Nations. Does anyone actually think the Communists there will obey any such order? How safe do my colleagues feel in the hands of the officials of the United Nations or its so-called Security Council? Is Trygve Lie our friend, or does he have Communistic sympathies? In a crisis between Communists and anti-Communists just where do you think his sympathies would lie? We might as well quit fooling ourselves—Russia recommended him in the beginning.

PRESENT LEADERSHIP—UNITED NATIONS—VALUELESS

The United Nations under its present leadership will do nothing for us. We must do it ourselves if it is to be done. If we are protected from aggression, it will be the patriotic people in the industry of the United States which will protect us. It will be the veterans, the workers, and the farmers who will protect the institutions of this country.

Mr. President, I have before me an editorial entitled "The UN at Stake," published in today's New York Mirror. The opening sentence reads as follows:

If Soviet Russia can conquer the whole of Korea and establish a new country, Soviet Korea, then the United Nations has totally lost its value and should be abolished.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the editorial be inserted in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE UN AT STAKE

If Soviet Russia can conquer the whole of Korea and establish a new country, Soviet Korea, then the United Nations has totally lost its value and should be abolished.

For the conquest of Korea cannot be regarded as a revolutionary act of oppressed masses against an oppressive government. There is no oppressive government. There is no national united state in Korea yet. Only the beginnings of government exist in southern Korea.

What has happened is that by the Moscow agreement of 1945, that country is being jointly held in tutelage with the objective of establishing a democratic government with the aid and sanction of the conquering countries in the war with Japan. Korea was part of Japan during the war and had been since 1910.

As that worked out, Soviet Russia managed the affairs of Korea north of the thirty-eighth parallel, whereas the United States sought to work out a free government in Korea south of that line.

We now know that whereas our management has been on a peacetime basis, northern Korea was turned into a military base by Soviet Russia, with a trained air and tank force on the most modern basis.

The United Nations exists precisely to prevent any member government from establishing such a base in such a country as Korea.

The United Nations exists to prevent wars, to mediate wars, to localize wars, and to order sanctions, if any nation makes war.

That is the business of the United Nations.

If it fails in this instance, it will never have another chance.

Certainly, American public opinion will find no further justification for our huge expenditures to maintain that body and its vast number of commissions, committees, and bureaucrats, if it cannot perform its most primary function of ordering sanctions against a warmaker.

It is being reported that the British do not want to vote sanctions. If that is so, we shall know all we need to know about the British.

We shall know that they have been willing to accept our aid in lives and treasure in two wars, and in all the years in between, and even now—but that when we face a struggle for our dignity as a nation and for peace and the rights of people to choose their own governments, they, the British, desert us.

This will come as no surprise to those who have watched their effort to have Soviet China seated in the United Nations and their opposition to the Franco-German coal and steel pool. They tipped their hand in that.

So, if we have to face nothing but enemies and neutrals in the United Nations, then let us cut our losses and conduct our own foreign policy henceforth, without constant compromises to fit British tastes or Russian tastes or anybody else's tastes.

Let's get going on our own. We had done well that way for about 170 years of our existence. Why continue the nonsense of the past 5 years?

IF THE EXECUTIVE SHOULD DECIDE

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, if the executive department decides that the integrity of Korea is important to our ultimate safety, let us now send jet planes, fighter planes, bombs, munitions, and men to protect Korea and fight back the aggressor. Let us be strong and use strong means.

I firmly believe that in the face of strength the Communists there would turn back. As a matter of fact, I have no doubt about that, anymore than I had doubt that the Russians would turn back in Berlin, at the time when we decided to haul coal to Berlin at a cost of several hundred dollars a ton, with sentries standing on the vacant road laughing up at us, provided we had had the guts to go through.

Mr. President, if we back up now after making the play, if we are not sure that this area in the Pacific is important to us, the party is about over. The last of our prestige will be gone with our false starts and indecision.

Let us make no Pacific Pact. It would be as worthless as the Atlantic Pact will be when it comes to the test. No one believes that France of the Atlantic Pact is ever going to fight another war for anyone. They will be neutral. A great number of the other countries have always been neutral, among them several countries upon whom we are depending and which we are now arming. There is a great deal of evidence to prove—and I shall not go into it at this time—that no nation in Europe will be with us the next time. I will say briefly why.

TRADE INTERESTS OF EUROPE NOT WITH US

The best interests of Europe in world trade do not lie in the United States of America. We are processors. We are the most highly developed processors and manufacturers in the world today. Old Europe is next. Every nation has a specialty. For us to say that an affinity exists in trade between the 16 European nations of Europe which we now have on our payroll and the United States is just as stupid as the rest of the stupid program.

In other words, for us to force trade, or for us to buy products from Europe of which we have too much, or vice versa, is like having two barbers in the same block who are trying to make a living by shaving each other.

The trade future of the nations of Europe lies in the eastern countries, in Russia, and in South America.

Ours lies in South America and in Asia. Let us face the facts on the economic ground, too, when we try to predict who is going to be our friend in an emergency. History proves that when the test comes any nation, which has the power to do so, goes wherever it is to its best interest to go, irrespective of pacts.

For thousands of years, for the last 50 years, with which we are most familiar, and for the last 30 years, which ought to be fresh in our minds, we have watched these pacts broken left and right. Those pacts were drawn simply as a front. What has become of them all?

PACTS BETWEEN FRANCE, ENGLAND, AND RUSSIA

What has become of the pact between France and Russia, and of the pact between England and Russia? They are still in good standing. They are surprisingly alike, and they are both similar to the pact which both of these countries have made with us, if you please—the Atlantic Pact.

I am making this point now because, if I know our weak-kneed State Department—and I think I do—we are going to be given some kind of sweet music about our State Department's great achievement in making a pact.

Our enemy goes wherever she wants to go and whenever it suits her. Our State Department says, "O. K. you keep what you have stolen, but please sign this nice little pact saying you will go no further."

Would to God we had a State Department of strong men now at the time we need strong men. And when we can, let us clean house down there.

Then let us clean up our own backyard, including the United Nations. A good old-fashioned spring house cleaning would do much good to both of these pieces of machinery.

INVESTIGATION OF LOANING POLICIES OF THE EXPORT-IMPORT BANK

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I believe there is some misunderstanding. I have just been advised that a point of no quorum was made for the purpose of permitting the junior Senator from Oregon to present a resolution. I ordinarily would object to abandoning a quorum call, but I certainly do not want a quorum called to enable Senators to hear the junior Senator from Oregon. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded and that further proceedings under the call be vacated.

Mr. MURRAY. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the order for the calling of the quorum is rescinded, and further proceedings under the call are suspended.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I rise to offer and very briefly explain a resolution which I now offer. The resolution reads as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete investigation of the loan policy pursued by the Export-Import Bank of Washington and the loans made by such bank, with special emphasis on the loan policy pursued by such bank with respect to, and the loans made by such bank to, the countries of Argentina, Brazil, and Mexico, and private borrowers in such countries.

Sec. 2. The committee shall report its findings, together with such recommendations as it may deem advisable, to the Senate at the earliest practicable date, but not later than January 31, 1951.

Mr. President, I send the resolution to the desk for appropriate reference, and ask that it be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution (S. Res. 304) will be received, out of order, printed, and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, the resolution I am offering I consider particularly apropos at this time, because I understand the terms of office of the members of the Export-Import Bank are about to expire, and there have been pending before the Committee on Banking and Currency the nominations of the members of the Export-Import Bank. I understand the nominations were reported favorably earlier today by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK]. I wish to serve notice that the junior Senator from Oregon will oppose those nominations, if action is pressed upon them, until he is satisfied that the loaning policies of the Export-Import Bank can stand full public disclosure following an investigation by an appropriate committee of the Senate. He fully expects that at future dates he probably will speak somewhat at length in regard to the policies of the Export-Import Bank, if—and he underlines the word "if"—certain information which has been supplied the junior Senator from Oregon stands up factually after the junior Senator from Oregon completes his personal investigation of certain allegations concerning the loaning policies of the Export-Import Bank. He thinks that in fairness to the Bank, and in fairness to himself, an appropriate committee of the Senate should proceed at once with an investigation of the loaning policies of the Export-Import Bank.

The junior Senator from Oregon intends in this matter, as he tries to in all other matters, to be exceedingly fair, and to reach his final conclusions concerning the policies of the Export-Import Bank on the basis of what the evidence shows those policies to be after a thorough and fair hearing. He wishes to say, however, that certain correspondence he has had with the chairman of the Export-Import Bank in regard to the loan the bank made to the Government of Argentina is completely unsatisfactory.

The junior Senator from Oregon wants to know whether it is true that the Export-Import Bank does not follow any consistent policy in regard to making loans to foreign countries. He wants further to know, on the basis of the resolution he has offered for purposes of investigating the policies of the Export-Import Bank before any confirmation is asked of the nominations of any of the present members of the Bank on the part of the Senate, whether or not it is true that the Export-Import Bank follows one policy in making loans to Argentina, but an entirely different policy when it comes to making loans to Mexico and other Latin American countries.

Mr. President, the junior Senator from Oregon wants to know whether the members of the Export-Import Bank hold to the point of view which it is alleged they hold to, that it is perfectly all right to make loans to Argentina which certainly, in the recent past, has not been noted for democratic processes, in order to bail out certain American creditors, and all right to deny loans to Mexico, particularly loans to which at least the President of the United States seems to have given his sympathetic approval in times past. He wants to know if it is sound to deny a loan to Mexico on the ground that in Mexico the bank might be confronted with some project that is involved in a state economy program, but grant a loan to Argentina which comes very close to being totalitarian.

The junior Senator from Oregon would like to know what the relationship is between the State Department and the Export-Import Bank behind the scenes. He is not particularly concerned about the window dressing relationships between the State Department and the Export-Import Bank. But he is interested in finding out to what extent the State Department and the Export-Import Bank maintain a very interesting shuttle arrangement alibiing one for the other, whereby the State Department says, "Oh, well, we are for this loan, but the Export-Import Bank is against it," and to what extent on other occasions the Export-Import Bank says, "Oh, we are for it, but the State Department is against it."

Mr. President, in the world crisis in which we live this hour, I think we are dealing with a subject matter of such importance that it behooves the Senate of the United States, which has a tremendous responsibility in the field of international relations, to find out what the policies of the Export-Import Bank are in respect to international loans. It is a truism that the international economic policies of a nation have very direct influences upon its relationships to other countries of the world and can very well have a very direct relationship to the whole question of peace.

I am somewhat disturbed, Mr. President, by certain allegations which I do not certify as being true, but which come from sources which in my judgment deserve the most careful investigation by the Senate committee. They are to the effect that certain powerful economic forces in America, in respect to certain subject matters for loans, seem to be able to exercise great influence in determining whether or not loans shall or shall not be granted by the State Department and by the Export-Import Bank. I have been advised, and I want to find out if the facts support the allegation, that there are those on the Export-Import Bank who take the position that the bank simply cannot make a loan to a country involving a subject matter that in turn involves the operation of a state economy or the socialization of some industry within that state. Yet the bank was not the least bit squeamish about making a loan to Argentina, which, I say, by way of understatement, cannot be classified today as a country characterized by very much democracy.

I point out that the United States is judged around the world by the actions it takes internationally in support of some of the most reactionary forces in the world today. In the fight for freedom, in the great fight to preserve the democratic way of life around the world, it is important that the Senate look into the various departments on the executive side of this Government and apply itself to finding out what their international policies are in carrying out their administrative responsibilies and powers in respect to international relations.

Before we confirm a single nominee to the Export-Import Bank I think it important to find out what are the international policies of the members of that bank. I want to know a great deal more about the Argentine loan, Mr. President, than the Chairman of the Export-Import Bank told me in reply to a letter which I addressed to him recently in which I set forth specific questions for his answers. His lack of information was surprising. That and his apparent inability to answer some of the specific questions I laid down in my letter, raise serious doubts in my mind as to his competency to continue as Chairman of the Export-Import Bank.

I do not want to do him any injustice. I am perfectly willing to have him make his case for himself. But I want to tell the Senate that surrounding the Argentine loan there are numerous odors which are not particularly pleasant to the nostrils of people who believe that we ought to be strengthening the hand of democratic processes in Latin America.

The speed with which the Argentine loan was consummated, Mr. President, was a remarkable feat on the part of the Export-Import Bank. Sometimes one can move too fast. I have a little inkling of a suspicion that the Export-Import Bank moved too fast on the Argentine loan. At least the speed with which it moved was not very helpful to strengthening good will in some other Latin-American countries that have not received the same speedy consideration from the Export-Import Bank and the State Department as Argentina was able to receive.

I am sorry, Mr. President, to have to say this again today, because as one who has supported consistently and without exception the bipartisan foreign policy of this country ever since I came to the Senate, and as one who intends to continue to support the principle and the framework of that whole conception of a bipartisan foreign policy, I feel I owe an especial obligation to the American people when it appears to me that the State Department is guilty either of abusive action or capricious arbitrary action, or is permitting itself to be subjected to certain influences in this country that do not strengthen the hand of America in Latin-America. The junior Senator from Oregon owes an obligation to the American people to stand up on the floor of the Senate and say, as in effect he is saying this afternoon to the State Department, to the Export-Import Bank: "Just a minute! What are the facts? Just a minute! Let us see out here in the open, in the full inspection of the Congress and the people of the United States, just what are your policies in regard to foreign loans?"

I intend to take that stand in this fight on the Export-Import Bank. If what I believe to be true is true, I think we had better review the procedures of the past and put some very effective congressional checks on both the State Department and the Export-Import Bank in their handling of the international economic problems of the United States. I am afraid it is true that both the State Department and the Export-Import Bank are fumbling badly America's relations with Latin America insofar as international economic loans to those countries are concerned.

Mr. President, I wish to say both to the State Department and to the Export-Import Bank officials, that they are in a very strange position, it seems to me, when they say, as some State Department officials have said to me, in effect, "Well, we must not make any loan to any country in connection with any industry that involves a government monopoly or is a socialized industry in that country."

Mr. President, no one in the Senate is more opposed to socialism than I am. No one in the Senate will fight harder against the nationalization of any basic American industry or, for that matter, of any American industry at all than I will, because I happen to be opposed to the socialistic approach to the handling of economic problems. I know very well that the freedom of the individual cannot survive the socialization of the economy of the United States.

However, the State Department does not talk that way when it comes to the Congress and urges support for the ECA. The State Department does not talk that way when it comes to the Congress and urges needed economic support—support which, without exception, I have voted for—for certain countries in Europe. There is no talk then about our not making available money to be used in Europe, when we know very well that the funds provided to some extent are going to be used in and by countries for the economic strengthening of industries which have become socialized in those countries.

I have been heard to say on the floor of the Senate what I repeat this afternoon, namely, that, after all, what we need to look to in international economic relations is whether or not the principle of freedom of choice on the part of the people prevails in the countries to which we are asked to make loans or grants. After all, is not that the test of freedom in the world today? When all is said and done about democratic processes and freedom—words which can be used as clichés or can be used in the true sense of their meaning as embodying the rights and the liberties of every individual—do not those words, when boiled down to their real meaning, mean only freedom of choice at a free ballot box made available to the people of those countries, so they can determine for themselves their own political and economic systems? Is not that the test? Is not that the test which the State Department and the Export-Import Bank should be following?

Certainly I submit that the policy of the State Department in regard to European loans and European grants has been on the basis that we must not intermeddle in the internal economic affairs of Great Britain, for example, or of France or of the Scandinavian countries, in which socialism in varying degrees has existed now for decades, or of little Denmark or of other countries of the low lands. That has been the position of the State Department, and rightly so.

However, I call upon the State Department to apply the same policy consistently in its relations with Latin America. The State Department has not been doing so. In the State Department, again in the lower echelons, we find in this field the same type of arbitrary, capricious action which I spoke against the other day when I referred to the many mistakes of which the State Department has been guilty in the field of trade relations. There is in the State Department a small group of underlings who do not like any opposition from Capitol Hill, a small group of underlings who believe they should sit behind their desks in the State Department and should draw the blueprints for the economic relationships between the United States and Latin America unchecked by the Congress. It was that group which drew the blueprints—acting in collaboration, I may say, or at least in cooperative effort, with the Export-Import Bank—which resulted in the loan to Argentina. Perhaps democratic processes exist in Argentina; perhaps freedom of choice at a free ballot box exists in Argentina; but if so, I think it will be news to the Senate to learn of it.

However, in Latin America there are countries which are making an earnest fight for the preservation of freedom of choice: Mexico, Venezuela, Brazil, Colombia, Chile, and others. I would that I could feel some assurance that the State Department and the Export-Import Bank have the same great concern for and sympathy with the leaders of those countries, who have demonstrated time and time again their willingness to stand shoulder to shoulder with the United States in the fight to make freedom live and endure, not only in Latin America but elsewhere in the world. Yet those countries are greatly concerned and perplexed over the fact that their economic situations and problems in connection with some of their requests have taken so long to get even above the lower echelons of the State Department, whereas the Argentine loan could sail through the State Department and the Export-Import Bank with remarkable speed. That is causing some—and let us face the facts which is all I am asking for by means of this resolution—to raise their eyebrows in doubt in regard to the question of the extent to which certain powerful, selfish economic interests in America exercise undue influence on the State Department and on the Export-Import Bank in connection with the negotiations for those loans.

If Mr. Gaston did not understand my meaning when he read my letter, let me tell him from this desk today what I meant when I asked him some of the questions contained in my letter to him. I want to learn from him, as Chairman of the Export-Import Bank, the extent to which some of the powerful United States corporations with certain economic interests in Latin-America bring strong representations to bear upon the Export-Import Bank in connection with the determination of the loaning policy of that Bank.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I prefer to complete my statement, and then I shall be glad to yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon declines to yield at present.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I happen to be one who believes that the strongest chain of defense and security for freedom in the world must be forged by Canada, the United States, Mexico, and the Latin-American countries to the south of Mexico. I happen to be one who believes that in this Western Hemisphere we must develop a very strong international unity among the nations, and must make perfectly clear that we shall stand together in protecting the principles of freedom and liberty inherent in the great, statesmanlike, and historic document which the President of the United States issued today in respect to the Korean situation. That document deals with a subject matter which I discussed earlier in the afternoon and I shall not now repeat my views on it, except to incorporate by reference everything I said earlier in the afternoon.

However, in the present international situation and the crisis which exists in the world today, let us face the fact that our relations with the countries to the south of us are not so healthy as they should be. The chain to which I have referred is not so strong as it should be forged, Mr. President. Rightly or wrongly, there are leaders of government to the south of us who are entertaining doubts as to the sincerity of purpose of the United States in its international economic relations.

It is impossible to escape the fact that international economics happens to be as directly related to world peace as international politics—yes, Mr. President, I do not think the two can be separated. In fact, a part of the burden of my inquiry here this afternoon is to ascertain to what extent international politics is influencing the policies of international economics of both the State Department and the Export-Import Bank.

Communism is a serious threat at our front door, or at our back door, however one prefers to describe the location of Mexico. There is a great President of Mexico, Miguel Aleman, who in my judgment has made a heroic fight against communism in that country. I think the exchange of visits between President Truman and President Aleman in the not-too-distant past probably did more to strengthen the good-neighbor policy between the United States and Mexico than anything else that has happened within the past 25 years. Let us not lose the advantage, the great gains we have made in bringing the Mexican people to a better understanding of the high international ideals which motivate the American people. Let us make clear to the Mexican people that certain powerful American corporations do not speak for the American people on the question of the economic relations between Mexico and the United States.

Let us also demonstrate to the heads of other countries in South America and to the people of those countries that economic aid from America is not to be conditioned upon and determined by those countries passing particular types of domestic legislation or adopting particular types of economic reforms that certain underlings in the State Department and certain members of the Export-Import Bank appear to want to make conditions precedent to any economic relationships by way of loans or other economic aid to those countries on the part of the United States. At least, Mr. President, let us impose the same conditions precedent upon Argentina before we make loans to her. We did not do that, but, to the contrary, we strengthened the hands of one of the most reactionary governments in the world.

Let the record show that the junior Senator from Oregon will always be found fighting just as much against the totalitarianism of fascism as against the totalitarianism of communism. Both have but one object—the destruction of the individual liberty and freedom of the person. The dignity and the spiritual value of the person cannot survive under either communism or fascism.

We must realize, Mr. President, that there is a danger in America that we may be given to expressing high ideals and fine principles but may not always carry them out in practice when it comes to our international dealings. It is much like the fellow in church on Sunday who is repentant, and who, confronted through the church service with some of the realities of life, at least meditates on his shortcomings during Sunday, or at least during the hour in church; but who then, during the week, in his economic relations with his fellow men does not not let the spiritual values of Christianity motivate his conduct. Rather he backslides again into the sinful gutter of permitting personal selfishness to cause him to do injury to his fellow man. The junior Senator from Oregon insists that, after all, the very essence of democracy, the very essence of freedom, the thing we are trying to cultivate so that it will grow and blossom into full fruition by maintaining and safeguarding the freedom of choice at the free ballot box, both in this country and elsewhere in the world, happens to be the principles of Christianity put into practice. I do not think a permanent and lasting peace is ever going to reign in the world until we reach that point in the development of civilization where all forces, including the economic forces of a country, are willing to subordinate self-interest to the welfare of their fellow men.

I know, Mr. President, that arguing that thesis is subject to the criticism that it is too idealistic. The junior Senator from Oregon has been criticized many times for taking too idealistic an approach to these relations among men and among countries. But it is not at all too idealistic. It happens to be the kind of idealism, it happens to be the kind of economic faith, it happens to be the kind of conviction in the superiority of our American system of both political and economic freedom which needs to permeate to a greater extent, in my judgment, the State Department, today. It needs to be considered in respect to certain loans already granted, and with respect to others, the rejection of which apparently is contemplated by the Export-Import Bank. It happens to be the kind of realism which ought to permeate the Export-Import Bank.

I have said all I intend to say on this subject today, but it is not the last word I intend to speak on it. Mr. President, let this speech be interpreted by the State Department and the Export-Import Bank exactly as I mean it. The junior Senator from Oregon intends to satisfy himself at least as to just what the policies of the State Department and of the Export-Import Bank are in regard to loans to countries to the south of us. He intends to ascertain whether the State Department and the Export-Import Bank have one economic theory applicable to Europe and an entirely different economic theory applicable to the South American countries.

He concludes by issuing the warning that, with the threatening clouds of international strife forming in the skies of the world today, the State Department and the Export-Import Bank had better look to the strength of the United States in the countries south of us, because we are going to need their good will, we are going to need their economic support, we are going to need their cooperation in any contest with communism.

I, for one, Mr. President, do not intend to remain silent while the State Department and the Export-Import Bank, for example, put such a great President as the President of the Mexican Republic in the embarrassing position in which he finds himself. Acting in good faith, he believed that certain definite understandings were formed in regard to economic relationships between the United States and Mexico. Understandings which, to this date, have not been carried out, and, in the opinion of the junior Senator from Oregon, they have not been carried out because certain forces within the State Department have sought to scuttle them, and because the members of the Export-Import Bank have adopted a highly inconsistent policy, as demonstrated by the loan they have made in Argentina but which I understand they are opposed to making on a similar basis to Mexico and to some other South American countries.

ADDRESS OF GOVERNOR DRISCOLL BEFORE NATIONAL CONVENTION OF NATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF COLORED PEOPLE

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, on Friday last, June 23, 1950, Gov. Alfred E. Driscoll, of New Jersey, delivered a very forthright and inspiring address at the national convention of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, at Boston, Mass.

Since the Senate has been assured of another opportunity to consider FEPC, I am sure that a great many of the Members of this body will want to avail themselves of the opportunity to read a great Governor's account of his stewardship on civil rights in the State of New Jersey.

For the convenience of the Senate, I have had excerpts of Governor Driscoll's address prepared, and I ask unanimous consent that they be inserted in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the excerpts of Governor Driscoll's address were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXCERPTS FROM THE ADDRESS OF GOV. ALFRED E. DRISCOLL, OF NEW JERSEY, TO THE NATIONAL CONVENTION OF THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF COLORED PEOPLE, AT BOSTON, MASS., JUNE 23, 1950

I am particularly happy for this opportunity to address the convention of the NAACP because I want to tell you of some of the things we have been doing in New Jersey to build a society which has enlarged the individual rights and opportunities of all persons.

The keystone of our heritage is the importance of the individual. Our country was founded in the belief that all men are created equal—that each of us has a sacred dignity which must be respected and protected by society and by the Government which acts for that society.

All of us, I think, cherish the right to individual freedom. But some of us—indeed, too many of us—look upon our heritage as a one-way proposition. We are willing to receive, but not willing to give. We preach one thing, and practice another—all the while unmindful of the fact that when we claim liberty for ourselves and deny it to others, we are placing our own liberty in jeopardy.

In our long and often discouraging fight to preserve and develop civil rights, one fact stands out clearly. It is this: that every individual who wishes to be secure in these rights himself must be willing to respect, protect, and preserve these same rights for all his fellow citizens.

To give effect to our ideals of freedom and equality for all, there is required more than the mere acceptance of an idea. The Bill of Rights is meaningless without positive, affirmative action to give life to the principles which it sets forth. In the daily life of our community, and in our relations with other countries, we must be willing and able to vigorously apply those principles. If we permit the abuse of fundamental guaranties of individual liberty and of national sovereignty, we invite personal and national aggrandizement. In New Jersey we have been acting while they have been talking in Washington.

In our State we have not been willing to permit these abuses to go unchallenged. We have attacked prejudice and discrimination because of race, color, religious principles of national origin. We have sought to eliminate the cause of prejudice and discrimination, and in so doing we have not only been promoting the common welfare, but have been neutralizing a major portion of the propaganda ammunition directed against us in every corner of the world by Communist Russia. While others have talked, we have acted.

Three years ago New Jersey adopted a new constitution. The bill-of-rights provisions of that document expresses our ideals of individual freedom in a far broader way than ever before in American constitutional history.

But we were not content to rest our case there. We set up a committee on civil liberties which studied every phase of the problem and submitted its findings to the State legislature. Its report—unlike that of the President's Committee on Civil Liberties—was translated into legislation. We now have in New Jersey a fair, effective law against discrimination—and the important thing about it is that it is working. Likewise, our FEPC law works.

Despite all this, there were some who did not take us seriously. The bill of rights of our new State constitution guarantees, among other things, that "No person shall be denied the enjoyment of any civil or military right, nor be discriminated against in the exercise of any civil or military right, nor be segregated in the militia or in the public schools, because of religious principles, race, color, ancestry, or national origin." The Army, for one, did not think we meant what we said. We were told that this provision was not to apply in the postwar reorganization of the National Guard. I responded that we intended to abide by the provisions of our constitution—and that is exactly what we did. Today there is no discrimination in the New Jersey National Guard, and it is a stronger, better force than it was before.

We are continuing to practice what we preach. Just this year the New Jersey Legislature adopted eight laws prohibiting discrimination in housing built with public funds or public assistance. The timeliness of that action is apparent in view of the situation now prevailing in some States.

If we are to have the kind of world that actually will be based on the brotherhood of man, there can be no room for discrimination in any of its forms. Every one of us must strive unremittingly for a world cleansed of bigotry, the oppressions of economic exploitation, false theories of racialism, and the spirit of narrow nationalism.

We are making notable progress in New Jersey. It is our hope that New Jersey's example will soon find its reflection throughout the Nation.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, after the Senate makes disposition of the unfinished business there are a few minor bills on the calendar which we expect to dispose of. However, I do not believe the Senate will be unduly delayed by the consideration of those bills. They are not very controversial, I will say.

There are two measures about which all Senators are concerned, namely, the omnibus appropriation bill, and the tax bill which I understand will be coming to the Senate within the next few days from the House of Representatives.

I see the very able and distinguished Senator from Tennessee, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. McKELLAR], on the floor, and I should like to ask my friend from Tennessee if he can give me any information as to when he believes the so-called one-package appropriation bill will be reported by the Appropriations Committee to the Senate for its study, debate, and consideration.

Mr. McKELLAR. In answer to the Senator's question, I would say that the appropriations subcommittees have marked up 10 of the 12 sections of the one-package bill. On the other two sections hearings have been held, and they will probably be reported to the full committee tomorrow or the next day. So that we are apparently well up on the bill. Just how long it will take to debate a one-package bill on the floor of the Senate no one can say.

Mr. LUCAS. I am not so much interested in the length of time it will require, although I shall be interested in it when the committee finally reports the bill. What I was trying to ascertain for the benefit of myself as well as of other Senators was how long it might be before the committee would be in position to report the appropriation bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am inclined to think the committee will be able to report it certainly within 10 days, or possibly within the next week.

Mr. LUCAS. I certainly hope the Senator is correct. I urge the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee to plead with the members of his committee to move along as rapidly as possible in order to get the bill to the floor, because the Senator well knows that it will take some time to debate it, and it will take perhaps a little more time in conference, in view of the differences between the two Houses.

I thank the Senator for his statement.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. BYRD. I should like to ask with reference to the plans of the distinguished Senator from Illinois to bring up the nomination of Mr. Hutchinson.

Mr. LUCAS. I told the Senator from Virginia a few days ago that I would let him know in due course when we finally agreed to bring up the nomination of Mr. Hutchinson, if it is brought up. I assure the Senator that 48 hours' or 3 days' notice will be given.

Mr. BYRD. When will the decision be made?

Mr. LUCAS. It should be made sometime this week. I think I can definitely say that before the week is over the decision will be made.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the Senator.

ANNOUNCEMENT REGARDING CONSIDERATION OF NOMINATION OF JUDGE RITTER

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, there is on the Executive Calendar the nomination of the Honorable Willis W. Ritter, of Utah, to United States district judge for the district of Utah. I understand that there will be some opposition to the nomination.

I wish to advise the Senate now that some time tomorrow we shall take up the Executive Calendar, if that is agreeable to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. WATKINS. Would it be agreeable to have the nomination taken up on Friday? I do not wish to make a fight on the nomination, but I wish to have sufficient time to make a statement regarding the nomination, and I am preparing the statement now.

Mr. LUCAS. I understand there is some urgency about the nomination, and I hoped we could consider it tomorrow.

Mr. WATKINS. Judge Ritter is now holding an interim appointment.

Mr. LUCAS. I understand.

Mr. WATKINS. So nothing will be lost by postponing the consideration of the nomination until Friday. I should like to have time to prepare a statement on the nomination. I have not yet been able to finish preparing the statement, because I have so many other things to do.

Mr. LUCAS. I certainly do not wish to crowd the Senator from Utah. I had thought we could dispose of the nomination tomorrow. Let us say that we shall dispose of it some time this week, and not later than Friday, if that is agreeable.

Mr. WATKINS. I shall certainly try to accommodate myself to that arrangement and to cooperate regarding it.

AMENDMENT OF MUTUAL DEFENSE ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1949

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3809) to amend the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I am ready to vote.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant journal clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Anderson	Hoey	Maybank
Benton	Holland	Millikin
Bricker	Humphrey	Morse
Bridges	Hunt	Mundt
Butler	Ives	Murray
Byrd	Jenner	Neely
Cain	Johnson, Colo.	O'Mahoney
Capehart	Johnson, Tex.	Robertson
Chapman	Kefauver	Russell
Connally	Kem	Saltonstall
Cordon	Kerr	Schoeppel
Darby	Kilgore	Smith, Maine
Donnell	Knowland	Smith, N. J.
Douglas	Leahy	Sparkman
Ecton	Lehman	Stennis
Ellender	Lodge	Taft
Ferguson	Lucas	Thomas, Utah
Flanders	McCarran	Thye
Frear	McCarthy	Tobey
Fulbright	McClellan	Tydings
Gillette	McFarland	Watkins
Green	McKellar	Wherry
Gurney	McMahon	Wiley
Hayden	Magnuson	Williams
Hendrickson	Malone	Withers
Hickenlooper	Martin

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is present.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I should like to address a question to the majority leader. Earlier in the day the then acting majority leader asked whether an agreement could be reached, by way of unanimous consent in regard to a time for the Senate to vote on this bill. At that time I told him I would do my level best to enable the Senate to reach, at an early date, an agreement in regard to a time to vote on the bill.

I should like to say now that if the majority leader will submit a unanimous-consent request to have the Senate vote on this bill on, let us say, Friday of this week, I believe we can work out such an arrangement among Senators on this side of the aisle.

There are two or three reasons for my suggestion of Friday. One is that several Senators who wish to participate in the vote, prefer that date. Of course, I understand, that we have to try to work out arrangements for all 96 Senators; but what I have just stated is one of the reasons for asking that the vote be had at that particular time. In that connection, I would propose that there be whatever division of the time prior to the vote that may be agreeable to the distinguished Senator from Texas. Any hour—possibly 4 o'clock, or even 3 o'clock—which meets with the approval of the distinguished majority leader, would be acceptable, I think.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I should like to confer with the Senator from Texas, and then make an announcement a little later.

Mr. WHERRY. Very well.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 9, in line 25, it is proposed to strike out the words "the fair value" and insert "the full cost, actual or estimated, of such equipment, material or services."

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, the amendment is offered to line 25, on page 9 of the bill. It is an amendment to the committee amendment which appears on page 41 of the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations and the Committee on Armed Services. The existing law also is set forth there.

To section 403 (d), in addition to providing $1,000,000,000 to European nations members of the Atlantic Pact, and in addition to providing the other special sums to go to certain individual nations, the following is proposed by way of a committee amendment:

Provided, That during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1951, an additional $250,000,000 worth of excess equipment and materials may be so furnished.

That is in addition to the $1,000,000,000.

The present law provides, in that connection:

For the purposes of this subsection, the worth of any excess equipment or materials means either the actual gross cost to the United States of that particular equipment or materials or the estimated cost to the United States of that particular equipment or materials obtained by multiplying the number of units of such particular equipment or materials by the average gross cost of each unit of that equipment or materials owned by the furnishing agency.

In other words, the $250,000,000 worth of excess equipment must be furnished at cost. It cannot be furnished at 10 percent of value, on some finding of the agency that the equipment or material is not worth anything.

Of that principle I entirely approve. What concerns me are the provisions of section 408 (e). By those provisions we authorized, outside the regular program, the United States to sell equipment to various nations, including nations which had no particular relation to the Atlantic Pact; the equipment or material could be sold to any nation. That provision of the law, passed last year, provides as follows:

(e) (1) The President may, from time to time, in the interest of achieving standardization of military equipment and in order to provide procurement assistance without cost to the United States, transfer, or enter into contracts for the procurement for transfer of, equipment, materials, or services to: (A) nations designated in title I, II, or III of this act, or to (B) a nation which has joined with the United States in a collective defense and regional arrangement.

In other words, under this arrangement we could sell to any country in South America, except Argentina; or we could sell, I believe, to practically any nation in the world.

When we passed the law last year, we included the following proviso:

Provided, That, prior to any such transfer or the execution of any such contracts, any such nation shall have made available to the United States the full cost, actual or estimated, of such equipment, materials, or services, and shall have agreed to make available forthwith upon request any additional sums that may become due under such contracts.

Now the committee proposes to amend that provision by adding the following proviso:

Provided, That, prior to the transfer of any equipment, materials, or services to a nation under this clause (C)—

That is, any nation in the world—

it shall provide the United States with assurance that such equipment, materials, or services are required for and will be used solely to maintain its internal security—

And so forth. The committee also proposes the additional amendment:

Provided further, That, in the case of any such transfer, the President shall forthwith notify the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate, the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and of the House of Representatives, and the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives.

The committee proposes that the cost provision be removed.

The committee suggests, in the next subsection, the following:

(2) Whenever equipment or material is transferred from the stocks of, or services are rendered by any agency, to any nation as provided in paragraph (1) above, such nation shall first make available the fair value, as determined by the President, of such equipment, materials, or services.

So, under the amendment, as I see it, the President may fix any value on equipment and services, and may then proceed to sell to South America at 10 percent on the dollar or any other figure he may fix. In other words, what was originally in the last bill, a selling proposition solely, selling at cost, selling at real value, we are turning into a kind of another grant, not merely to European nations but to any nation in the world. To any nation in the world we may sell at what the President determines to be the fair value, and it has been quite common to fix approximately 10 percent of the value as the fair value. I can see no reason for again opening up such a program and providing these arms to South American nations, for instance, at any value he may see fit to fix on them.

I have always been very much opposed to the general policy of furnishing arms to South America, anyway. I cannot see that they are going to be in any sense valuable to us in any war that may occur. It seems to me that they only stimulate revolutions in South America. Arms are provided which are fought for by the different factions, and the faction that can gain control of the arms is apt to control at least certain of the Central and South American Republics.

So, Mr. President, all that my amendment proposes is to restore, in place of the fair value, the words "full cost, actual or estimated, of such equipment, material, or services."

I have tried to study the bill, and there are three or four different estimates of value; but, so far as I can discover, the purpose of this provision in the bill is primarily to permit the sale to South America and to other nations scattered throughout the world, which are not in the Atlantic Pact, in particular any arms and equipment, which may possibly be new arms and equipment, at any value the President sees fit to fix. I do not think that change should be made in the law.

I may be mistaken in my interpretation of the section. I should be glad to have the chairman of the committee consider my amendment, to see what he thinks was the reason for the committee's having felt it necessary to change existing law.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. TAFT. I am glad to yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I may say to the Senator that the amendment he now suggests would practically restore the language that was in the bill a year ago.

Mr. TAFT. The existing law—exactly. That was my purpose.

Mr. CONNALLY. The reason we changed it was that those provisions in the last bill simply did not work. For example, take the case of a ship tied up at the dock for months and months: It deteriorates; it is not so good as it was when we bought it. To require that the purchaser pay the full value, instead of the real value, resulted in the ship not being sold. That is something which applies to all these materials. They may deteriorate. A fair value is much fairer than original cost. Take, for example, the suit of clothes which I have on. It is new. I bought it recently. I do not think I could dispose of it to anyone at the original cost, if I wanted to sell it; certainly not.

So I suggest to the Senator that while I have sympathy for his view in the matter, yet the act as we passed it last year simply did not work. If the Senator will kindly turn to page 39 of the committee report, he will find the definition of the term "value," as follows:

(c) The term "value," as used in subsection (b) of this section, means—

(1) with respect to any excess equipment or materials furnished under this act, the gross cost of repairing, rehabilitating, or modifying such equipment or materials prior to being so furnished;

(2) with respect to any nonexcess equipment or materials furnished under this act which are taken from the mobilization reserve (other than equipment or materials referred to in paragraph (3) of this subsection), the actual or the projected (computed as accurately as practicable) cost of procuring for the mobilization reserve an equal quantity of such equipment or materials or an equivalent quantity of equipment and materials of the same general type but deemed to be more desirable for inclusion in the mobilization reserve than the equipment or materials furnished.

There are two questions of that kind, I may say to the Senator, which arise, and it is very difficult to go back to figure what a particular article cost 2 years ago, and then estimate the cost of repairing it, and so on. For that reason, the language employed last year, which the Senator wants to revive, simply did not work. That is all I can say to the Senator.

Mr. TAFT. Let me read the section which was proposed last year, which was not a section to give away necessary equipment. It was a provision of this kind:

The President may, from time to time, in the interest of achieving standardization of military equipment and in order to provide procurement assistance without cost to the United States, transfer, or enter into contracts for the procurement for transfer of, equipment, materials, or services to:

In other words, it was not a section providing for the giving away of excess equipment. It was a provision simply to assist nations to buy in this country, to give them the specifications and, if they wanted to buy arms, to undertake through the Government, perhaps our Government making the contract, to see that they got the arms. It was not a provision affecting excess equipment.

The distinguished Senator from Texas proposes that we take the definition of "value," found on page 39 of the committee report. Incidentally, that is fair value. But listen to the definition of "value" as applied to excess equipment:

> The term "value," as used in subsection (b) of this section, means—
> (1) with respect to any excess equipment or materials furnished under this act, the gross cost of repairing, rehabilitating, or modifying such equipment or materials prior to being so furnished.

We are not going to get a cent for the equipment and materials. All we are going to do is to charge just enough to recover the cost of repairing them and putting them into good condition.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. As one who last year, did quite a good deal of work with respect to the question of cost, I may say that I think the Senator from Ohio is entirely correct in what he says with respect to new material. As I understand, this section calls for "cash on the barrel head," and now a credit, of $100,000,000, is allowed with security, countries who wish to buy goods or equipment. If the equipment is new, then certainly the purchasing country should pay its full cost.

As I understand the provision with respect to fair value, if we take the case of an old ship which is tied up and in "moth balls," so to speak, and which has excess equipment, we then may be able to get rid of it at a fair value. It seems to me that the Senator might amend or modify his amendment so that it would apply to the cost of new equipment, and allow fair value to be used in the case of equipment that was not new.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, what I do not want to do is to give away excess equipment to South American nations, for instance. I think that is what the Army has been trying to do for 10 years. We cut it out of the last bill. Now, we have a provision which authorizes the Army to take all the excess equipment and give it to some South American or Central American country. It is that to which I object. I do not think the section was intended to authorize that. The modification of it makes that possible.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. With respect to the interpretation placed upon the section referred to in the past, an example is that under the Korean aid bill of last October the only thing which was furnished under that bill, which provided for $27,600,000, was an item of wire. The original cost or value of the wire was $52,000, yet the only item of charge against the $27,640,000 was $200, the cost of repairing the wire and packing it for shipment. If the same interpretation should be made, the result would be exactly as the Senator from Ohio has said. It would authorize the giving away of material which has already been made for the United States and its forces to the extent of millions and literally billions of dollars, and charge only dollars against the items.

Mr. TAFT. Did the Speaker say that out of the $27,640,000 appropriated for Korea last year, only $200 has been received by Korea to date?

Mr. FERGUSON. It has only been shipped; it has not arrived at its destination.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. It has not been delivered.

Mr. FERGUSON. That is what I meant.

Mr. WHERRY. It was shipped only a short time ago.

I should like to say that the point which the Senator from Ohio is making is that the only thing that is chargeable against that wire is $200, whereas, in reality, there was several thousand dollars worth of wire which was just as good as new.

Mr. TAFT. That is under another section of the bill. I agree that that is the value which the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] suggested that I take. But that was not true in the over-all selling section. The selling section provided for a sale for cash on the barrel head.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I probably did not make myself clear. What I was trying to say was that the section applies only to material which can be sold, and the money has to be in the hands of the United States Government before the material is delivered. But according to the modification this year, there can be $100,000,000 credit, if there is security on the barrel head before the goods are delivered.

I think the Senator from Ohio is completely right in saying that if the sale is to be made of new material, new ships, and new tanks, then it should be at cost. What I tried to point out to the Senator was that if the material was not new it was impossible to sell it at cost, because it was secondhand, and, therefore, this provision limits the United States, in selling for cash on the barrel head, second-hand material.

Mr. TAFT. But I do not think this section was ever intended to cover second-hand material. The excess equipment was to go to the Atlantic Union nations, or to Korea, or some of the other nations. It was a provision for selling to people with whom we do not necessarily have any connection whatever, primarily people in the South- and Central-American nations, and they were to pay cash. It was also to enable us to enter into contracts for equipment, materials, and services. The Government helped them to buy the materials here, but they were to pay the full cost. It was never contemplated that we should give equipment to South America for nothing.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I agree entirely with the Senator that we do not want to give it to South America. The Senator has an automobile, Ohio registration 240. It is getting a little old. If he needs a new automobile, he hopes to get some trade-in value; he does not expect to give it away. It is the same way with the Army. It is better to sell goods at their fair value than to have them rot.

Mr. TAFT. I do not agree that the United States should be selling even its excess arms to countries all over the world. I do not think that promotes peace. I do not believe we should be selling those arms around the world unless there is a specific pact, such as the Atlantic Union pact, or some specific policy. It seems to me that providing arms to every South- and Central-American Republic is a very dangerous policy. I think it promotes war in South America. The arms are going to be used against each other. They are never going to use them in our interest against Soviet Russia, for instance. The policy will promote revolution and provide incentives for revolutions. If they want to buy new arms here, instead of somewhere else, with American specifications, so they can fit in more conveniently, that is another matter. The bill says, "in the interest of achieving standardization of military equipment."

I do not disagree with that, although I think it is somewhat dubious. But I do not think we should give excess equipment away for nothing.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. It is my understanding, although I do not say it is a complete understanding, that it would cover, for example, second-hand Coast Guard boats, escorts, and so forth.

Mr. TAFT. Why provide South America with second-hand boats?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Why not, if they want to pay cash on the barrelhead?

Mr. TAFT. If they are excess and we do not want them, we can sell them to private parties.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. If the position of the Senator from Ohio is that we should not try to get rid of any of our second-hand equipment that we no longer want for cash on the barrelhead, then his position is entirely a correct one. If we are willing to get rid of some of the tremendous amount of equipment which we are never going to use again, as I understand, then I say there is a compromise between cash for new material at full cost and cash at a fair value for second-hand material.

Mr. TAFT. Let me ask this question of the Senator: If the Army chooses to declare something as being excess, has it not the right to sell it at public auction for any price it can get for it?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. To other nations?

Mr. TAFT. To anyone.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I cannot answer that question.

Mr. TAFT. Is there not a law providing for selling excess material at any price which can be obtained for it?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I cannot answer that question.

Mr. TAFT. It seems to me that is a much surer way of getting at the value.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHAPMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I realize that the Senator has raised some very important points. I feel that the suggestion made by the Senator from Massachusetts is worth considering as differentiating between the costs of second-hand material and new material. The bill refers to—

(A) nations eligible for assistance under title I, II, or III of this act, (B) a nation which has joined with the United States in a collective defense and regional arrangement.

This is an important provision, and it has reference to South American countries. It applies to the Rio Pact. It was to enable those countries to buy second-hand materials in order that they could build up the collective defense required under the Rio Pact. It is not merely South American countries, but South American countries in a collective defense and regional arrangement.

I read further:

(C) any other nation not eligible to join a collective defense and regional arrangement referred to in clause (B) above, but whose ability to defend itself or to participate in the defense of the area of which it is a part, is important to the security of the United States.

So, it is not merely any country.

Mr. TAFT. I would say it is any country, under the interpretation of the State Department. Sometimes Korea is and sometimes it is not; sometimes Formosa is and sometimes it is not. It is any nation to which the United States wants to give equipment.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. This is very important:

Provided, That, prior to the transfer of any equipment, materials, or services to a nation under this clause (C), it shall provide the United States with assurance that such equipment, materials, or services are required and will be used solely to maintain its internal security, its legitimate self defense, or to permit it to participate in the defense of the area of which it is a part and that it will not undertake any act of aggression against any other state.

By implication, that applies not only to South America, but to other areas, such as the Arab States, Palestine, or Israel, which have been seeking to buy. They do not want to buy second-hand material at full-cost prices; they want to be able to buy it at its fair value.

Mr. TAFT. I did not know they were asking for second-hand materials.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. When it is new material it should be at cost, and when it is second-hand material——

Mr. TAFT. But the moment we depart from the cost figure we go to nothing. We place it in the discretion of the President and the War Department, so they can give it away. The definition of "value" on page 39 of the report suggests that it go for nothing. It says that the value of excess materials is nothing except what is spent on packing it and sending it abroad.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. It covers new material and second-hand material, considering the areas of the world where such material might be needed for defense and where it cannot be used for aggressive purposes without violating the agreement with the United States.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield so that I may propound a question to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Under the amendment suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts what new material would the United States be selling to South America? I refer to military equipment, of course.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. It is conceivable that they would be selling material to those countries.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to ask for that information. I should like to know how that would be handled.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I think the Senator had better address his inquiry to a member of the Committee on Armed Services, which has been examining this matter in greater detail than has the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WHERRY. If the Senator will bear with me, I was interested in the suggestion made by the Senator from Massachusetts to the effect that the amendment be limited to new materials. I cannot conceive of appropriations being made——

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. As I understand, the Senator from Massachusetts suggests that cost be applied where new material is concerned, and fair value where second-hand material is involved.

Mr. WHERRY. If the Senator from Ohio will bear with me further, I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from New Jersey what new materials South American countries would buy? Would they be purchased from the military? How would such purchases be handled? Do we appropriate the money, and is the equipment then built? I should think that most of the material which would be handled would not be new material but material which had been held over, and would come under the category of excess material rather than new material.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield so that I may reply to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. TAFT. Certainly.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I can answer the Senator's question in a limited way. I understand the section was put in the bill primarily, not for South America, but for Canada and for some other countries who can pay the full value. That was the evidence which came before us. I cannot answer the Senator's question regarding South America.

Mr. WHERRY. Would these materials be fabricated?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. They would be fabricated. The dollars would be in our hands before the material was shipped. The purpose of permitting the fair value application was to avoid the money coming in when the goods would not be delivered for 6 months.

Mr. TAFT. Was there any evidence submitted in support of this proposed amendment of the committee?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Does the Senator refer to the hearings?

Mr. TAFT. Yes.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I was looking through the hearings myself, and I could find no evidence in the public hearings. This evidence was given in executive session.

Mr. TAFT. I cannot find any such evidence either. It seems to me under the general authorization for a billion dollars, and the $250,000,000 item with respect to excess equipment and material, there is covered about everything that is needed which has any direct relation to war. I do not believe we should change the selling section providing for full value, and establish another method. If we have so much excess equipment, let us give it to France, for example, and other nations. Let us not scatter it all over South America, where no Communist attack will be made, so far as I can see.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. That is entirely a question of policy. If the Senator from Ohio adopts that policy, he is entirely correct. The excess equipment which is to be included, and the added 17 percent, which is the amount of money required to put it into condition, are very carefully figured out on page 39 of the committee's report. The excess equipment provision was added this year. The $250,000,000 was added to the $450,000,000 which was inserted last year.

Mr. TAFT. Can the Senator tell me how much of the $450,000,000 has actually been used up during the current year?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. A substantial amount. My memory is that it is in excess of $300,000,000. However, I would not vouch for that being the correct figure.

Mr. TAFT. The balance would be carried over and added to the $250,000,000 for next year.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. That is correct.

Mr. TAFT. I see no reason for adding that for many nations, all around the world. It was thought necessary last year, and provision for South America was included last year, but the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] and former Senator Dulles had the provision stricken out because they did not think we ought to be furnishing arms to South America.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I believe the Senator is inaccurate.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I could not attend all the hearings of the committee which considered this bill. However, I have recollection of the hearings held a year ago, and particularly one session this year, when it was testified that the purpose of selling some of this equipment to South America was primarily to enable some ships to be sold to South America. In World War II—and the same policy would be followed if we were to be involved in a world war III—it was the policy of Western Hemispheric defense to ask countries of South America to do a certain amount of patrolling of the sea lanes which abut South America, for the purpose of protecting the ships which bring ore and other materials up the Atlantic and up the Pacific coasts and through the Panama Canal. Instead of our having to do it all, we have been trying to help those countries develop navies so that they could take care of a certain amount of the patrolling duties. During the last war Brazil and several other countries of South America were a great help to us in that respect.

They released a great many of our ships. The purpose of putting that provision in the bill is a part of the hemispheric defense, in order to make it possible to augment their small supply of ships from our excess source of supply, on a cash basis, so that they may help us patrol the sea lanes and not tie up our Navy. More ships would be available to us for other purposes.

Mr. TAFT. If this section were to be confined to ships alone, I would have no objection to it. Perhaps such an amendment could be worked out. Apparently this section primarily refers to military equipment and does not contemplate ships. Let me point out the further fact that a limitation of $250,000,000 is placed on the excess equipment which can be furnished under the other provision of the bill. If we add this provision it seems to me we practically take the limit off the $250,000,000, because under this provision some nations who are getting the $250,000,000 can also get other excess equipment at fair value, and the President could point to section 403 (c) as to what the value is intended to be. He could furnish equipment not only to South America, but he could furnish the equipment to other nations for practically nothing and greatly in excess of $250,000,000. Practically the limit is taken off altogether. I would be willing to go along on the matter of ships. I am willing to sell ships to anyone, anywhere. I think the President would ask for a fair value on them, but I am not certain about the excess equipment.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. THYE. I am certainly not a competent witness so far as the questions of the Senator are concerned, because I was not able to attend all the hearings. However, in addition to ships such as destroyers, and I believe a cruiser or two, which we have made available already to some countries in South America, observation planes are also involved. Observation planes are not necessarily first-line equipment. Planes can be used for observation purposes which are not good planes battlewise. We are trying to protect our sea lanes, in order to assure the flow of oil, tin, and other vital supplies from South America, by letting South American countries have some excess ships which we believe we do not need ourselves. We likewise are trying to build up their observation units. To be frank, I cannot tell the Senator whether it is limited to these things only. I do know that they were a part of the motivation which caused this particular section to be written into the bill. I remember the testimony.

Mr. TAFT. It seems to me the section is so broad that it practically takes the limit off the amount of excess equipment which may be sent to any nation in the world. I think that is a mistaken policy. I should be glad to discuss that with the members of the committee, and perhaps work out something which would meet the approval of everyone.

Mr. TYDINGS. The term "excess equipment" is a very nebulous one. It is perfectly proper to confine the provision to material which would carry out the idea of the amendment. But as I contemplate equipment, it merely means equipment which would not be necessary in the event of war, either as a part of our military reserve equipment or as a part of our stock to take care of the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force which we would raise in time of war. In other words, the excess is over and above what we would need for our forces. That is the definition we have had over and over again. It is not conceivable, I am advised by our military authorities, that the excess equipment would ever be used, in case of emergency, by our own uniformed personnel. It is something we would not need for any use whatever. Some of that equipment is pretty widely scattered. As a matter of fact, it is exposed to the weather, it is setting out in the field, and is deteriorating. We have one of two options, to let it stay there and further deteriorate so that it will not be of any value, and use it for scrap, or give it some nation which might use it as a part of their over-all equipment.

Mr. TAFT. There are constant rumors about excess equipment being given away at 10 cents on the dollar, and the Army buying pretty much the same things today at a hundred cents on the dollar. I do not know whether there is anything in those stories or not, but certainly we are giving away our excess equipment for practically nothing.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not think those rumors are well founded, and I do not believe the excess equipment is very valuable. As a matter of fact, I think it is stated in the bill that none of the excess equipment, except as to small quantities, is useful until it is repaired and put in shape, and I believe it costs about 10 or 15 percent of its original value to get it in shape so that it is usable.

Mr. TAFT. My recollection is that the big tank reservoir in Lima, Ohio, or Marion, I forget where, in northwestern Ohio, was shipping to various foreign nations tanks which looked good, after putting them in repair. There is a big repair shop there. I do not think the tanks are obsolete. There was a report of the shipment of two shiploads, to Israel, or Finland, or some other nation.

Mr. TYDINGS. Will the Senator yield to me to make a comment on that?

Mr. TAFT. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am advised that those tanks would not be used by our own country if we went to war. I am advised they are not the kind of tanks we would like to have if we were going into the tank business, as we are not at the present time, for reasons which I shall not discuss on the floor of the Senate. But they are better than nothing for countries which have very little defense equipment.

Mr. TAFT. Does the Senator mean we could not fight the Russians with them, but the other countries could fight the Russians with them?

Mr. TYDINGS. They are good for temporary work for a short period of time, but are not built or geared or modern enough to stand up in a big battle for any length of time. They are completely outmoded, they are vulnerable, they are not modern in any sense of the word. The best use to which they could be put would be for delaying action.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator is suggesting that the MAP program is to be worked out by giving European nations something that is not of real value?

Mr. TYDINGS. Is the Senator speaking in the sense of military value, or commercial value?

Mr. TAFT. Military value.

Mr. TYDINGS. I would say that anything is better than nothing if a nation has nothing with which to fight. But we do not ever want anything that is "better than nothing" in America. We want our own troops to have the best weapons human ingenuity can devise. But these foreign nations are not able to have weapons in that category or to make them in their own countries. Therefore we take weapons which we are not using in our own forces, recondition them, and send them over there, so that they will have something with which to meet an invasion, whereas, otherwise they would have nothing. I think that is good sense.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, coming back to the general provisions of section 408 (e) (1) and (2), to which I object, it is very difficult to modify the amendment, because I do not know what it is the Army is really trying to do. There is no evidence about that in the hearings. Whatever the evidence was, was secret. The distinguished Senator says he is not sure what is covered. He thinks it is ships, and possibly a few observation planes. If I could find out what it was the Army wanted, I would have no objection to giving them anything reasonable, but it seems to me the way the section is now drawn, it takes the lid off and provides for furnishing excess equipment for nothing to any nation in the world. I think it is an unfortunate provision.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Farrell, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6826) to provide for the common defense through the registration and classification of certain male persons, and for other purposes.

EXTENSION OF SELECTIVE SERVICE ACT OF 1948—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, while the Senator from Ohio is conferring with members of the committee who were able to attend the hearings—unfortunately the Senator from Maryland was not—I should like to point out to the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Massachusetts that there has just come over to the Senate the conference report on the selective service bill, which the House has just adopted. The House adopted the conference report by a vote of 314 to 4, which is a pretty big vote.

The conference report on the selective service bill merely extends the present law for 1 year, as is. It further gives the President the right to call out the National Guard and the Organized Reserves in case of emergency.

Mr. President, I submit the conference report on the bill (H. R. 6826) to provide for the common defense through the registration and classification of certain male persons, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The conference report will be read for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the report.

(For conference report, see today's proceedings of the House of Representatives, on p. 9288.)

Mr. WHERRY. There is no objection, Mr. President.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. TYDINGS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. As I understand, the conferees have agreed on extending the present act for 1 year only.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. The language which was in the Senate bill with reference to when the President could act and when the Congress could act is not in the bill now, is it?

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. Is the provision about calling out the National Guard a new provision?

Mr. TYDINGS. It was in the bill as it passed the House.

Mr. WHERRY. But not in the Senate committee bill?

Mr. TYDINGS. Not in the Senate committee bill. I prefer not to go into the matter completely on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. WHERRY. I have no objection to the consideration of the report.

Mr. TYDINGS. I would say that a good case was made out for the inclusion of this provision. I am sure all Senators would agree to it. I prefer not to go into the details.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. KEM. I should like to ask the Senator what was done with reference to the provision that if Congress was in session the President could not induct men into the service.

Mr. TYDINGS. We merely provided that the law which is now on the statute books be extended for 1 year only, without any change or alteration.

Mr. KEM. The President would have the right to induct men into the service while Congress was in session?

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. KEM. The Senate is opposed to that.

Mr. TYDINGS. So was the House.

Mr. KEM. It was discussed at length on the floor of the Senate, and it seems to me that a point of order should be made against the conference report because it is inconsistent with both the House and the Senate bills.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I do not think the point of order would lie, because when the Senate considered the bill, it struck out everything after the enacting clause, which meant that any kind of a bill could be written in conference. I think that is a well settled rule, and I do not believe a point of order would lie. I therefore am willing to submit the matter to the Chair for immediate ruling.

Mr. KEM. At any rate, the conference report is inconsistent with both the Senate and the House bills, and I do not see how the conferees were justified in bringing in such a report, when both the House and the Senate had clearly indicated their intention and desire that the President should not have the power to induct men into the service when Congress was in session.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator from Missouri that the proposition which is now before the Senate for adoption is the House proposition. It is not a Senate proposition. We were contending for the Senate position in the conference, when the House conferees, in view of what had happened recently, made the suggestion to us that the wisest course would be to extend the present selective service law for 1 year, as is, in place of the 3-year provision of extension which the Senate had previously adopted. We then inquired whether a point of order would lie, because of the very point that the Senator from Missouri is now raising. It was found upon examination that a point of order would not lie, because the Senate, in acting upon the House bill, had stricken out everything after the enacting clause, which under the conference rules allows the rewriting of the proposition in the shape in which we have brought it here.

As a matter of fact when we went to conference the House was opposed to the President having any power to put the selective-service machinery into effect even when the Congress was not in session. The Senate took the position that the President ought to have the right to put the selective-service machinery into effect when the Congress was not in session. But as the bill came from the Senate Committee on Armed Services and was reported to the Senate, it provided that either the President or the Congress could put it into effect at any time regardless of whether the Senate or the House were in session or not.

So I think the Chair will rule—and I think the precedents will support the position—that the Senate conferees were within their rights when they acceded to the House proposition that the Selective Service Act, as is, be extended for the period of 1 year.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, it seems to me, if I may say so, that the Senate conferees have disregarded the wishes of the Senate in agreeing to the conference report. The Senator from Maryland perhaps is correct technically that a point of order does not lie to the conference report, but certainly the report is inconsistent with both the House bill that was sent over here and with the Senate bill that was sent to conference.

So, Mr. President, I ask that the matter go over so that we can consider it more fully.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I certainly hope that will not be done. It seems to me that we are very conversant with the matter which is now before us. Furthermore, the international situation is more complicated today than it was a week ago when we debated this matter, and I think we ought not to play cat and mouse with this thing. I think we all understand what issues are involved. We all understand the gravity of the situation. I think we not only have to think of our own country in this situation, but of the effect upon other governments all over the world of what we do or do not do here.

I do not want to retreat in the face of a little difficulty. I think the surest way to keep peace is to stand right up to this emergency and not go wishy-washy with it on the Chamberlain-Munich appeasement plan. I believe, without wanting to be warlike, that we can be dignified and resolute and forthright when we know all the ingredients, and have a better chance of getting peace than by equivocating, and playing cat and mouse.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. KEM. The Senator from Maryland is always fair and reasonable.

Mr. TYDINGS. I want to be.

Mr. KEM. I appeal to his fairness. Is it not a consideration that the courtesy is due to a Senator who may have some doubt about the bill to allow the conference report to go over at least for today, without forcing it through with only a few minutes' consideration?

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to accommodate the Senator. I believe his request is a fair one. I should like to ask him, and ask the leaders on both sides of the aisle, if we go along with the Senator and give him time to look into the report whether he would not agree that some particular time tomorrow be fixed, at the convenience of those who have charge of the operations of the Senate, to vote upon the report then, so that we will not unnecessarily delay it, which was the point of my argument?

Mr. KEM. I shall be agreeable to any time suggested by the minority leader.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I therefore ask unanimous consent, if I may take it up myself to do so, but in the best of spirit, that beginning at 2 o'clock tomorrow the Senate proceed to vote upon the conference report. I will make it a quarter of 2 tomorrow, because the Senator from Maryland has to be at another important meeting.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, may I say that it seems to me there ought to be some time for the intelligent discussion of the conference report. A quarter of 2 would not give very much time.

Mr. TYDINGS. What would the Senator suggest?

Mr. KEM. It would seem to me 3 o'clock would be better.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am trying to accommodate the Senator, and I hope he will try to accommodate the Senator from Maryland. I have one of the most important meetings of our committee to attend tomorrow at 2 o'clock. It is one of the meetings I am obliged to attend. I am in charge of this particular bill. I want to do all I can to accommodate the Senator from Missouri, and I am trying to do that. I wonder whether the Senator from Missouri would not agree to make the time a quarter to two, and we will divide the time equally between himself and the Senator from Maryland, so that he may have half of the time to argue any points he desires to make.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, I do not know that I want any time at all.

Mr. TYDINGS. How about meeting at 11 o'clock?

Mr. KEM. I want an opportunity to look into the bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. How about meeting at 11 o'clock?

Mr. KEM. If I do not want any time, it is likely that some other Senators on this side or perhaps on the other side will want time, and in that event they ought not to be cut off. The question before us is a very important one. As I have said, the power to take sons from the homes of the land is one of the most drastic powers of all the powers of government. Certainly there is no power more intimately connected with our families. It seems to me that legislation involving the question of whether the President shall exercise this power or whether it shall be exercised by the elected representatives of the people when Congress is in session is of very great importance. I do not know that I will want to debate it at length tomorrow. I do not know that other Members of this body will want to debate it; but it seems to me that if we fix the time for voting at 3 o'clock, in the event there is to be debate, time enough will be given for both sides to be heard.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. LEHMAN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. President, I simply want to make one observation. The international situation, as we all know, is more than serious. It is critical. The President took a stand today, and Senator after Senator rose on the floor of the Senate and expressed his confidence in what the President has done, and promised full support. At this critical time I think it is important to show the entire world that the Members of the Congress and the Nation stand solidly behind the President in the bold and courageous actions he has taken. The world must know that in these actions he represents the undivided will of the American people and Nation. I cannot conceive of anything that would be more effective toward this end than to act favorably on the conference report this afternoon.

I shall not object.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maryland yield to me?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. Reserving the right to object, I wish to say that the distinguished Senator from Missouri simply wants to have time to look over the conference report. He is not asking for a division of time. I submit to the distinguished Senator from Maryland that if he can see his way clear to agree to vote on the conference report at 2 o'clock tomorrow, without any division of time, that we meet at 12 o'clock and vote at 2, it will no doubt be agreeable.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, in order to bring the matter to a head, and I hope that every Senator, whether he agrees in toto or only in part, will try to accommodate himself to the unanimous-consent agreement: I ask unanimous consent that at 2 o'clock tomorrow afternoon the Senate proceed, without further debate and without a quorum call——

Mr. WHERRY. Can we take a vote without having a quorum call?

Mr. TYDINGS. The quorum call can be had before 2 o'clock.

Mr. WHERRY. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. That when the hour of 2 o'clock arrives tomorrow the Senate proceed to vote upon the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Maryland? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The agreement as entered into was subsequently reduced to writing, as follows:

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Ordered, That on the calendar day of Wednesday, June 28, 1950, at the hour of 2 o'clock p. m., the Senate proceed to vote, without further debate, upon the question of agreeing to the conference report on the bill (H. R. 6826) to provide for the common defense through the registration and classification of certain male persons, and for other purposes.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I assume there will be no more debate tonight on the military assistance program bill. When we resume the consideration of that measure tomorrow, I hope all Senators, on both sides of the aisle, who expect to make speeches regarding it, will be ready with their speeches, in order that we may dispose of this measure as quickly as possible. It is serious business we are into now, Mr. President. Senators who wish to make speeches on the bill certainly can prepare their speeches between now and tomorrow. I should like to close ranks as quickly as possible and obtain a vote on this measure.

The Senator from Nebraska suggested that perhaps we could reach a unanimous-consent agreement to have the vote on the bill taken on Friday. That would put off the vote for practically 3 days. Certainly we can proceed faster than that. Accordingly, I am not going to make such a unanimous-consent request. Instead, let us proceed with consideration of the bill tomorrow, and see whether we can conclude the speeches on this measure at that time.

I do not wish to prevent any Senator from debating the bill, but at the same time we should handle it expeditiously. It seems to me that it occupies a position very similar to that of the Draft Act, which we are getting ready to extend; it seems to me quite possible that the prompt enactment of this measure will have a desirable effect upon the free countries of the world, as well as upon the aggressors. On the other hand, if we were to postpone for several days the vote on this measure, it might be said that we were dilly-dallying or that we were appeasing.

So, Mr. President, under the circumstances I do not choose to propose a unanimous-consent agreement regarding this bill.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. In all good faith, I wonder whether the Senator from Illinois would object to a unanimous-consent agreement to have the Senate vote on MAP on Friday afternoon.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator from Nebraska may so request, if he desires to do so. However, I wish him to understand that any Senator who makes such a request and obtains such an agreement must assume the responsibility for any delay which may occur in the passage of this measure.

Mention is made of certain Senators who are out of town, and who wish to return and speak on the bill before the vote is taken. Of course, that situation often develops.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I concur in the Senator's remarks about Senators who are out of town from time to time. Of course, the Senate often enters into unanimous-consent agreements regarding the time for the taking of votes.

I am prepared to say that I am satisfied that if a unanimous-consent agreement were proposed to have the vote on this measure taken on Friday, at 2 o'clock, for instance, no objection would be made. If the majority leader is so inclined, I do not see how such an agreement would result in any loss of time, because we are to vote tomorrow on the conference report on the extension of the Draft Act, and that will mean that part of tomorrow will be consumed in that way.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, let us permit the matter to go over until tomorrow, because if we enter into an agreement to have the Senate vote on this bill on Friday, I guarantee that there will not be a dozen Senators here tomorrow to participate in the debate on the military-assistance program, for Senators would not need to be present until the time came to vote on the bill on Friday, if the Senate were to agree to have the vote taken on Friday.

I should like to have the bill debated; and I should also like to have the Senate proceed as quickly as possible with the consideration of the bill, and then vote on it. I am sure that if we were to agree to have the vote taken at 2 or at 3 or at 4 o'clock on any particular day there would be very few Senators present in the meantime; and during the interval requests would be made for the consideration of many extraneous matters. Such a situation, if permitted to develop, would not look very well, it seems to me.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. At least we would have arrived at a unanimous-consent agreement in regard to having the Senate vote on this measure on Friday, if such an agreement were entered into.

I do not wish to press regarding the matter. I am perfectly willing to wait until tomorrow, and see how the situation develops then. However, my experience has always been that entering into a unanimous-consent agreement saves time. It seems to me that while many Senators are in the Chamber at this time, it would be well for us to enter into such an agreement.

Mr. LUCAS. An agreement of that sort may save time. If Senators wish to debate the bill later than Friday of this week, that will be perfectly agreeable with me; but those who then are responsible for delay in reaching the vote on the bill will have to assume that responsibility.

Mr. President, that is all I care to say at this time.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, let me inquire whether he expects to take up today any matters on the executive calendar?

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I expect to do so right now.

I now move that the Senate proceed to consider executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGE REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHAPMAN in the chair) laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which was referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Reports of committees are in order. If there are none the calendar is in order.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, before too long we expect to take up all the treaties on the calendar. I shall notify the Senate in advance when we shall do so. It is my understanding that there is no serious objection to any of them.

With respect to the nominations on the calendar, all nominations of judges should be passed over, as well as the nomination to the Motor Carrier Claims Commission.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I think there is no objection to confirmation of the nomination of the Hon. Gus J. Solomon, of Oregon, to be United States district judge for the district of Oregon, if the Senator from Illinois wishes to have the Senate proceed now to consider that nomination.

Mr. LUCAS. I was speaking of the three nominations on page 2 of the executive calendar. However, I notice that there are other nominations of judges on the calendar. It is my intention to request that the three nominations on page 2 of the calendar be passed over.

Mr. McCARRAN. Let me ask the Senator to state the three nominations to which he now refers.

Mr. LUCAS. I refer to the nomination of Frank E. Hook, the nomination of Martin A. Hutchinson, and the nomination of Willis W. Ritter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois desire to have the first nomination on page 3 of the executive calendar passed over?

Mr. LUCAS. No.

Mr. President, before we reach the nominations on page 3 of the Executive Calendar, I desire to make an announcement in regard to the nomination of Hon. Willis W. Ritter, of Utah, who has been nominated by the President to be United States district judge for the district of Utah. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, has to leave on Thursday night. Earlier today I announced, at a time when the Senator from Nevada was not in the Chamber, that we would accommodate the Senator from Utah [Mr. WATKINS] by taking up the nomination of Mr. Ritter on Friday. I wish to modify that arrangement by arranging that the nomination be taken up on Thursday.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I should like to ask that the nomination of Edward J. Carrigan, of California, to be United States marshal, go over.

Mr. LUCAS. That will be done when we reach that nomination.

Mr. President, I am notifying the Senate now that on Thursday I shall move that the Senate consider the nomination of the Honorable Willis W. Ritter, to be United States district judge for the district of Utah.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, I have already explained to the Senator from Illinois, and the explanation is in the RECORD, that the only reason why I have requested additional time in connection with the action of the Senate on that nomination is that many other matters are pending—for instance, the military assistance program bill and the bill for the extension of the Draft Act. If the Senate votes on the nomination of Mr. Ritter on Thursday, that will not give me the time I need to prepare a statement regarding the nomination. It will not take me more than 30 or 40 minutes to make my statement on the nomination, and then I shall be prepared to vote on it. I shall not even ask that a yea-and-nay vote be had.

Mr. LUCAS. Of course the Senator from Utah is thoroughly familiar with the nomination, so I do not think it will take him long to prepare to discuss it.

Mr. WATKINS. I have already said that it will. The Senator can hardly know more about my ability to do things than I do myself.

Mr. LUCAS. I did not mean it in that way. I was under the impression the Senator was thoroughly familiar with all the objections, and so forth.

Mr. WATKINS. It was some time ago. I have been reviewing the record somewhat, and I have made that request.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I do not think I am unreasonable, I may say to the Senator, in giving him 2 days in which to prepare his speech regarding Mr. Ritter, when I am trying also to accommodate the Senator from Nevada so that he can get away on Thursday night. The Senator from Nevada has an engagement in his own State. I understand he will not be back for some time, and I am anxious to clean up the Executive Calendar as rapidly as possible. I think it is a very fair proposition, one to which the Senator from Utah ought not to have any objection, to consider the Ritter nomination sometime Thursday afternoon.

Mr. WATKINS. I have stated my opinion. The Senator from Illinois can go ahead as he thinks best.

Mr. LUCAS. I have stated my position, and I am going to move at that time to take up the nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nomination will go over. The next nomination on the calendar will be stated.

DIPLOMATIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of W. Walton Butterworth to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to Sweden.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. CONNALLY subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask, in connection with the nomination of Mr. Butterworth, which was confirmed a while ago, that the President be notified.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, in the absence of the distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. DONNELL], I ask that notification be withheld.

Mr. CONNALLY. I withdraw the request.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Harold I. Baynton to be an Assistant Attorney General.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I have been requested to ask that this nomination go over temporarily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nomination will be passed over.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Austin L. Staley to be United States circuit judge for the third circuit.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, I do not desire to offer any objection to this nomination, because I do not know Mr. Staley personally. I should merely like to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that at the time this nomination was received the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HENDRICKSON] and I, representing the State of New Jersey, placed a formal objection with the Committee on the Judiciary, on the ground that the third circuit has at this time three Pennsylvania judges and only one New Jersey judge. We gave evidence to show that the number of cases coming up from the State of New Jersey justified our having another member from New Jersey on that bench.

We also offered for the consideration of the committee the suggestion that Federal appointments to the bench should be on a bipartisan basis, whereas this bench is entirely composed of members of one party—the Democratic Party—with no Republican on it at this time. I am not raising that as an objection to Mr. Staley, because he is undoubtedly a very fine gentleman. I merely wanted the RECORD to show that we raised those points at the time this nomination was received.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, I strongly desire to associate myself with the remarks of the senior Senator from New Jersey with respect to this nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to this nomination?

The nomination was confirmed.

CIRCUIT COURTS, TERRITORY OF HAWAII

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Carrick H. Buck to be first judge of the First Circuit, Circuit Courts, Territory of Hawaii.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Gus J. Solomon to be United States judge for the district of Oregon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

UNITED STATES MARSHALS

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Benjamin B. Mozee to be United States marshal for Division No. 2, District of Alaska.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Edward J. Carrigan, to be United States marshal for the northern district of California.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I ask that this nomination go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nomination will go over.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Maurice T. Smith, to be United States marshal for the district of Colorado.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

That completes the nominations on the calendar.

CONVENTION ON THE INTERGOVERNMENTAL MARITIME CONSULTATIVE ORGANIZATION

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, in the nature of things, the Senator from Maryland is compelled to be absent from the Senate floor while the Senate is in session, a great deal of the time. It happens that on the Executive Calendar, page 1, Calendar No. 7, there is the Convention on the Intergovernmental Maritime Consultative Organization, signed at Geneva on March 6, 1948, by the respective plenipotentiaries of the United States of America and other states concerned.

I was the chairman of the subcommittee which considered this convention, and it was reported unanimously by the Foreign Relations Committee. From the standpoint of expense, there is only $4,000 a year involved, but it is a very important treaty, because it waives the safety measures and other matters of that kind which the various nations attempted to have adopted as a uniform code by the shipping companies of the different flags. Inasmuch as I am absent a good bit of the time, these days, and inasmuch as there is no opposition to this treaty, I should very much appreciate it if the leader on each side of the aisle would accommodate me by having it considered now, so that I can make any explanation that may be desirable at this time.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I have no objection to the immediate consideration of the treaty.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the convention?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the convention (Executive L, 80th Cong., 2d sess.), a Convention on the Intergovernmental Maritime Consultative Organization, signed at Geneva on March 6, 1948, by the respective Plenipotentiaries of the United States of America and other countries concerned, which was read the second time, as follows:

CONVENTION OF THE INTERGOVERNMENTAL MARITIME CONSULTATIVE ORGANIZATION

The States parties to the present Convention hereby establish the Intergovernmental Maritime Consultative Organization (hereinafter referred to as "the Organization").

PART I—PURPOSES OF THE ORGANIZATION

Article 1

The purposes of the Organization are:

(a) to provide machinery for cooperation among Governments in the field of governmental regulation and practices relating to technical matters of all kinds affecting shipping engaged in international trade, and to encourage the general adoption of the highest practicable standards in matters concerning maritime safety and efficiency of navigation;

(b) to encourage the removal of discriminatory action and unnecessary restrictions by Governments affecting shipping engaged in international trade so as to promote the availability of shipping services to the commerce of the world without discrimination; assistance and encouragement given by a Government for the development of its national shipping and for purposes of security does not in itself constitute discrimination, provided that such assistance and encouragement is not based on measures designed to restrict the freedom of shipping of all flags to take part in international trade;

(c) to provide for the consideration by the Organization of matters concerning unfair restrictive practices by shipping concerns in accordance with Part II;

(d) to provide for the consideration by the Organization of any matters concerning shipping that may be referred to it by any organ or Specialized Agency of the United Nations;

(e) to provide for the exchange of information among Governments on matters under consideration by the Organization.

PART II—FUNCTIONS

Article 2

The functions of the Organization shall be consultative and advisory.

Article 3

In order to achieve the purposes set out in Part I, the functions of the Organization shall be:—

(a) subject to the provisions of Article 4, to consider and make recommendations upon matters arising under Article 1 (a), (b) and (c) that may be remitted to it by Members, by any organ or Specialized Agency of the United Nations or by any other intergovernmental organization or upon matters referred to it under Article 1 (d);

(b) to provide for the drafting of conventions, agreements, or other suitable instruments, and to recommend these to Governments and to intergovernmental organizations, and to convene such conferences as may be necessary;

(c) to provide machinery for consultation among Members and the exchange of information among Governments.

Article 4

In those matters which appear to the Organization capable of settlement through the normal processes of international shipping business the Organization shall so recommend. When, in the opinion of the Organization, any matter concerning unfair restrictive practices by shipping concerns is incapable of settlement through the normal processes of international shipping business, or has in fact so proved, and provided it shall first have been the subject of direct negotiations between the Members concerned, the Organization shall, at the request of one of those Members, consider the matter.

PART III—MEMBERSHIP

Article 5

Membership in the Organization shall be open to all States, subject to the provisions of Part III.

Article 6

Members of the United Nations may become Members of the Organization by becoming parties to the Convention in accordance with the provisions of Article 57.

Article 7

States not Members of the United Nations which have been invited to send representatives to the United Nations Maritime Conference convened in Geneva on the 19th February 1948, may become Members by becoming parties to the Convention in accordance with the provisions of Article 57.

Article 8

Any State not entitled to become a Member under Article 6 or 7 may apply through the Secretary-General of the Organization to become a Member and shall be admitted as a Member upon its becoming a party to the Convention in accordance with the provisions of Article 57 provided that, upon the recommendation of the Council, its application has been approved by two-thirds of the Members other than Associate Members.

Article 9

Any territory or group of territories to which the Convention has been made applicable under Article 58, by the Member having responsibility for its international relations or by the United Nations, may become an Associate Member of the Organization by notification in writing given by such Member or by the United Nations, as the case may be, to the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

Article 10

An Associate Member shall have the rights and obligations of a Member under the Convention except that it shall not have the right to vote in the Assembly or be eligible for membership on the Council or on the Maritime Safety Committee and subject to this the word "Member" in the Convention shall be deemed to include Associate Member unless the context otherwise requires.

Article 11

No State or territory may become or remain a Member of the Organization contrary to a resolution of the General Assembly of the United Nations.

PART IV—ORGANS

Article 12

The Organization shall consist of an Assembly, a Council, a Maritime Safety Committee, and such subsidiary organs as the Organization may at any time consider necessary; and a Secretariat.

PART V—THE ASSEMBLY

Article 13

The Assembly shall consist of all the Members.

Article 14

Regular sessions of the Assembly shall take place once every two years. Extraordinary sessions shall be convened after a notice of sixty days whenever one-third of the Members give notice to the Secretary-General that they desire a session to be arranged, or at any time if deemed necessary by the Council, after a notice of sixty days.

Article 15

A majority of the Members other than Associate Members shall constitute a quorum for the meetings of the Assembly.

Article 16

The functions of the Assembly shall be:

(a) to elect at each regular session from among its Members, other than Associate Members, its President and two Vice Presidents who shall hold office until the next regular session;

(b) to determine its own rules of procedure except as otherwise provided in the Convention;

(c) to establish any temporary or, upon recommendation of the Council, permanent subsidiary bodies it may consider to be necessary;

(d) to elect the Members to be represented on the Council, as provided in Article 17, and on the Maritime Safety Committee as provided in Article 28;

(e) to receive and consider the reports of the Council, and to decide upon any question referred to it by the Council;

(f) to vote the budget and determine the financial arrangements of the Organization, in accordance with Part IX;

(g) to review the expenditures and approve the accounts of the Organization;

(h) to perform the functions of the Organization, provided that in matters relating to Article 3 (a) and (b), the Assembly shall refer such matters to the Council for formulation by it of any recommendations or instruments thereon; provided further that any recommendations or instruments submitted to the Assembly by the Council and not accepted by the Assembly shall be referred back to the Council for further consideration with such observations as the Assembly may make;

(i) to recommend to Members for adoption regulations concerning maritime safety, or amendments to such regulations, which have been referred to it by the Maritime Safety Committee through the Council;

(j) to refer to the Council for consideration or decision any matters within the scope of the Organization, except that the function of making recommendations under paragraph (i) of this Article shall not be delegated.

PART VI—THE COUNCIL

Article 17

The Council shall consist of sixteen Members and shall be composed as follows:

(a) six shall be governments of the nations with the largest interest in providing international shipping services;

(b) six shall be governments of other nations with the largest interest in international seaborne trade;

(c) two shall be elected by the Assembly from among the governments of nations having a substantial interest in providing international shipping services, and

(d) two shall be elected by the Assembly from among the governments of nations having a substantial interest in international seaborne trade.

In accordance with the principles set forth in this Article the first Council shall be constituted as provided in Appendix I to the present Convention.

Article 18

Except as provided in Appendix I to the present Convention, the Council shall determine for the purpose of Article 17 (a), the Members, governments of nations with the largest interest in providing international shipping services, and shall also determine, for the purpose of Article 17 (c), the Members, governments of nations having a substantial interest in providing such services. Such determinations shall be made by a majority vote of the Council including the concurring votes of a majority of the Members represented on the Council under Article 17 (a) and (c). The Council shall further determine for the purpose of Article 17 (b), the Members, governments of nations with the largest interest in international seaborne trade. Each Council shall make these determinations at a reasonable time before each regular session of the Assembly.

Article 19

Members represented on the Council in accordance with Article 17 shall hold office until the end of the next regular session of the Assembly. Members shall be eligible for re-election.

Article 20

(a) The Council shall elect its Chairman and adopt its own rules of procedure except as otherwise provided in the Convention.

(b) Twelve members of the Council shall constitute a quorum.

(c) The Council shall meet upon one month's notice as often as may be necessary for the efficient discharge of its duties upon the summons of its Chairman or upon request by not less than four of its Members. It shall meet at such places as may be convenient.

Article 21

The Council shall invite any Member to participate, without vote, in its deliberations on any matter of particular concern to that Member.

Article 22

(a) The Council shall receive the recommendations and reports of the Maritime Safety Committee and shall transmit them to the Assembly and, when the Assembly is not in session, to the Members for information, together with the comments and recommendations of the Council.

(b) Matters within the scope of Article 29 shall be considered by the Council only after obtaining the views of the Maritime Safety Committee thereon.

Article 23

The Council, with the approval of the Assembly, shall appoint the Secretary-General. The Council shall also make provision for the appointment of such other personnel as may be necessary, and determine the terms and conditions of service of the Secretary-General and other personnel, which terms and conditions shall conform as far as possible with those of the United Nations and its Specialized Agencies.

Article 24

The Council shall make a report to the Assembly at each regular session on the work of the Organization since the previous regular session of the Assembly.

Article 25

The Council shall submit to the Assembly the budget estimates and the financial statements of the Organization, together with its comments and recommendations.

Article 26

The Council may enter into agreements or arrangements covering the relationship of the Organization with other organizations, as provided for in Part XII. Such agreements or arrangements shall be subject to approval by the Assembly.

Article 27

Between sessions of the Assembly, the Council shall perform all the functions of the Organization, except the function of making recommendations under Article 16 (i).

PART VII—MARITIME SAFETY COMMITTEE

Article 28

(a) The Maritime Safety Committee shall consist of fourteen Members elected by the Assembly from the Members, governments of those nations having an important interest in maritime safety, of which not less than eight shall be the largest ship-owning nations, and the remainder shall be elected so as to ensure adequate representation of Members, governments of other nations with an important interest in maritime safety, such as nations interested in the supply of large numbers of crews or in the carriage of large numbers of berthed and unberthed passengers, and of major geographical areas.

(b) Members shall be elected for a term of four years and shall be eligible for re-election.

Article 29

(a) The Maritime Safety Committee shall have the duty of considering any matter within the scope of the Organization and concerned with aids to navigation, construction and equipment of vessels, manning from a safety standpoint, rules for the prevention of collisions, handling of dangerous cargoes, maritime safety procedures and requirements, hydrographic information, log-books and navigational records, marine casualty investigation, salvage and rescue, and any other matters directly affecting maritime safety.

(b) The Maritime Safety Committee shall provide machinery for performing any duties assigned to it by the Convention, or by the Assembly, or any duty within the scope of this Article which may be assigned to it by any other intergovernmental instrument.

(c) Having regard to the provisions of Part XII, the Maritime Safety Committee shall have the duty of maintaining such close relationship with other intergovernmental bodies concerned with transport and communications as may further the object of the Organization in promoting maritime safety and facilitate the coordination of activities in the fields of shipping, aviation, telecommunications and meteorology with respect to safety and rescue.

Article 30

The Maritime Safety Committee, through the Council, shall:

(a) submit to the Assembly at its regular sessions proposals made by Members for safety regulations or for amendments to existing safety regulations, together with its comments or recommendations thereon;

(b) report to the Assembly on the work of the Maritime Safety Committee since the previous regular session of the Assembly.

Article 31

The Maritime Safety Committee shall meet once a year and at other times upon request of any five of its members. It shall elect its officers once a year and shall adopt its own rules of procedure. A majority of its members shall constitute a quorum.

Article 32

The Maritime Safety Committee shall invite any Member to participate, without vote, in its deliberations on any matter of particular concern to that Member.

PART VIII—THE SECRETARIAT

Article 33

The Secretariat shall comprise the Secretary-General, a Secretary of the Maritime Safety Committee and such staff as the Organization may require. The Secretary-General shall be the chief administrative officer of the Organization, and shall, subject to the provisions of Article 23, appoint the above-mentioned personnel.

Article 34

The Secretariat shall maintain all such records as may be necessary for the efficient discharge of the functions of the Organization and shall prepare, collect and circulate the papers, documents, agenda, minutes and information that may be required for the work of the Assembly, the Council, the Maritime Safety Committee, and such subsidiary organs as the Organization may establish.

Article 35

The Secretary-General shall prepare and submit to the Council the financial statements for each year and the budget estimates on a biennial basis, with the estimates for each year shown separately.

Article 36

The Secretary-General shall keep Members informed with respect to the activities of the Organization. Each Member may appoint one or more representatives for the purpose of communication with the Secretary-General.

Article 37

In the performance of their duties the Secretary-General and the staff shall not seek or receive instructions from any government or from any authority external to the Organization. They shall refrain from any action which might reflect on their position as international officials. Each Member on its part undertakes to respect the exclusively international character of the responsibilities of the Secretary-General and the staff and not to seek to influence them in the discharge of their responsibilities.

Article 38

The Secretary-General shall perform such other tasks as may be assigned to him by the Convention, the Assembly, the Council and the Maritime Safety Committee.

PART IX—FINANCES

Article 39

Each Member shall bear the salary, travel and other expenses of its own delegation to the Assembly and of its representatives on the Council, the Maritime Safety Committee, other committees and subsidiary bodies.

Article 40

The Council shall consider the financial statements and budget estimates prepared by the Secretary-General and submit them to the Assembly with its comments and recommendations.

Article 41

(a) Subject to any agreement between the Organization and the United Nations, the Assembly shall review and approve the budget estimates.

(b) The Assembly shall apportion the expenses among the Members in accordance with a scale to be fixed by it after consideration of the proposals of the Council thereon.

Article 42

Any Member which fails to discharge its financial obligation to the Organization within one year from the date on which it is due, shall have no vote in the Assembly, the Council, or the Maritime Safety Committee unless the Assembly, at its discretion, waives this provision.

PART X—VOTING

Article 43

The following provisions shall apply to voting in the Assembly, the Council and the Maritime Safety Committee:

(a) Each Member shall have one vote.

(b) Except as otherwise provided in the Convention or in any international agreement which confers functions on the Assembly, the Council, or the Maritime Safety Committee, decisions of these organs shall be by a majority vote of the Members present and voting and, for decisions where a two-thirds majority vote is required, by a two-thirds majority vote of those present.

(c) For the purpose of the Convention, the phrase "Members present and voting" means "Members present and casting an affirmative or negative vote". Members which abstain from voting shall be considered as not voting.

PART XI—HEADQUARTERS OF THE ORGANIZATION

Article 44

(a) The headquarters of the Organization shall be established in London.

(b) The Assembly may by a two-thirds majority vote change the site of the headquarters if necessary.

(c) The Assembly may hold sessions in any place other than the headquarters if the Council deems it necessary.

PART XII—RELATIONSHIP WITH THE UNITED NATIONS AND OTHER ORGANIZATIONS

Article 45

The Organization shall be brought into relationship with the United Nations in accordance with Article 57 of the Charter of the United Nations as the Specialized Agency in the field of shipping. This relationship shall be effected through an agreement with the United Nations under Article 63 of the Charter of the United Nations, which agreement shall be concluded as provided in Article 26.

Article 46

The Organization shall co-operate with any Specialized Agency of the United Nations in matters which may be the common concern of the Organization and of such Specialized Agency, and shall consider such matters and act with respect to them in accord with such Specialized Agency.

Article 47

The Organization may, on matters within its scope, co-operate with other inter-governmental organizations which are not specialized agencies of the United Nations, but whose interests and activities are related to the purposes of the Organization.

Article 48

The Organization may, on matters within its scope, make suitable arrangements for consultation and co-operation with non-governmental international organizations.

Article 49

Subject to approval by a two-thirds majority vote of the Assembly, the Organization may take over from any other international organizations, governmental or non-governmental, such functions, resources and obligations within the scope of the Organization as may be transferred to the Organization by international agreements or by mutually acceptable arrangements entered into between competent authorities of the respective organizations. Similarly, the Organization may take over any administrative functions which are within its scope and which have been entrusted to a government under the terms of any international instrument.

PART XIII—LEGAL CAPACITY, PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES

Article 50

The legal capacity, privileges and immunities to be accorded to, or in connection with, the Organization, shall be derived from and governed by the General Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the Specialized Agencies approved by the General Assembly of the United Nations on the 21st November, 1947, subject to such modifications as may be set forth in the final (or revised) text of the Annex approved by the Organization in accordance with Sections 36 and 38 of the said General Convention.

Article 51

Pending its accession to the said General Convention in respect of the Organization, each Member undertakes to apply the provisions of Appendix H to the present Convention.

PART XIV—AMENDMENTS

Article 52

Texts of proposed amendments to the Convention shall be communicated by the Secretary-General to Members at least six months in advance of their consideration by the Assembly. Amendments shall be adopted by a two-thirds majority vote of the Assembly, including the concurring votes of a majority of the Members represented on the Council. Twelve months after its acceptance by two-thirds of the Members of the Organization, other than Associate Members, each amendment shall come into force for all Members except those which, before it comes into force, make a declaration that they do not accept the amendment. The Assembly may by a two-thirds majority vote determine at the time of its adoption that an amendment is of such a nature that any Member which has made such a declaration and which does not accept the amendment within a period of twelve months after the amendment comes into force shall, upon the expiration of this period, cease to be a party to the Convention.

Article 53

Any amendment adopted under Article 52 shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who will immediately forward a copy of the amendment to all Members.

Article 54

A declaration or acceptance under Article 52 shall be made by the communication of an instrument to the Secretary-General for deposit with the Secretary-General of the United Nations. The Secretary-General will notify Members of the receipt of any such instrument and of the date when the amendment enters into force.

PART XV—INTERPRETATION

Article 55

Any question or dispute concerning the interpretation or application of the Convention shall be referred for settlement to the Assembly, or shall be settled in such manner as the parties to the dispute agree. Nothing in this Article shall preclude the Council or the Maritime Safety Committee from settling any such question or dispute that may arise during the exercise of their functions.

Article 56

Any legal questions which cannot be settled as provided in Article 55 shall be referred by the Organization to the International Court of Justice for an advisory opinion in accordance with Article 96 of the Charter of the United Nations.

PART XVI—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

Article 57

Signature and Acceptance

Subject to the provisions of Part III the present Convention shall remain open for signature or acceptance and States may become parties to the Convention by:

(a) Signature without reservation as to acceptance;

(b) Signature subject to acceptance followed by acceptance; or

(c) Acceptance.

Acceptance shall be effected by the deposit of an instrument with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

Article 58

Territories

(a) Members may make a declaration at any time that their participation in the Convention includes all or a group or a single one of the territories for whose international relations they are responsible.

(b) The Convention does not apply to territories for whose international relations Members are responsible unless a declaration to that effect has been made on their behalf under the provisions of paragraph (a) of this Article.

(c) A declaration made under paragraph (a) of this Article shall be communicated to the Secretary-General of the United Nations and a copy of it will be forwarded by him to all States invited to the United Nations Maritime Conference and to such other States as may have become Members.

(d) In cases where under a trusteeship agreement the United Nations is the administering authority, the United Nations may accept the Convention on behalf of one, several, or all of the trust territories in accordance with the procedure set forth in Article 57.

Withdrawal

(a) Any Member may withdraw from the Organization by written notification given to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who will immediately inform the other Members and the Secretary-General of the Organization of such notification. Notification of withdrawal may be given at any time after the expiration of twelve months from the date on which the Convention has come into force. The withdrawal shall take effect upon the expiration of twelve months from the date on which such written notification is received by the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

(b) The application of the Convention to a territory or group of territories under Article 58 may at any time be terminated by written notification given to the Secretary-General of the United Nations by the Member responsible for its international relations or, in the case of a trust territory of which the United Nations is the administering authority, by the United Nations. The Secretary-General of the United Nations will immediately inform all Members and the Secretary-General of the Organization of such notification. The notification shall take effect upon the expiration of twelve months from the date on which it is received by the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

PART XVII—ENTRY INTO FORCE

Article 60

The present Convention shall enter into force on the date when 21 States of which 7 shall each have a total tonnage of not less than 1,000,000 gross tons of shipping, have become parties to the Convention in accordance with Article 57.

Article 61

The Secretary-General of the United Nations will inform all States invited to the United Nations Maritime Conference and such other States as may have become Members, of the date when each State becomes party to the Convention, and also of the date on which the Convention enters into force.

Article 62

The present Convention, of which the English, French and Spanish texts are equally authentic, shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who will transmit certified copies thereof to each of the States invited to the United Nations Maritime Conference and to such other States as may have become Members.

Article 63

The United Nations is authorized to effect registration of the Convention as soon as it comes into force.

In witness whereof the undersigned being duly authorized by their respective Governments for that purpose have signed the present Convention.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The convention is open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the convention will be reported to the Senate.

The convention was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I should like to ask either the chairman or some member of the Foreign Relations Committee about the reservation that is referred to in the printed report. I have the report in front of me. It states that the treaty is reported favorably by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] with a reservation. That is in the printed report.

Mr. TYDINGS. Offhand, I am sorry to tell the Senator that I cannot tell him what the reservation is; but it is so minor that I know it is of no great moment. However, I shall have to refresh my memory about it because it has been 3 or 4 weeks since the matter was in my mind.

Mr. WHERRY. I wonder whether there is any other member of the Foreign Relations Committee who could give us an answer to that question. As in the case of an amendment to a bill, a Senator likes to know what he is voting on. If it is so minor, why is it a reservation?

Mr. TYDINGS. There is some minor point in it, that we did not want to become committed to.

Mr. WHERRY. I understand. I am not complaining.

Mr. TYDINGS. I must be frank with the Senator and say I cannot answer offhand what the reservation is, but I think it is a matter of minor consequence.

Mr. WHERRY. There are several other members of the Foreign Relations Committee present. I wonder whether any of them can supply the information.

Mr. TYDINGS. If the clerk of the committee were here I could really give the answer, because he would have it.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I cannot answer the specific question asked by the Senator from Nebraska, but I may state that the Senator from Maryland brought this matter up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that a copy of the report is being sent for.

Mr. TYDINGS. It will only be about a minute.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I was merely going to say that when the Senator from Maryland brought up this matter, we considered it quite some time in attempting to decide the nature of the convention, and as to whether we should report it. We finally reported it unanimously. I remember that very well, but as to what the exact nature of the reservation is, I do not recall at the moment.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I think I can now answer specifically the question asked by the Senator from Nebraska, by reading from the report, as follows:

RESERVATION CONCERNING RESTRICTIVE BUSINESS PRACTICES

The President has recommended in his report to the Senate that a reservation in regard to article 4 be attached to the ratification by the United States.

The conference at Geneva enlarged the scope of the Organization over previous draft conventions by inserting article 4, which reads as follows:

"In those matters which appear to the Organization capable of settlement through normal processes by international shipping business the Organization shall so recommend. When, in the opinion of the Organization, any matter concerning unfair restrictive practices by shipping concerns is incapable of settlement through the normal processes of international shipping business, or has in fact so proved, and provided it shall first have been the subject of direct negotiations between the members concerned, the Organization shall, at the request of one of those members, consider the matter."

That is the article 4 extension. I now read further from the report:

It is emphasized that the activities of the Organization are of a consultative and advisory character, and there is nothing in the history of the convention, which would indicate that the intent of article 4 is in any way to override domestic statutes. Nevertheless, unfair restrictive practices is nowhere defined in the IMCO convention.

In order to eliminate any question on this matter, the committee recommends that when the Senate gives its advice and consent to ratification of this convention it do so with the following reservation in regard to article 4:

"Provided, That the said ratification shall be subject to the following reservation and understanding, namely: it being understood that nothing in the convention on the International Martime Consultative Organization is intended to alter domestic legislation with respect to restrictive business practices, it is hereby declared that ratification of that convention by the Government of the United States of America does not and will not have the effect of altering or modifying in any way the application of the antitrust statutes of the United States of America."

In other words, Mr. President, it appeared that there might be an interpretation put upon article 4 which might override our own antitrust laws in regard to shipping practices. Therefore the President and the committee recommended that a reservation be attached that no agreement which might be made outside the United States by the convention would have any effect on our antitrust laws.

That is the only reservation to the treaty.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I have been chairman of the subcommittee on merchant marine for some time, and this is the first notice we have had as to this treaty. It was not sent to our committee. I am wondering if the Senator from Maryland, who is also very conscious of the merchant marine problem, believes it would not in any way affect what we are trying to do domestically with our merchant marine.

Mr. TYDINGS. Not at all. It has to do with safety, certain standards, and decent practices in connection with the carrying of persons, and with any vicious or unfair competition which sometimes finds its way into shipping. As representing in part, the Port of Baltimore, the Senator can well be aware of the fact that I would be very conscious in connection with doing any injury to either his State or my own, because of the large interests involved.

Mr. MAGNUSON. In the Geneva conference there were certain standards established for safety and other standard practices, but our merchant marine is so well above those standards that it would not be affected in any way.

Mr. TYDINGS. We require so much of our own people that we want to get the other nations to come up somewhat to our standards, so that we shall be in a more equal position in serving the public.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. How many nations are involved?

Mr. TYDINGS. Approximately 30 or 40 nations.

Mr. WHERRY. How many nations have already signed this treaty?

Mr. TYDINGS. My recollection is that approximately 30 or 34 have signed it. In some nations they sign as we do, subject to ratification. I think nearly 40 have signed, some of them signing subject to ratification. It is in the interest of America, in the interest of the world, and in the interest of fair play, decency, and safety. It involves $4,000 a year. The benefits that may flow from it far outweigh any liabilities which may be involved, and I know of none.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. CORDON. The Senator from Oregon is not worried about the $4,000 a year, but he is interested in one or two other angles. Is this a new field in which the United States Government is entering?

Mr. TYDINGS. It is not.

Mr. CORDON. Is it an extension of some agreement which has heretofore existed?

Mr. TYDINGS. My understanding is that it was considered a year ago, and at that time we did not urge it because our shipping interests then wanted to consider it. So long as there was any division of thought among the shippers of America the Senator from Maryland, who was chairman of the subcommittee, thought he had better proceed slowly. At this session of Congress all shipping interests requested that the treaty be brought forward, and therefore we did not go completely over the ground we had covered a year ago, deeming it unnecessary, as no shipping interest in the United States was opposed to the treaty as reported to the Senate. I think I can say, and be completely accurate in saying it, that, so far as I know, all the shippers of America want this treaty, and there is no disagreement on the part of any of them as to the ratification of it.

Mr. CORDON. Is there any appearance or any statement by the United States Maritime Commission on the record?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes. They asked us to ratify the treaty, stating that the shippers had asked them to have it ratified, and they favored it themselves. A representative of the Organized Shippers of America involving ships which fly the American flag appeared and urged the ratification of the treaty.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. This is an outgrowth of the experiences of the inter-allied pool, the United Maritime Authority, dissolved in March, 1946, the 18-member United Maritime Consultative Council, dissolved on October 31, 1946, and the Provisional Maritime Consultative Council, which came into force in April 1947, and will disappear when IMCO comes into existence. The United Nations expects that IMCO will be the final organization.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. And it will need to deal with global activities in transport and communications.

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. It has nothing to do with the United Nations?

Mr. TYDINGS. No.

Mr. WHERRY. It is an entirely separate and distinct organization, and the background of it is what I have just given, and it is to carry on the activities if IMCO goes out of existence.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think the Senator is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution of ratification with the reservation will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive L, Eightieth Congress, second session, a convention on the Intergovernmental Maritime Consultative Organization, signed at Geneva on March 6, 1948, by the respective plenipotentiaries of the United States of America and other countries concerned, provided that the said ratification shall be subject to the following reservation and understanding, namely:

It being understood that nothing in the Convention on the Intergovernmental Maritime Consultative Organization is intended to alter domestic legislation with respect to restrictive business practices, it is hereby declared that ratification of that convention by the Government of the United States of America does not and will not have the effect of altering or modifying in any way the application of the antitrust statutes of the United States of America.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the reservation to the resolution of ratification.

The reservation was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification with the reservation. [Putting the question.] Two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein, the resolution of ratification, with the reservation, is agreed to, and the convention is ratified.

CONVENTION WITH CANADA FOR THE EXTENSION OF PORT PRIVILEGES TO HALIBUT FISHING VESSELS

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I desire to call up the convention with Canada for the extension of port privileges to halibut fishing vessels, which is on the Executive Calendar. It is a convention between the United States and Canada for the extension of port privileges to halibut fishing vessels on the Pacific coasts of the United States and Canada. It is Calendar No. 6 on the Executive Calendar. There can surely be no objection to this convention. It simply extends port privileges to halibut fishermen on the Pacific coast, permitting them to go into a port without certain restrictions. The reason I asked to have it brought up at this time is that the halibut fishing season is about to get into full swing, and it is very necessary, in emergencies such as storms, that bear down from the North Pacific, that these rights and privileges be extended. I hope the Senate will ratify this convention tonight.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the convention?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the Convention (Executive M, 81st Cong., 2d sess.), a convention between the United States of America and Canada for the extension of port privileges to halibut fishing vessels on the Pacific coasts of the United States of America, signed at Ottawa on March 24, 1950, which was read the second time, as follows:

PREAMBLE

The Government of the United States of America and the Government of Canada, desiring to further the well-being of their fishermen engaged in the halibut fishery of the North Pacific Ocean by extending to the halibut fishing vessels of each other certain privileges in ports of the Pacific Coasts of the United States of America and Canada, respectively, have resolved for that purpose to conclude a Convention, and to that end have appointed as their Plenipotentiaries:

The Honourable LAURENCE A. STEINHARDT for the United States of America, and

The Honourable ROBERT WELLINGTON MAYHEW for Canada.

Who, having communicated to each other their full powers found in good and due form, have agreed as follows:

ARTICLE I

Fishing vessels of the United States of America engaged in the North Pacific halibut fishery only shall, subject to compliance with applicable customs, navigation, and fisheries laws of Canada, have the privileges in the ports of entry of Canada

(1) to land their catches of halibut and sable fish without the payment of duties and

(a) sell them locally on payment of the applicable customs duty;

(b) trans-ship them in bond under customs supervision to any port of the United States of America; or

(c) sell them in bond for export, and

(2) to obtain supplies, repairs, and equipment.

ARTICLE II

Fishing vessels of Canada engaged in the North Pacific halibut fishery only shall, subject to compliance with applicable customs and navigation laws of the United States of America, have the privileges in the ports of entry of the United States of America

(1) to land their catches of halibut and sable fish without the payment of duties and

(a) sell them locally on payment of the applicable customs duty;

(b) trans-ship them in bond under customs supervision to any port of Canada; or

(c) sell them in bond for export; and

(2) to obtain supplies, repairs, and equipment.

ARTICLE III

This Convention shall be ratified and the instruments of ratification shall be exchanged at Ottawa as soon as possible.

ARTICLE IV

This Convention shall come into effect immediately upon the exchange of ratifications. It shall continue in effect for a period of 1 year from that date and indefinitely after that period, but may be terminated by either of the Contracting Governments at the end of the 1-year period or at any time thereafter provided that at least 12 months prior notice of termination has been given.

In witness whereof the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed the present Convention.

Done at Ottawa, in duplicate, in the English language, both texts being equally authentic, this 24th day of March, 1950.

For the United States of America:

LAURENCE A. STEINHARDT.

For Canada:

R. W. MAYHEW.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The convention is open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the convention will be reported to the Senate.

The convention was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to ask a question. Is this the extension of a treaty we already have?

Mr. MAGNUSON. This is an extension of a treaty which has been in effect since May 24, 1930.

Mr. WHERRY. Is there any new material in the treaty?

Mr. MAGNUSON. There is no new material.

Mr. WHERRY. It simply extends the existing treaty, is that correct?

Mr. MAGNUSON. It extends what has already been in effect.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution of ratification will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive M, Eighty-first Congress, second session a convention between the United States of America and Canada for the extension of port privileges to halibut fishing vessels on the Pacific coasts of the United States of America and Canada, signed at Ottawa on March 24, 1950.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification. [Putting the question.] Two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein, the resolution of ratification is agreed to, and the convention is ratified.

THE KOREAN WAR SITUATION

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, earlier today, in the course of the colloquies relating to the crisis in Korea, I endeavored to obtain recognition but without success.

It was not my desire at the time to belabor the Senate with any lengthy remarks, but I did want the record to disclose that early Monday morning I made my position on this tragic situation known to the public in a statement when called upon by the press. I said then:

Clearly the situation in Korea is fraught with great danger calling for courageous and positive action designed to guarantee the territorial integrity of South Korea against unwarranted aggression.

True, a positive course of action will produce attendant risks of war, but failure on our part to demand full respect for and compliance with the rules of the United Nations, would be interpreted by our foes as a show of cowardice and weakness. We need only to remember Munich and the events subsequent thereto, to realize that the surest and most certain way to war is by the road of appeasement.

If we fail in one crisis, we will fail in others. We must courageously face this situation to test the strength of the world's great democracies and the United Nations.

Mr. President, as I have indicated, these utterances took place prior to any formal statement by the President of the United States on the subject, or prior to any indication as to what course he might follow. Thus, what I desired to say earlier today and what I wish to say now, is that the President has taken a courageous stand. I hope that that stand is not too late. At least it does prescribe a positive plan of operation for appropriate authorities both in the United Nations and our own Government to follow.

In the course of today's colloquies I listened with great interest to the remarks of a number of my distinguished colleagues on both sides of the aisle. I was deeply impressed by the remarks of the distinguished junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], and the distinguished Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND], the distinguished junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], and my own colleague from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. President, I desire to associate myself with their remarks today. I also associate myself with those remarks made on the other side of the aisle which had for their purpose a proper unification of party lines, to the end that America in this crisis will present a united front and furnish a show of the stamina, vigor, and courage which she has shown in every crisis throughout her long and noble history.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, the press makes the following report this afternoon.

WASHINGTON.—The United States asked Russia today to use its influence to bring about the withdrawal of the invading Communist forces from south Korea.

Ambassador Alan G. Kirk delivered the request in a note to the Soviet foreign office at Moscow. The State Department announced the action here.

RECESS

Mr. LUCAS. I move that the Senate stand in recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Wednesday, June 28, 1950, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, JUNE 27, 1950

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. PRIEST.

DESIGNATION OF SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Speaker:

JUNE 27, 1950.

I hereby designate the Honorable J. PERCY PRIEST to act as Speaker pro tempore today.

SAM RAYBURN.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Most merciful and gracious God, who hast been our guide and companion in all our yesterdays, may the memory of Thy great goodness inspire us to meet the challenge of each new day with faith and fidelity.

Grant that our President, our Speaker, and all the Members of this legislative body may be blessed with clear minds and courageous hearts and capacities equal to the tragic needs of our generation.

We pray that, as they take counsel together, they may be guided in some special way by the eternal spirit of God in finding a just and righteous solution to all the problems of human relationships.

May the bonds of unity, which were forged in the heat of battle by freedom-loving nations, never be broken, but may they be strengthened and sustained in the glorious task of building a noble civilization.

In the name of the Prince of Peace. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Carrell, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate has passed, with an amendment in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 7058. An act to amend laws relating to the United States Military Academy and the United States Naval Academy, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 332) entitled "Joint resolution providing for the establishment of a joint Senate and House recording facility," disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. BENTON, Mr. GILLETTE, and Mr. MUNDT to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8567) entitled "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate numbered 11, 12, and 24 to the above-entitled bill.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6567) entitled "An act to increase the borrowing power of Commodity Credit Corporation."

THE LATE HONORABLE FRANCIS D. McGAREY

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Speaker, I pause to pay tribute to the passing in Brooklyn, N. Y., of a great American and a distinguished public servant and jurist, the late Honorable Francis D. McGarey. Judge McGarey spent his entire life in the service of his community and people. Born in Williamsburg September 8, 1893, he started work at the age of 12 as a grocery boy. A brilliant scholar, he graduated from Erasmus Hall High School before he was 15 and from Fordham University Law School as the youngest member of the class and with the highest marks. In 1919, after service in the Army as a lieutenant, he was elected to the board of aldermen and reelected every year until 1933, when he was named assistant counsel to the board of transportation. Later he served as counsel to the Kings County sheriff and in 1939 was elected as a justice of the supreme court of the State of New York. In 1942 he was elected surrogate of Kings County, which office he held until his death.

He was the kind of public servant whom we should all seek to emulate, whose sterling life and qualities will be emblazoned in the hearts and minds of myriads of people who knew him. His activities in the community and in charitable endeavors were many. He was president of the Emerald Association, a life member of the advisory board of the Brooklyn Diocesan Catholic Charities and the Cathedral Club, and from 1946 to 1948 was general chairman of the bishop's lay committee for charity, and served as chairman of numerous drives of the Brooklyn Red Cross and the March of Dimes. These activities were acknowledged by the respect and esteem in which his people held him and by the honors which his church conferred upon him—a past grand knight of Loyola Council, a Knight of St. Gregory, Knight of Malta, and Equestrian Knight of the Holy Sepulcher.

As has been pointed out in the editorial which appeared in the Brooklyn Eagle and which has been inserted elsewhere in the RECORD:

> Surrogate McGarey was a man of unusual capacity and complete integrity. He was faithful to every trust. One of his outstanding characteristics was his deep sense of civic responsibility. It is indeed tragic that he has been cut down in the prime of life, when he could have continued for many years his varied services to the community he loved.

Mr. Speaker, it is indeed tragic and it is the kind of loss that no community can well afford to suffer, for his replacement will be most difficult. The heart of Brooklyn, Mr. Speaker, today is very sad, and its sadness extends to our late distinguished surrogate's fine family—his wife, Irene; his daughter, Mrs. Edward Ward McMahon; and his two sons, Francis, Jr., and Charles, to whom we extend our deepest and sincerest sympathy. He will rest in peace, for he lived in peace with the people he loved and served well.

CONGRESSMEN'S SALARIES SHOULD NOT BE RAISED

Mr. O'SULLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'SULLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, yesterday that superlative legislatrix, the gentlewoman from New Jersey, MARY T. NORTON as a gesture of real appreciation to the legislative ability of the Members of the House of Representatives, introduced H. R. 8951, a bill to raise the salaries of Members of Congress to $20,000 per year.

Due to the fact that the Seventy-ninth Congress passed a bill raising the salaries of Representatives in the Congress to $12,500 a year plus a $2,500 tax-free expense account, I feel that an additional salary raise now is neither timely nor necessary.

I say again as I said when I was elected to the Congress, that I sincerely believe that the present salary of ordinary Congressmen is more than adequate.

It is my thought that outside of the Speaker of the House, the majority and minority leaders, the Republican and Democratic whips, and the chairmen of the various committees of the House, that all other Members of Congress are adequately paid for the legislative initiative, sagacity, and intelligence which they display.

I shall therefore oppose vigorously all efforts at this time when we are plagued with an unbalanced budget and large deficit spending and when money is needed so badly for other worth-while purposes, to raise the salaries of ordinary Congressmen and shall insist upon practicing economy in Government where it hurts Congressmen the worst, to wit, their own pocketbooks.

THE KOREAN WAR

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, today America stands before the world court of public opinion; the Korean war is a challenge to us all. Will America act now and not at some later date "with too little and too late"?

This is the acid test; we have chosen to speak out against the spread of communism and have pledged our resources to stop aggression. If we act now, the little peoples of the world will know that we mean what we have said, but if we fail to act, then all the money that Congress can appropriate for ECA, arms aid, and so forth, will be for naught.

The jitters of war are running pell-mell through every capital of Europe and Asia. Every nation knows that this far-off conflict is a major test of America's will and its prestige.

We cannot, at any cost, let Russia and its puppet state get by with this invasion. The United Nations has spoken, but is powerless to act without the full support of the United States.

I call upon our President and upon us, the Congress, to stand firmly behind the United Nations and to fight back with all of our resources, if need be. This action could be the Manchuria and the Ethiopia of a third world war. Firm, quick, and decisive action now, not next year, can assure the world of a peaceful tomorrow. The decision is today.

TO ESTABLISH OFFICE OF PERMANENT UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR POLITICAL AFFAIRS

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I feel that an effort should be made, a strong and persistent effort which in some way will aid in the establishment of continuity of an unpartisan foreign policy being maintained and administered within this Government.

Because of the paramount position of the United States of America in world affairs today the slightest incident having to do with policy or the administration thereof immediately becomes the center of interest of every capital of every nation in the world. While the advantages of our system are many and great we should be the first to admit certain obvious defects. Keeping in mind the world leadership of this Nation and the widespread interest of the American people in international events, I feel it imperative that everything reasonably possible should be done to assure stability consistent with our system of government in that field of Government administration.

Great strides have been made and I am sure greater will be made to bring to the level of policy making an unpartisan approach. This same sense of agreement and understanding and cooperation is evidenced as well in the execution of such policy. The United States of America is the leading Nation in the world today. There is only one thing for a leader to do, and that is to lead.

That being the case, I feel that it is incumbent upon us to take the lead in establishing within our Department of State, for the purpose of assisting and giving effect to a stable and unpartisan foreign policy, a Government official whose experience and tenure of office at high level in the Department of State will not be subject to violent fluctuations as the result of domestic political change.

Mr. Speaker, for these reasons I have today introduced a bill to establish the office of permanent Under Secretary of State for political affairs.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

[Mr. JUDD addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

INCREASE IN COMPENSATION FOR MEMBERS OF CONGRESS

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I was very much interested in the statement made by the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON] about raising the salaries of Members of Congress to $20,000 a year.

The gentlewoman from New Jersey also placed in the RECORD a list of corporations that were paying large salaries to their executives. If those corporations were running their businesses and going in the red in the same proportion as the United States is going in the red, and then raised the salaries of their executives, do you know what would happen? The next time they had a stockholders' meeting they would all go out the door—every one of them.

The people of this country are the stockholders of this Government, and if you Members think for a minute that you can take the advice of the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON] and raise your salaries to $20,000, I hope the people back home will take recognition of that fact, when this vote for their directors, that means their representatives in government, they will do like the corporate stockholders. So beware of salary increases. Get your house in order, cut down on Government spending, that is your job and mine. That is your duty and mine. That is absolutely necessary. Cut down on spending then we can have tax reduction.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

NAVAL VESSELS LENT TO RUSSIA

Mr. SCRIVNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCRIVNER. Mr. Speaker, at frequent intervals I have called upon the State Department to call for the return of more than 500 naval vessels lent to Russia, all of which are listed in the RECORD for March 9, 1949, on page 2090. Only a few have been sent back to us; all should have been returned long ago.

Mr. Speaker, how many of these United States Navy vessels are now being used against South Korea? Mr. Speaker, how much other United States lend-lease military equipment is being used to ensure the Communist success in Korea?

Mr. Speaker, let us pray that these ships and supplies do not come back in the form of scrap.

THE UNITED NATIONS AND KOREA

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. JAVITS. The wanton aggression against the Republic of Korea, if left unredressed, could end the very life of the United Nations which is and has been the best and perhaps the last hope of the free peoples for peace. Defense against this danger and therefore the hope for world peace calls for invoking the most decisive provisions of the United Nations Charter. The charter, if invoked, is equal to the emergency.

Under chapter XVII, article 106, the United States, Great Britain, and France may consult with one another and with other United Nations members with a view to "such joint action on behalf of the Organization as may be necessary for the purpose of maintaining international peace and security." Under this article a decision by the Security Council, certainly practicable now that the Soviet has walked out, pursuant to article 42 to "take such action by air, sea or land forces as may be necessary to maintain or restore international peace or security" can be implemented. The United States should now take the initiative and state its willingness to contribute its forces to join with those of other members of the United Nations to act at the direction of the Security Council to stop aggression against the Republic of Korea and to bring about peace. The right of self-defense is the most fundamental and precious right of the United Nations and of the world's free peoples; they can utilize it to attain peace and international security.

The unprovoked attack on the Republic of Korea also calls for immediate negotiation on the initiative to be taken by the United States of a Pacific Pact to parallel the Atlantic Pact. Our interests in the Pacific area are no less vital than they are in the Atlantic area and the danger is even more imminent. A guaranty of the territorial integrity of this area under a regional pact pursuant to article 52 of the United Nations Charter will get the nations and free peoples of the Pacific area together so that they may take common action for their own defense, not only militarily but ideologically. I suggest as suitable for inclusion in the Pacific Pact the Philippines, the Republic of Indonesia, Australia, New Zealand, Siam, India, Burma, Pakistan, Malaya, Indochina, the Republic of Korea, and the Republic of China—Formosa.

REDUCTION OF EXCISE TAXES

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD on the bill H. R. 8920.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Speaker, in view of several commitments which I made more than a month ago back in my congressional district, I will have to leave Washington tonight but I want the RECORD to show that I favor the enactment of H. R. 8920, reported out by the Ways and Means Committee.

It is the general consensus of the people back in my district that it is time to reduce the excise taxes which were levied as a wartime, emergency measure. Certainly no businessman should be forced to bear the brunt of special taxes to the point where it injures his business and I believe it is high time they were given the relief they deserve in this connection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

[Mr. RANKIN addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Republican Party expressed in no uncertain terms its disdain for the farmers of the United States. The action was consistent and the party was running true to form. The Eightieth Congress, a Republican Congress, had stripped the Commodity Credit Corporation of its power to buy, build or lease storage for farmers' grain held under Government loan. If that restriction had not been repealed by the present Congress, the price-support program for American agriculture would have been sabotaged and ruined. The Commodity Credit Corporation is the agency that supports the price of not only cotton, wheat, peanuts, tobacco, corn, oats, barley, and rice but many perishable products as well. The Commodity Credit Corporation is the only thing that stands today between the American farmer and bankruptcy. The Commodity Credit Corporation is the only agency that can prevent a return of the 12-cent corn, the 35-cent wheat, the 6-cent cotton, the 3-cent hogs, and the 6-cent eggs we saw in 1932. And yesterday when the bill authorizing funds for Commodity Credit Corporation, in order that the program of agricultural price stabilization could be continued, came up for consideration in the upper body the program was saved from ruin by the vote of only one man. Not a single Republican voted to allow Commodity Credit Corporation the additional funds necessary for the continuation of the price support program. How can any American farmer ever again vote a Republican ticket?

COMPONENTS OF THE SERVICE ACADEMIES

Mr. DURHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 7058) to amend laws relating to the United States Military Academy and the United States Naval Academy, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Page 3, strike out all after line 12 over to and including line 3 on page 4 and insert:

"(c) One hundred and eighty cadets from among enlisted members of the Army of the United States and the Air Force of the United States as follows:

"Ninety from the Regular components (Regular Army and Regular Air Force);

"Ninety from the Reserve components (National Guard of the United States, the Air National Guard of the United States, the Organized Reserve Corps, and the Air Force Reserve).

"Three candidates may be nominated from each component (Regular and Reserve) of the Army of the United States and the Air Force of the United States for each available vacancy for their respective components from among the enlisted members thereof to compete for admission at the annual competitive entrance examination. Such nominations shall be made under such rules and regulations as the Secretary concerned may prescribe. The vacancies for the Regular and the Reserve components will be filled from among such qualified competitors of the respective components making the highest proficiency averages in the order of merit established at the competitive entrance examination, who have served in an active-duty or active-training status (including training performed by members of the National Guard of the United States and the Air National Guard of the United States under provisions of sections 92, 94, 97, and 99 of the National Defense Act, as amended) in such component not less than 1 year."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman who is calling this up if he will explain it to the House? There was unanimous agreement on the part of the conferees in reference to this bill, but I would like to ask the gentleman to explain it at the moment.

Mr. DURHAM. Mr. Speaker, the Senate has passed the bill H. R. 7058 with one minor amendment. Under the House version of the bill there were authorized 180 cadets at the Military Academy who could be appointed from the Regular Army and Regular Air Force, the National Guard, and the Organized Reserves of those services.

Heretofore, the Reserve officers have not participated in this. Under the House bill we provided that these Reserve officers could participate in these appointments.

Enlisted personnel for these components would have been required to compete among themselves for the appointments. Since the Regular Establishments send their enlisted personnel to preparatory schools for the purpose of qualifying for these examinations, the Senate took the position that this might prejudice the opportunity of National Guard men and reservists to receive such appointments.

I agree and concur in that.

Accordingly the Senate divided the 180 positions for cadets into two equal groups. One group of 90 will be filled by competition from within the Regular Army and Regular Air Force. The other group of 90 will be filled by competition from among members of the National Guard and the Organized Reserves of these services.

It would appear that this amendment protects the interest of the National Guard men and the Organized Reserves a little better than the House version.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARENDS. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FULTON. We have recently passed a bill allowing equal graduation leave for each graduate of the two Academies. I understand that the intent of Congress was that the leave given to each of the graduates of the Academies was to be alike. Upon checking, my information is that Annapolis is not this year giving the same graduation leave as at West Point. Annapolis graduation leave is being charged against the future leave of its current graduates instead of the way Congress stated we wanted it. May I ask the committee why that is?

Mr. DURHAM. I cannot explain to the gentleman why we are not doing that because we have passed the legislation. As will be recalled the Academy had leave before and we provided the same for the Naval Academy also under legislation recently passed.

Mr. FULTON. But now I understand the Secretary of the Navy is not giving it to these people who just graduated from Annapolis.

Mr. ARENDS. I might inform the gentleman the gentleman from New York had that before our committee. My understanding from him a moment ago is that the law is in effect and is applicable to the leaves this year. I might ask the gentleman from New York to clarify that.

Mr. FULTON. The intent of Congress was that beginning this graduation each of the graduates of the academies is to be treated alike as to graduation leave.

Mr. COLE of New York. That was the plain intent of the Congress and that is expressly a part of the act itself. I understand with respect to the men who graduated this year that plans had already been made with respect to their assignments so that it would have substantially disrupted the organization and administration of the Navy personnel if they had been given 60 days upon graduation; however, arrangements have been made so that they will get the equivalent of the 60-day leave within the coming 12-month period.

Mr. FULTON. And they are to be treated just the same as the West Point graduates this year?

Mr. COLE of New York. Yes.

Mr. FULTON. One other question. I understand the congressional appointments of Congress to Annapolis this coming year have been cut by one appointment. Is there any move by the committee to replace the funds to give back those appointments to the respective Congressmen?

Mr. DURHAM. Not so far as I know at the present time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

[Mr. CRAWFORD addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Speaker, a while ago I questioned about the Annapolis appointments of Congress, which have recently been reduced one per Member. Unless the Committee on Armed Services comes up with a plan to make adequate housing available at Annapolis, it will be too crowded, I am advised, to have these appointments. Therefore, I respectfully ask the Committee on Armed Services to give consideration to a bill providing adequate housing at the Annapolis Naval Academy to relieve the present overcrowded conditions. We do not need less Annapolis cadets, we need more housing facilities.

I rise to speak this morning about the aggression in Korea. We people of good will in this country want to see the Government of South Korea maintained, as the United Nations Security Council has stated. Congress and the Foreign Affairs Committee had been assured by our Defense Department at the time that the United States troops were about to be withdrawn, that the South Korean Government could maintain itself unless there was outside aggression other than from North Korea. We have found to our sorrow that that statement is almost a fatal conclusion, so that those of us who have objected to the withdrawal of troops now find that a mistake has been made that is almost irrevocable.

The United States needs a positive policy in the Far East while there is yet time, as some of us on the Foreign Affairs Committee have been fighting for these many months. The United States must offer to implement the recommendations of the United Nations Security Council, in cooperation with the other nations. We must make clear that our aim is peace and not war, and that we will cooperate with all nations to maintain a peaceful world, under the United Nations charter, as we have pledged ourselves to do. We must avoid any act of aggression and seek peace.

THE SOUTH KOREAN CRISIS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, for the information of the Members of the House I desire to read a statement just issued by the President:

STATEMENT BY THE PRESIDENT

In Korea the Government forces, which were armed to prevent border raids and to preserve internal security, were attacked by invading forces from North Korea. The Security Council of the United Nations called upon the invading troops to cease hostilities and to withdraw to the thirty-eighth parallel. This they have not done, but on the contrary have pressed the attack. The Security Council called upon all members of the United Nations to render every assistance to the United Nations in the execution of this resolution. In these circumstances I have ordered United States air and sea forces to give the Korean Government troops cover and support.

The attack upon Korea makes it plain beyond all doubt that communism has passed beyond the use of subversion to conquer independent nations and will now use armed invasion and war. It has defied the orders of the Security Council of the United Nations issued to preserve international peace and security. In these circumstances the occupation of Formosa by Communist forces would be a direct threat to the security of the Pacific area and to United States forces performing their lawful and necessary functions in that area.

Accordingly I have ordered the seventh fleet to prevent any attack on Formosa. As a corollary of this action I am calling upon the Chinese Government on Formosa to cease all air and sea operations against the mainland. The seventh fleet will see that this is done. The determination of the future status of Formosa must await the restoration of security in the Pacific, a peace settlement with Japan, or consideration by the United Nations.

I have also directed that United States forces in the Philippines be strengthened and that military assistance to the Philippine Government be accelerated.

I have similarly directed acceleration in the furnishing of military assistance to the forces of France and the associated states in Indochina and the dispatch of a military mission to provide close working relations with those forces.

I know that all members of the United Nations will consider carefully the consequences of this latest aggression in Korea in defiance of the Charter of the United Nations. A return to the rule of force in international affairs would have far-reaching effects. The United Nations will continue to uphold the rule of law.

I have instructed Ambassador Austin, as the representative of the United States to the Security Council, to report these steps to the Council.

I thought that this should be read as quickly as possible to my colleagues of the House so that they might be advised as quickly as possible of the release made by the President a few moments ago.

Outside of that, expressing briefly my own personal views, I think that such action was necessary not only in the national interest of the United States, which is paramount in our minds, but also in the interest of future possible peace.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. DONDERO asked and was given permission to address the House for 15 minutes today, following the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered.

RESCISSION OF HOUSE RESOLUTION 614

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House Resolution 670.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That effective June 9, 1950, House Resolution 614, fixing the salary of the assistant to the disbursing clerk of the House be, and the same is hereby, rescinded.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I understand this is merely the rescission of an increase in pay given to an employee who has since died?

Mr. WALTER. The gentleman is correct.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LANE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in three instances, and include in one a speech, in another a letter, and in the other extraneous matter.

Mr. KEOGH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include an address delivered by Assistant Secretary of the Navy and Acting Chairman of the Federal Maritime Board, John T. Koehler, at the commencement exercises at the Maritime Academy last Wednesday.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include the testimony of Mr. James M. Duffy, president of the National Brotherhood of Operative Potters, before the Steed subcommittee.

Mrs. KELLY of New York (at the request of Mr. HAYS of Ohio) was given permission to extend her remarks and include a newspaper editorial.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include a memorial address.

Mr. WALTER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include an article by the vice president of the American Federation of Labor.

Mr. ADDONIZIO asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include a newspaper article.

Mr. CLEMENTE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include a newspaper editorial.

Mr. JENKINS asked and was given permission to revise and extend the remarks he expects to make in Committee of the Whole and include certain excerpts and tables.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include two articles.

Mr. FORD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include a speech by Brig. Gen. J. P. McConnell.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include an editorial from the Saturday Evening Post under date of June 3, 1950.

Mr. COOPER asked and was given permission to revise and extend the remarks he expects to make in the Committee of the Whole today and to include certain excerpts and extraneous material.

Mr. REED of New York asked and was given permission to revise and extend the remarks he expects to make in the Committee of the Whole this afternoon on the bill H. R. 8920, and to include therein certain tables and extraneous matter.

TEMPORARY APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE FISCAL YEAR 1951

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 492) making temporary appropriations for the fiscal year 1951, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. TABER. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 492, and pending that motion I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to 30 minutes, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from New York and one-half by myself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 492, with Mr. KEOGH in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the joint resolution was dispensed with.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, the general appropriation bill making appropriations for the fiscal year 1951 passed the House several weeks ago and is still pending in the other body. It is now evident it cannot become law by the end of the fiscal year, that is, by midnight June 30, 1950. We therefore offer the customary continuing resolution, which is always offered. I will say this is the usual stereotyped routine resolution with added provision for certain situations which it is necessary to take care of.

Briefly summarizing the joint resolution by sections and paragraphs, section 1 (a) provides for all activities included in general appropriation bill as passed by House; (b) provides for carrying on activities at rate of last quarter of fiscal year 1950 for Office of the Housing Expediter and Selective Service System for which legislative authority so recently enacted as to make impossible submission of 1951 estimates, and Office of High Commissioner in Germany for which estimates must be considered in connection with ECA now pending Senate; (c) provides for continuation three activities in Interior Department which the House proposed be abolished. These activities are now being carried on and the proposal here is merely to continue them in operation until final settlement has been reached with Senate. This does not represent a retreat of House committee from its position in favor of their elimination.

The paragraph also provides for Senate services which were not included in the general appropriation bill.

Section 2 continues available for 1 month balances of 1950 appropriations for those agencies where carry-over funds will be adequate to meet requirements. The limitation on administrative expenses for assistance to Korea is increased $600,000. This amount is necessary, first, to carry through the month of July, and second, to meet the cost of evacuation of dependents of employees and other abnormal expenses incident to the current situation. The increase in administrative expenses, government and relief in occupied areas, is necessary because of necessity of carrying the program one additional month.

Section 3 provides for the District of Columbia. This may not be necessary as the Senate committee has reported the annual bill and, it is possible that final action may be taken before the end of the week.

Section 4 provides that funds made available by the act shall be subject to all provisions of the general appropriation bill, 1951, as passed by House except: In chapter X–A, carrying the Taber-Thomas amendment, application of the amendment is omitted because of the administrative difficulties and the intricate bookkeeping involved. Also because the imposition of arbitrary cutback on agencies involved would result in immediate drastic curtailment of vital Government activities such as Federal Bureau of Investigation, rural mail delivery, and so forth.

Section 1114, the Jensen amendment is made inapplicable for the same reasons as the Taber-Thomas amendment above. It may be argued that the Jensen amendment omits agents of FBI, but he fails to exempt laboratory technicians, fingerprint experts, and other employees of FBI.

Subsection (d) (2) of section 1111 merely waives time limitations on the filing of apportionments under the revised antideficiency act. Such time limitations are not necessary in connection with the temporary resolution.

Section 5 is the usual provision terminating effectiveness of resolution at date of enactment of appropriation bill, 1951, or July 31, 1951, whichever first occurs.

Section 6 is the usual provision regarding charge of expenditures under temporary resolution to appropriations when finally made.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, there is no question but what we must have some kind of continuing resolution because the omnibus appropriation bill which was passed around the 10th of May has not yet been reported by the Appropriations Committee of the other body. On the other hand, this is not the usual type of resolution. There is a great deal in it in addition to the usual resolution. It carries three items, one for the Department of the Interior, the standardization of geographic names, the Indians of California, the National Indian Institute, which were deliberately left out of the bill by the House Committee on Appropriations. It also carries a section 4 which would wipe out, insofar as the period prior to the expiration of this continuing resolution, the amendments which were adopted reducing the amounts by a certain percentage which were available to the departments and providing that vacancies should not be filled except in certain cases.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. FULTON. May I interrupt the gentleman's train of thought to inquire of the majority leader if this commitment of our forces in the Pacific means war? What does it mean? I favor the commitment under the United Nations but I would like to reassure the country as to what it means and that we seek peace by this policy.

Mr. McCORMACK. It is my personal opinion that this constitutes notice that we are operating under and by virtue of action on the part of the United Nations insofar as Korea is concerned. I have stated repeatedly on the floor of the House that strength and power is of vital importance and that the only thing the Communists—and I use the word "Communists" and you can interpret my mind if you want to, so far as the term may describe any particular country—as I say, my personal opinion is that the only thing the Communists respect is that which they fear.

Mr. FULTON. So that there will be no misunderstanding, this is not a commitment to war, but is the United States operating under the Security Council of the United Nations?

Mr. McCORMACK. In connection with Korea, yes; and the logical hope is that it will be the assurance of peace.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. JUDD. Is it not true that the Security Council has no course except to call upon the United States, which is the only Nation with forces in the Far East, to act immediately? We go in there not as an act of the United States, but as the agent of an international organization for peace?

Mr. McCORMACK. There are 11 nations involved, and of course the United States is the one Nation capable of acting in accordance with the action taken by the United Nations only a few days ago. The observation of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JUDD] expresses my own personal opinion, and is correct.

Mr. FULTON. This is an action for peace and is to maintain peace, and is not an act toward war?

Mr. McCORMACK. Absolutely. Of course, that depends upon the consideration of other people that we have no control over, but it is the only action that can be taken in connection with future peace.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Well, I will let this go on for another minute, and then I must get back to the matter under consideration. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I would like to ask this question: According to press reports, we have shot down some northern Korean planes. If a Russian submarine sinks one of our ships in the water over there, would that be undeclared war?

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman certainly asks a question which is purely a supposition. I think we ought to confine ourselves at this time to the facts. I am willing to answer any questions on the existing facts that I can.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. England announced this morning that it was our problem; that she washed her hands of it.

Mr. McCORMACK. I think probably that had better be withheld also.

Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR. I rise to congratulate the administration upon the entry of abdominal fortitude in the far-eastern policy. I am glad to see that guts have finally received their proper recognition after the weak and shifting and virtual absence of any foreign policy at all in the Far East.

Mr. McCORMACK. May I say in reply to that, the House has been very, very cautious and careful, and I am very proud of the fact, and I hope we will continue to be that way. I hope that my friend will reconsider that conclusion. There is no question about the "guts" of a man by the name of Harry S. Truman. We all know that.

Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR. I assure the gentleman I was rising in support of the policy, but again I say it may be too little and too late.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman admires the "guts" and courage of Harry S. Truman, the same as we all do.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield just for a question?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. Can the majority leader advise the House whether any other nation or country is cooperating with us in this move?

Mr. McCORMACK. I am not in a position now to say. I am sure the gentleman can rest content that everything is being done that can be done. I would be glad to answer any questions I can, expressing my own opinion, as of the facts known now; but in the national interest of our country, there are many things which of course it would not be in the interest of our country to bring up.

Mr. DONDERO. I am disturbed by the answer given by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MILLER] that England says she washes her hands of the whole affair.

Mr. McCORMACK. Well, I did not give that answer. The gentleman from Nebraska made that observation based on what he saw in the newspapers. I suggest that we wait and see what develops.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. It was a radio report from England.

Mr. McCORMACK. I have no doubt the gentleman quoted the radio report, but I am making my own observation. I want to be as frank as I can, but I think it would probably be best to wait until we see what the new developments are.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Coming back to the temporary extension under the bill that the gentleman is talking about, does the gentleman see anything in this bill which limits the money expenditure for this month to one-twelfth of the budget, or is this, as I read it, an extension of any amount which might be used?

Mr. TABER. It is any amount that might be used, I am afraid. I am inclined to believe that there should be an amendment that would protect the Treasury against that.

I also feel that section 4 of the resolution should be stricken out. That is the section that provides for a wiping out of the amendments that were offered here by myself and by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. JENSEN], and adopted by the House when the appropriation bill was before the House. I shall offer such an amendment when the time comes.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York has consumed 10 minutes.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR.].

Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR. Mr. Chairman, let me call the attention of this House to the statement made by the President on the 1st day of June of this year in which he said that we were nearer to permanent peace than we have been at any time within the last 5 years. We have just heard his message which indicates that we are at least in a state of active military assistance to an ally. We are in combat. I recall to you Patrick Henry's rejoinder: "The gentleman cries peace, peace; when there is no peace." Meanwhile we march steadily onward toward the dread arbitrament of war. If we are headed toward war let us by all means have the courage to say so, and stay in session to take the necessary action for the prosecution of that war. If we are not proceeding toward war let this administration enlighten us as to all the steps it has taken in the past for the defense of our island chain and of the ramparts which they should have been watching. Now is the time for Mr. Truman to tell us what commitments we have made to our friends and to our enemies and which ones we are living up to. Although he inherited the mistakes of Yalta, he confirmed the same errors at Potsdam, including the indefensible—and undefendable—division of the friendly Korean's Republic along the thirty-eighth parallel. A line without military logic or political reason, an action not in keeping with national honor. Now we are in for it. As Americans, all of us will have to bail out our leaders for their stupid and tragic trust of the Communist bear in the Kremlin.

By the way, who sold the President on ordering Chiang Kai-shek to make no further attempt to attack the Communists in China? This action alone is enough to button up China for the Reds, while the world's attention is focussed on Korea. Let them enlighten us on what steps, if any, have been taken for the attainment of peace in the Orient up until this moment and let them admit, that in all of the preceding months when we on this side have been advocating aid and defense for the island of Formosa and the Philippines and other areas, at least we of the minority have been right in agitating these things. We have been right in pointing out that the recent aid to Korea bill was merely economic, belated, and useless, rather than the early military assistance needed. We are in line with the saying of Dr. Syngman Rhee, head of the Korean Republic, yesterday, that American aid may again be too little, too late.

The road of State Department policy to date leads not to victory but to defeat. We had better drive our course toward victory over communism; if the Communists draw back behind the thirty-eighth parallel there is yet a chance for peace, if they do not, our lines are laid in far from pleasant places these coming days.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there are hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and out of applicable corporate or other revenues, receipts, and funds, for the several departments, agencies, corporations, and other organizational units in each branch of the Government—

(a) Such amounts as may be necessary for the carrying out of projects or activities (not otherwise specifically provided for herein) for which appropriations, funds, or other authority (subject to limitations, restrictions, and permissive provisions) would be made available by the General Appropriation Act, 1951 (H. R. 7786, 81st Cong. 2d sess.), to the extent and in the manner provided for by said act as passed by the House of Representatives on May 10, 1950: Provided, That in no case shall the amount made available hereunder exceed the amount which would have been available under the Budget estimates for 1951 for any project or activity provided for in this subsection.

(b) Such amounts as may be necessary for carrying out, at a rate for operations, exclusive of terminal leave, not in excess of that which obtained in the last quarter of the fiscal year 1950, of projects and activities under the following:

Office of the Housing Expediter, but no funds may be used to pay compensation of any employee in a grade higher than the grade of such employee on May 22, 1950;

Selective Service System;

Government in occupied areas of Germany.

(c) Such amounts as may be necessary for the carrying out, at a rate not in excess of that which obtained in the last quarter of the fiscal year 1950, or that provided for in the Budget estimates for 1951, whichever is lower, for projects and activities under applicable appropriations, as follows:

Legislative branch: Senate; Architect of the Capitol (Senate items);

Department of the Interior:

Standardization of Geographic Names;

Indians of California;

National Indian Institute.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read, as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PHILLIPS of California: On page 2, line 8, after the word "exceed", insert "one-twelfth of."

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment not only for myself but for a number of Members on this side of the aisle who have asked that a statement be made or an amendment adopted referring to the proviso on page 2. I find nothing in this bill which in any way limits the amount of money which may be spent in the extension covered by this resolution. Whether or not that is desirable in all cases may be questionable, but there certainly should be some limitation in this bill upon the amount of money to be spent in the 1 month for which we give the extension under the temporary resolution.

Mr. D'EWART. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. D'EWART. If I read the gentleman's amendment correctly, it is one-twelfth of the budget estimates, not one-twelfth of what was appropriated by the House?

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. One-twelfth of the budget estimate, according to the printed resolution. That is an important point.

We face the situation that there are agencies which operate upon the basis of equal twelfths; and that there are agencies which operate upon a larger need of budget money during certain seasons; but I think there should be a statement here or some limitation placed upon the amount of money which is to be spent in the 1-month period. I think my amendment should be adopted and the matter further clarified in the other body or in conference.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the limitations which the gentleman suggests are now in existence. They are already in operation in the accounting system of the Government and in this bill.

In the first place, Mr. Chairman, it is wholly impossible to divide and allot many of the annual expenditures by 12. For example, the appropriations for roads, road construction and road maintenance cannot be divided by twelfths because much of the work, the construction in particular is seasonal. That is also true of rivers and harbors and flood control work. They can work only at certain seasons of the year. The peak of their activity naturally is in the summer months. It is impracticable, if not impossible, to allot their funds one-twelfth for each month.

That is also true of the Forestry Service and many other activities of the Government. Obviously it would be impracticable to attempt to allocate and expend one month's fund at a time, equally throughout the year.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. May I ask the chairman, did we not write a provision of that kind into the bills that we passed last year under somewhat similar circumstances?

Mr. CANNON. Oh no; no such provision is carried by current bills.

Furthermore, reverting again to the pending amendment there are two safeguards which prevent the catastrophe which the gentleman from California is seeking to avoid. Under this bill this money used by the various activities for which it makes provision must be released by the Bureau of the Budget and by the General Accounting Office. Now, I am certain everybody will agree they are not going to release undue sums or disproportionate amounts. The gentleman urges a limitation. There is the limitation, both of these agencies must agree that any proposed expenditure authorized by this joint resolution is reasonable and fair and is actually required.

Furthermore, in the last section of the bill on page 4, section 6, line 20, it also is provided that the funds used pursuant to the authority granted by this bill shall be deducted from their annual funds when such funds are made available by the enactment of the General Accounting Act. So it will be seen that there would be no inducement for them to use any undue amounts. If they did so, it would be taken out of the funds given them in the annual bill.

From any point of view, Mr. Chairman, there is no reason why this amendment should be tacked on the bill. And there is every reason it should not be. I trust the committee will reject the amendment.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, it occurs to me that part of the difficulty arises out of the language which appears in lines 7 to 11 on page 2. It depends on how you read them. The proviso says:

Provided, That in no case shall the amount made available hereunder exceed the amount which would have been available under the budget estimates for 1951 for any project or activity provided for in this subsection.

Now, if that had said under the 1951 budget estimates, it would be clear that it applied to the estimates under whatever limitation might be. But, you can read that proviso to mean that the amount available would be the amount available for the fiscal year 1951 which, of course, I think, would not be reading it in accordance with the intent of the draftsmanship. I think it is important to have the intent clear, because in one instance, I recall, in the funds for the National Housing Agency, the House by a roll-call vote made a very substantial reduction in the budget estimates. If that agency should proceed to expend in the next month the amount of money that would be available for 1951, or to proceed on any such scale as the budget estimates, they would certainly find themselves in considerable trouble if the action of the House is sustained by the other body or sustained in conference.

Mr. D'EWART. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. D'EWART. Would the gentleman, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, explain what the National Indian Institute is, and what funds are to be made available for it? That is to be found on page 3, line 5.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I would like to yield to some member of the subcommittee handling the appropriations for the Department of the Interior to answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman wishes, I will answer the gentleman's question. However, may I first answer the proposition submitted by the gentleman from South Dakota by saying that this provision in the bill to which he refers is an economy measure. The purpose here is to make available in each instance the lowest amount. In some cases the lowest amount is in the House bill. In some cases the lowest amount is in the budget estimate. It will be recalled that, unfortunately, in a few instances we exceeded the budget estimate in the bill. So this provision is carried here to make certain that we always take the lowest sum. If the sum carried by the House bill is the lowest, then that is the sum which governs.

On the other hand, if the figure in the House bill exceeded the budget estimate, and the budget estimate is less than the House bill, then the budget estimate governs. So the whole purpose of this provision is economy. It is included here to be certain that we take the lowest amount.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I am glad to hear the chairman make that statement, and I think it clarifies the situation on that point. Now if the chairman would, will he answer the question put by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. D'EWART]?

Mr. CANNON. In response to the inquiry of the gentleman from Montana, the item in line 5 on page 3, the National Indian Institute, provides for an agency created by Executive order in 1941 pursuant to a provision of an international convention at Mexico City in 1940. The United States officially adhered to this proceeding, and it was ratified by the Senate in 1941. The functions of the Institute are administered in the Bureau of Indian Affairs. The Institute is actually a working unit of the Indian Bureau and is responsible for making preparations for periodic inter-American Indian conferences and handling the many other inter-American Indian matters rising in connection with the 1941 treaty. It is imperative, of course, that we have some such authority. It contributes to the comity between the sister republics of the Western Hemisphere.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. How much money is used for that purpose?

Mr. CANNON. Twenty-two thousand five hundred dollars is the amount carried annually, and is the amount proposed in the budget estimate for the current year.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, we have heard words read here by our distinguished majority leader which I think will mark a disastrous course, and the words I am using do not adequately describe the disastrous consequences this course will have on the people of the United States unless checked by the people themselves.

I refer specifically to these words the majority leader read from the President's statement:

In these circumstances I have ordered United States air and sea forces to give the Korean Government troops cover and support.

Then again the President is quoted:

Accordingly I have ordered the Seventh Fleet to prevent any attack on Formosa.

This means the utilization of Americans in our Armed Forces in two civil wars, one that is taking place in Korea and one that is well nigh completed in China. For all purposes, we were at war with the government and people of Korea, and we might as well face it, the moment these words were enunciated.

I would be remiss to the things in which I believe if I did not stand up here and state my opinion on this matter. After all, Mr. Chairman, you live only once, and it is best to live one's life with one's conscience than to temporize or accept with silence those things which one believes to be against the interests of one's people and one's nation.

The argument is advanced here that this action can be justified as a result of the United Nations Charter. That has been the tenor of the argument. I disagree with any such contention. However, I say that when we agreed to the United Nations Charter we never agreed to supplant our Constitution with the United Nations Charter. The power to declare and make war is vested in the representatives of the people, in the Congress of the United States. That power has today been usurped from us with the reading of this short statement by the President to the people of the world. We here in Congress are asked to supinely accept this usurpation of our right as representatives of the American people. We have abdicated it for I have heard no protest, I have heard not a single word against it. I have no other recourse but to stand up and point out exactly what this action is, how it violates our Constitution, our democratic traditions, and how it deprives the American people of the right to express themselves on the vital question of war and peace, a power and a right properly vested in the representatives of the American people, the Congress, by those who wisely wrote our Constitution.

I know we are going to have and we have been having a lot of war drum beating. The beating of the war drums has been such that they may drown out reason. But I think it is time, before it is too late, that we pause and take inventory of what has happened in Asia.

We have been warned time and time again and all signs in Asia have been pointing to what? That the people of Asia, the people of China, have been seeking national liberation, and that aspiration for national liberation has been and is supreme in the very existence of the people of Asia. In China we spent $3,000,000,000 on Chiang Kai-shek. He controlled the mainland, he controlled the Government, he controlled the army, he controlled everything. Our $3,000,000,000 did not save him, because I tell you neither $3,000,000,000, nor any amount of billions, would ever defeat the desire of 400,000,000 Chinese to establish for themselves their own form of government, no more than billions of dollars could have stopped us to establish for ourselves our own form of government in 1776.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO] has expired.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent and the indulgence of this Committee to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I thank the Committee for giving me this extra time.

So the people of China asserted themselves. Formosa is just as much a part of China as Staten Island is a part of New York. Here we are told that the United States Fleet is to intercede and to interfere and attempt to stop the people of China from carrying out their own will in their own country.

I remember the words I said here on February 7 about Korea. I stated in the well of this House that the defense of tyranny was never in the best interests of the people of the United States. I pointed out the similarity between the rottenness that existed in the Chiang Kai-shek government and that existing in the South Korean Government—the imprisonment of 40,000 people; the harsh exploitation of the people, the feeling of unrest, and the contempt for the rulers of South Korea on the part of the general masses of the people. It was a government imposed on the people of Korea by force of arms, a police state; and I stated at that time that that Government could not long endure, that it would be wiped out by the will of the people of Korea.

I also said at that time that you cannot take a nation and draw a line through it and divide it and split into two countries a nation which is an ethnic unity, a people united culturally and racially over centuries. But we tried to do it. The United Nations itself recognized that that could not be done, and set up a United Nations commission to bring about a united country in Korea, and to carry out the will of the people for a united and independent country. The tyrannical rulers of South Korea continued to deny this legitimate aspiration of the people, ruthlessly suppressed every endeavor on the part of the people to achieve this objective and thus created an irrepressible conflict.

Here now we are sending American aviators to lay down their lives, sending American sailors to lay down their lives, and who knows how soon it will be before our infantry will be sent to lay down their lives to defend, aid and abet tyranny and perpetrate aggression against the Korean people who strive for a united and independent nation.

Now, you may want this action. I do not. I know that the American people will not want this action when they think it over, and I know that they will thrust through this terrible dark cloud of war that has been descending on them. Oh, yes, you can indulge in attacks on communism. You can keep on making impassioned pleas for the destruction of communism, but I tell you that the issue in China, in Asia, in Korea and in Viet Nam is the right of these peoples to self-determination, to a government of their own, to independence and national unity.

Remember one thing: A bomb was dropped on Hiroshima. It had terrible consequences, but it did not frighten the people of China and it did not frighten the people of Korea. For again, these people despite the terror of the atom bomb have refused to abandon their efforts for national liberation. They will no more abandon this objective than the American people did during our Revolution.

I also say, Mr. Chairman, that in the light of this background that before this action can be taken this question should be debated here and decided here. The vote must be taken here by us as representatives of the American people whether or not American aviators and American seamen shall be shot down, their blood spilled in defense of tyranny in a conflict similar to our own Civil War. That is a power which is vested in us by the Constitution. I shall do all that I can—alone perhaps, but living with my conscience—to oppose this course which is not in the defense of the best interests of the American people.

War is not inevitable; there are alternatives, but this declaration on the part of President Truman is an acceptance of the doctrine of the inevitability of war. I stand here and challenge that doctrine. I say that the ingenuity of Americans and people all over the world challenge this doctrine.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Not at this time.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman challenged a statement.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I challenge that doctrine.

Mr. McCORMACK. Where does the doctrine start?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. That is not the question here, but since you have asked the question I repeat the doctrine in this crisis originated with Truman.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentleman from New York that war is not inevitable; but certainly if we were to follow his advice this Nation would gradually surrender nation after nation to Soviet imperialism. I think war under those circumstances would be inevitable.

The gentleman from New York says that the action of the President will lead to disaster. I contend that any other action by the President of the United States would lead to disaster.

I think there are striking parallels between what has happened in Korea and what happened in the recent past. We must stop, look, listen, and counsel with one another. The gentleman from New York talks as if this were an action by Korean patriots; this is an action by pawns of Soviet imperialism. What difference is there in the action of northern Koreans today and the actions which led to the Second World War? Talk about parallels. This is similar to Mussolini's invasion of Ethiopia, this is similar to Hitler's reoccupying the Rhineland, this is an exactly similar parallel to Japan's moving into Manchuria. Time after time it has been proven that inaction, that willingness to shut one's eyes to injustice eventually leads to war. Appeasement and indifference will not stop wars. We know that Russian imperialism seeks the domination of all the world. Let us not think that should the United States sit idly by and do nothing as one nation after another is conquered by Russia and Russian satellites that the United States itself would remain free. Under those circumstances there would be no alternative, the United States of America would stand by itself in a world completely dominated by Soviet Russia, a world where the entire balance of power, and economic, and material, and military resources would be in the hands of the Soviet Union.

Certainly the President of the United States cannot sit idly by, nor this Congress, and condone such circumstances or permit them to continue throughout the world. I feel that the next 50 years will determine the course of western civilization for the next 2,000 years. People of power, courage, and purpose will make that decision. Let us hope they will be people endowed with decency and a sense of freedom; and certainly, if we are to be successful and the civilization that we know is to remain, it is most important that the United States recognize the freedom of people all over the world and not stand idly by and allow Russia to take one nation after another as she has done in the past. That, itself, will lead to war and the action of the President in putting a stop to what is happening in Korea I cannot help but feel will restrict the further spreading of any general war because Russia when she realizes the determination of the United States will stop at that point.

She stopped in Berlin, she stopped in Greece, she stopped in Iran. If we want peace we will get it if we are strong. "Peace through strength" should be the slogan of the United States. We should not continue to back away time and time again because Russia seeks to make a move unilaterally and we allow her to make the move. If successful, from that time on she probes further and further and further.

I am sure that the people of the United States of America will back up the conduct of the President of the United States because the conduct of the President of the United States today will lead to peace, not to war. If the President of the United States followed the advocacy of the gentleman from New York it would lead to a general world war and if it continues much longer we of the United States of America will ourselves have our back to the wall. I am sure that the Congress and people of this country will back the President of the United States in this important issue and not the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO].

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO], either with deliberate intent or through ignorance, sees fit to defend upon this floor time and time again the naked acts of aggression against various free governments of this world which are directed and dictated from Moscow. He undertook to defend the action of the Communist Party in Italy back in March of this year. I felt impelled at that time to take the floor and set him straight on a few facts.

He talks today about the nations of Asia determining for themselves which sort of government they are going to have. I wonder who he thinks he is kidding? You know and I know that the march of Red communism across China was not dictated by the Chinese people. It was dictated by the Kremlin, it was financed by the Kremlin, and the armies which marched across China were armed by the Kremlin. This invasion from North Korea against South Korea is not the will of the Korean people. It is directed by a bunch of gangsters who have been sent in from Russia or Manchuria, armed with Russian planes and Russian guns to nibble off another nation and add it to the list of the conquered.

If we sit idly by and allow them to do it, they will subject the free nations of the world one by one to a state of slavery. If we do nothing they will conquer the free world on the installment plan, with the United States as the final installment. Oh, I remember when Mein Kampf was in every library in America and we had the privilege of reading it. Hitler said what he intended to do, but we did not want to believe him. Stalin has just issued a book in which he says that he intends, and it is the intent of the Communist revolutionists to destroy democracies, to destroy capitalism, to uproot the church, and to subject human decency and liberty throughout the world to the rule of a few men who have as their greatest desire the degradation of everything that Americans hold dear.

I suppose that if the Russians marched into Austria the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO] would say that it is the will of the Austrian people. I was in Austria last fall, just a week before the elections. With half of that country occupied by Russian troops a free election was held. What percentage of the Austrian people voted for communism? Just a fraction less than 6 percent. Yet if the Russian-dominated Communist Army would march into Austria, I can almost hear the gentleman down in the well of this House say that it is the will of the Austrian people that they be enslaved. What unadulterated tommyrot and propaganda.

Mr. Chairman, I am not afraid of the decision of the American people upon what the President has done, because they know as we know that he is acting in the long-range interest of the United States as we know it, and according to democracy as it exists and is understood in the world today. He is acting to preserve the peace by letting Russia know that we have had enough aggression and conquest. He is speaking to the Communists in the only language they understand.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FULTON].

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Chairman, in the House today this is a time of high feeling and critical decision, and we people who want to see the right course taken by the United States must feel sure that those who disagree with us have the right to speak. Instead of criticizing and instead of aiming bellicose words at one man in this House we ought to be reassured that the advocates of a certain point of view have the right to stand up here and say it. So I want to say to the gentleman from New York, that you have at least one person in the House who will sit and listen to you, including many other Members, because yours is a criticism of the formation of a policy that the United States is embarking upon that will affect the whole 100 years ahead of us. The effects of the policy announced today will have their trends in events that will take place throughout the lifetime of each of us. Each of us, if we are fair in this House, must restrain ourselves from name calling, must settle ourselves down and say to the gentleman from New York "You keep on speaking because no matter whether we disagree with you, you certainly speak honestly" and I might even say this afternoon under the temper of certain portions of this House, "and bravely."

When we examine the policy that the United States is embarking upon by the announcement of the President today, the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House, the Committee on Armed Services of the House, the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate and the Committee on Armed Services of the Senate must meet and agree to proceed upon a bipartisan basis for the implementation of such policy.

My feeling this morning, therefore, is, first, that when Congress and the President agree upon a policy that it be not a party policy, but a United States policy. Secondly, that it be a bipartisan policy completed after full examination by both parties, and that we listen to opposition in order better to make that policy. Thirdly, that when we implement such a policy it be not a unilateral policy by the United States or by the President of the United States alone, but it be done sincerely through the United Nations and through its instrumentalities. This policy must be blended under the United Nations, and we must conform to the actions of the Security Council of the United Nations and adopt their suggestions and decisions.

It should be emphasized that this is a policy of peace to maintain the status quo and to implement the United Nations, so that it should be the instrument of peace that we all expect it to be. Might I say that today when the President has acted, in his statement he has said that the Security Council called upon all members of the United Nations to render their assistance to the United Nations in the execution of the resolution of the Security Council.

In closing I will concur, as a Republican, in a bipartisan policy in support of the United Nations. I hope that we can rise above partisanship in order to have an affirmative United States policy in the Pacific and keep safe these good shores of ours so that no American girl or boy will lose his or her life in a possible world war III.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. Funds available in the fiscal year 1950 are hereby continued available until July 31, 1950, for the following:

Economic cooperation.

Assistance to the Republic of Korea; and the limitation on administrative expenses is increased from $1,500,000 to $2,100,000.

Government and relief in occupied areas; and the limitation on administrative expenses is increased from $42,500,000 to $44,500,000.

Displaced Persons Commission.

Mutual defense assistance.

International Children's Emergency Fund.

SEC. 3. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized to incur obligations and make expenditures therefor from applicable funds and revenues of said District, as may be necessary to carry out projects and activities, to the extent and in the manner provided for by the District of Columbia Appropriation Act, 1951, as passed by the House of Representatives on May 23, 1950: Provided, That obligations and expenditures hereunder shall be subject to applicable provisions of the General Appropriation Act, 1951, as passed by the House of Representatives on May 10, 1950.

SEC. 4. Appropriations and funds made available, and authority granted, pursuant to sections 1 and 2 of this joint resolution shall be subject to the provisions of the General Appropriation Act, 1951, as passed by the House of Representatives on May 10, 1950, except chapter X-A and section 1114, but such appropriations and funds shall not be subject to the time limitations set forth in subsection (d) (2) of section 1111.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TABER: On page 4, lines 5 to 12, strike out section 4.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I have offered this amendment to strike out section 4, which wipes out, insofar as the lifetime of this continuing resolution is concerned, the provisions of the so-called Taber-Thomas amendment and the Jensen amendment, which were adopted to the general appropriations bill when it was under consideration on the 10th of May 1950.

If we are going by subterfuge, and that is about what this is, to back-track, it is about time that we began to wake up. I think we should stand by our position. We should not wipe out those provisions but should permit them to continue and to be amended until the final bill is passed, and then we should support them insofar as we are able when the bill comes back from the Senate. The only way I can see to do this is by striking out section 4. That I request the House at this time to do.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. JENSEN. If this section is left in the bill, it says in effect that the House will capitulate completely, before we even have a meeting with the Senate in conference, as to that part of the appropriation bill which the House passed which pertains to section 1114. The gentleman's amendment has that in mind. We say right now without further ado that the House capitulates.

Mr. TABER. That is right. To that I am opposed.

Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will be adopted.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, of course this amendment is wholly impracticable. This is merely a stopgap resolution to service the interim—a few days at most—between the end of the fiscal year and the enactment of the annual bill.

It is an entirely different proposition to apply these two amendments to the annual bill, where there will be opportunity to adopt it, to prepare for it, to make adjustments, and to iron it out in conference— than the proposition of putting those two amendments into effect in every department in the United States Government next Monday morning. It simply cannot be done. The detail, the bookkeeping, the adjustment is such that it could not be effected between now and that time.

Let us see what would be the practical result. Take for example the appropriation for travel in the mail service. There would be a 20-percent reduction in the travel allowance of the mail service. That means that on every rural route in the United States they must immediately reduce to a 4-day delivery or they must discontinue serving one-fifth of their patrons next Monday morning.

How absurd it is. And that applies to many Federal activities.

Consider an agency drastically important to the United States in this international crisis—the FBI. If this amendment is agreed to it reduces by 10 percent the personnel and by 20 percent the travel allowance of the FBI. Everybody knows that a large part of the expenses of the FBI is for travel, not only in this country, but in every country in the world where the FBI is operating, and where it is effectively protecting the interest of the United States.

On next Monday morning we would cut one-fifth of the travel out. Why, it is utterly ridiculous, Mr. Chairman. It simply cannot be done. These limitations must be kept in this bill. I trust the House will vote down the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word and rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I have to disagree with the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. CANNON], but as a Member of the House of Representatives I do not want to be thrown in the position of starting to vote for war appropriations. In other words, I would rather join the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] and stick to the House appropriation bill as it passed this body. Then, after the other body considers the appropriations in some 5 or 6 weeks, which it undoubtedly will, and if, in the meantime, we wish to take up a war budget, then let it be a war budget.

But if we are still in peacetime, which personally I do not think we are, because I think the President today issued a declaration of war—I think this is a show-down, and I am not worrying too much about that—I am in favor of this amendment which has been offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], which simply means that we should stick to the House bill as it was passed. Is that correct, may I inquire of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER]?

Mr. TABER. That is correct.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is the way I understand the whole proposition. I do not think the accounting difficulties are at all impossible. Therefore, I have to disagree with the chairman of the committee [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. Chairman, on this question of the situation in the Far East I think there are many people in my district who would welcome knowing what my attitude is. This is a campaign year, and I do not mind telling them. I stated on the floor of the House last week, before the southern Korea incident developed, that I thought we were 9 months behind time. I think General MacArthur and his staff in Tokyo as far back as last October gave the administration every warning on earth necessary to give anybody. But subsequent to that time the administration substantially wrote Formosa off the sheet. The Secretary of Defense and the Chief of Staff went over there recently, also Mr. Dulles and some others, and came back a few days ago with their reports, and about the time they landed somebody decided to make the move in Korea.

Insofar as I am concerned, I want to say here categorically and specifically, as I have said before, that my life and what I have is dedicated to the proposition of defending our far eastern line, including Japan and Formosa and the Philippines, to the last man, if necessary, in order to offset the Communist movement out of Moscow.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield.

Mr. MASON. When General Bradley and Mr. Johnson came back after their conference with General MacArthur, before they could even report, our Secretary of State pulled the rug out from under their feet, and that was the go-ahead sign for this thing in Korea.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I understand that, but in the light of all that has happened since July 1945, where, so far as I know, Russia has never been stopped at a single spin of the wheel, for not a single barrier has been put in her way to actually stop her progress. Why, I do not know; but here is the show-down, and if we have anything in our hearts and souls and backbones whatsoever, let us gear our people and our energy to the proposition of deciding once and for all what we are going to do about the Russian movement. If we want to go along with her, then let us stop all of these war appropriations, crawl in bed with Russia and live with her as best we can. Either cut all of that out or let us put everything we have on the barrelhead and say, "This is the show-down, once and for all."

I do not think anybody has any reason to misunderstand my position on this matter. I am tired of bleeding our people to death, shipping our substance all over the earth, without first a decision. I would like to see these two great bodies of Congress take this matter up in the next 5 or 10 days and debate it as the first issue before our people, and reach a decision on it; take it out of the hands of the State Department, if you please, and let the Congress of the United States now decide what we are to do. But in the meantime stop the advance in southern Korea, Formosa, and the Philippines, and protect our defense line over there.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remaining 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROONEY].

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Chairman, I shall devote the 5 minutes I have been allotted to close debate in discussing the pending amendment and the pending resolution and nothing else.

This amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] must be decisively defeated. The present general proposition in a nutshell is: Do you want to enact a continuing resolution to permit the various Government agencies to properly function from July 1 until such time as the other body takes action on the omnibus appropriation bill, which it has had before it since last May 10, and concerning which its Appropriations Committee has been holding daily hearings? With the world situation such as we find it today, a fairly reasonable status quo must be maintained in these various Government departments and agencies at least until the other body acts, until the 1951 fiscal year appropriation bill is passed by the Senate. Then the conferees on the part of each body may meet, and the House conferees will come back to the House with a picture which will be in true line with the world situation as of that date.

The distinguished and learned chairman of the full Appropriations Committee, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], previously mentioned to you an item which I feel is of the greatest importance in connection with your vote on the pending amendment. That is the appropriation for the Federal Bureau of Investigation. Last January 13 Director J. Edgar Hoover, of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, came before the subcommittee on appropriations of which I happen to be chairman, and requested 700 additional employees for the coming fiscal year, beginning July 1, which is right at the end of the present week; 325 new agents, and the balance in important clerical personnel. He stated that he needed over 600 of these new employees to afford greater investigative coverage in the field of internal security, particularly in connection with clandestine activities of the Communist Party, United States of America, and other groups who aim at our national security.

The committee saw fit, unanimously—there was no political partisanship involved—to grant this request for 700 additional employees for the Federal Bureau of Investigation. What happened since that action of your subcommittee and the subsequent ratification by the full appropriations committee and since the reading for amendment without successful amendment of the chapter which contains appropriations for the Federal Bureau of Investigation, just one item in the appropriation chapter for the Departments of State, Justice, Commerce, and the Federal Judiciary? The ill-advised Taber amendment of May 10 which was subsequently but unfortunately adopted by the House, and I am sure without full and adequate consideration of the consequences involved, completely nullified the committee's work and cut moneys for travel to the extent that the Federal Bureau of Investigation would be utterly crippled in the coming fiscal year insofar as even their normal operations are concerned. I point this out to you as merely one of a great many similar items.

Finally, the resolution now under consideration merely continues appropriations until such time as the other body acts and the appropriations are finally passed or July 31, 1950, whichever first occurs. To strike section 4 from it would only complicate matters far beyond the complications and devastating effect of the Taber amendment of last May 10.

Let us adopt the continuing resolution in the form in which it was drawn and as approved by the committee on appropriations. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, the pending amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] should now be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. Appropriations and funds made available, and authority granted, pursuant to this joint resolution, shall remain available until (a) enactment into law of an appropriation for any project or activity provided for herein, or (b) enactment of the applicable appropriation act by both Houses without any provision for such project or activity, or (c) July 31, 1950, whichever first occurs.

SEC. 6. Expenditures from appropriations or funds made available pursuant to this joint resolution shall be charged to any applicable appropriation or fund whenever a bill in which such applicable appropriation or fund is contained is enacted into law.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the resolution back to the House with the recommendation that the resolution be passed.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. KEOGH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration House Joint Resolution 492, he reported the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HOUR OF MEETING TOMORROW

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

REDUCTION OF EXCISE TAXES

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I call up the resolution (H. Res. 666) providing for the consideration of House bill 8920, a bill to reduce excise taxes and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8920) to reduce excise taxes, and for other purposes, and all points of order against said bill are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 2 days, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Ways and Means, the bill shall be considered as having been read for amendment. No amendment shall be in order to said bill except amendments offered by the direction of the Committee on Ways and Means, and said amendments shall be in order, any rule of the House to the contrary notwithstanding. Amendments offered by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means may be offered to any section of the bill at the conclusion of the general debate, but said amendments shall not be subject to amendment. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

REVENUE ACT OF 1950

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Ways and Means of the House unanimously requested a closed rule on the revenue bill (H. R. 8920), that this rule makes in order, and pursuant to said request, the Committee on Rules unanimously granted a rule of their asking.

The rule provides for 2 days of general debate, closed as to amendments, except that amendments offered only by the Committee on Ways and Means will be in order, and all points of order against said bill or amendments thereto are waived.

Though the bill does not carry out the President's recommendations or my hopes in this matter, I realize that legislation, after all, is a compromise. Nevertheless, I must congratulate the Democratic members of the Committee on Ways and Means for their strenuous work during the past 5 months in an effort to report a bill which would repeal or at least reduce some of the wartime excise taxes. I want to compliment the committee on the finest report ever to reach the House.

I feel confident that had it not been for the Republican opposition in Committee and elsewhere, the excise taxes would have been reduced even further, if not repealed altogether. But having failed to eliminate the many loopholes in our extant tax laws, it was impossible to repeal the excise tax altogether. Unfortunately, the committee failed to place a sufficient tax on the so-called hundreds of charitable trust, family foundations, private trusts, and educational institutions which would have provided additional revenue.

As I understand, our Republican friends were willing to repeal the excise taxes but were unwilling to provide sufficient additional revenue to compensate for our loss of same, and have refused to vote for plugging the loopholes as I suggested. This reminds me of a former Member of this House from Tennessee, Mr. Austin, who voted for all appropriation bills but never for a revenue bill, believing that this would endear him to his constituency. But they did not approve of his attitude and retired him to private life which will surely happen to many of my Republican friends who promise and advocate the repeal of the excise taxes but fail to provide additional revenue to take its place. It is certainly to be regretted that in these prosperous days before us, as all reliable sources indicate, the Republicans are unwilling to vote for legislation reducing the deficit and bring about sufficient revenue to reduce our bonded indebtedness. The present bill lessens our national revenue by $12,000,000 when by right there should have been a surplus created of from $3,000,000,000 to $5,000,000,000. When, oh, when, Mr. Speaker, will we start to reduce our bonded indebtedness, if not now in the most prosperous days?

LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES

I for one, of course, am pleased that this bill contains a retroactive tax provision as to the large life insurance companies that have been milking the public and getting away with murder since 1947 when they paid no tax at all. As a matter of fact, in 1946 the life insurance companies paid into the Treasury $22,000; in 1945, $25,000; in 1944, $35,000; this, notwithstanding the fact that due to the increased longevity they failed to reduce their high premiums, which I am reliably informed, are at least 20 percent above the premiums charged in Great Britain and other countries. In 1948, for example, when the life insurance companies paid no tax at all under the old formula, the face amount of life insurance in force was $202,000,000,000 on which the premiums paid were $7,200,000,000, by 78,000,000 people who owned 188,000,000 individual policies. The total assets of life insurance companies in 1948, were $55,600,000,000, and the total reserves were $48,200,000,000, yielding a return of $2,400,000,000, which has been tax exempt.

PERCENTAGE DEPLETION ALLOWANCE

For the past 24 years the billion-dollar oil and gas combines received and have been receiving a depletion allowance of 27½ percent which was given them under a Republican administration. In fact, this depletion allowance exceeds by far—many times—the original investments of these companies. Instead of reducing or eliminating this allowance, the bill increases the percentage depletion allowance in the case of coal from 5 to 10 percent and sets up a new group of minerals to which depletion allowance is available at the rate of 5 percent, notwithstanding the high prices that the coal barons obtain for the coal which is nearly three times as high as it was 10 years ago.

It is estimated that these changes in the percentage depletion allowance will reduce the revenues by about $35,000,000 a year when fully effective. If the depletion allowance to the oil and gas companies had been reduced, as it should have been, we would have netted at least two or three times as much additional revenue in this respect.

I shall not explain the 10-percent withholding tax on the part of corporations on dividends from stockholders, for I was in the hopes that this bill would increase our revenue; instead it leaves a deficit, and that, as I said before, during the most prosperous times in the history of our country.

NO WORKABLE MAJORITY

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, I do not blame the sincere Democratic members of the Committee on Ways and Means who unfortunately found themselves in the same position I frequently find myself on my own committee, not having a workable majority to carry out the President's and Administration recommendations and policies which are invariably in the interests of the small taxpayers and at the same time aim to provide for the reduction of our bonded indebtedness to which my Republican friends so gleefully refer; though they are actually responsible for same. It was through their activities that we still, after 9 years, have excise taxes for the little fellow, and loopholes for the big fellow. In lieu of repealing the excise taxes in 1945, they repealed the excess profits tax and reduced the corporation tax, due to the working coalition that existed and which cost the Treasury $6,000,000,000; in 1948, they reduced income tax on individuals in the wealthy brackets by $5,000,000,000, and thereby gave relief, first of all, to the large corporations again and the wealthy tax brackets, instead of to the general public. I again call your attention to the fact that had you Republicans been sincere we could have repealed the excise taxes and plugged all the loopholes of the present laws. Day in and day out you attack the reckless spending, but you at all times vote to appropriate millions upon millions of dollars, however, as you did in the river and harbor-flood control "pork barrel" bill, and in fact, invariably, for all appropriations that to some extent are "political sop" or "handouts" to your particular district or State, and thus increase the deficit.

Mr. Speaker, in view of conditions and believing that one-half a loaf is better than no loaf at all, I am for this bill and hope that the next Congress will give the Democrats a real working majority, and the unholy coalition will not be able to thwart real democratic efforts to carry out the Jeffersonian principle of "equal rights to all and special privileges to none."

Mr. Speaker, these are some of my views on this important bill. Not being able to appear before the Committee on Ways and Means during the long course of their diligent hearings on same, I sent Chairman DOUGHTON a letter setting forth my views in detail. I mentioned the names of some large charitable trusts and uncharitable trusts that were formed solely for the purpose of evading our tax laws.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, under unanimous consent I embody at this point in the RECORD that letter and my views contained therein in my remarks:

Hon. ROBERT L. DOUGHTON,
Chairman, Committee on Ways and Means, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Due to the illness of Mrs. Sabath and myself, which I am pleased is not serious, I was precluded from appearing personally before your committee.

Therefore, I submit to you the importance of enacting legislation which will eliminate the many loopholes in the present tax laws and at the same time eliminate the several tax exemptions to trusts, so-called charities, institutions of higher learning, life insurance companies, and the oil and gas depletion allowances, all of which are evading Government tax in one form or another and which amount to hundreds of millions of dollars annually. If my suggestions be carried out you can easily repeal the excise tax and eliminate deficit spending.

All of you, I am sure, desire to bring about the reduction of the burdens that fall on the average taxpayers, as you so frequently point out. I feel that if you consider my enclosed statement, you too will come to the conclusion that it is deserving of your favorable consideration.

Sincerely yours,

A. J. SABATH,
Member of Congress.

REPUBLICAN DUPLICITY

Mr. Chairman, the President, in a recent message to this Congress, urged the inclusion in the proposed tax revision bill of specific provisions for closing the many loopholes in the present tax laws, and to repeal the exemptions presently allowed many corporations such as oil companies, life-insurance companies, and other corporations and organizations, on the huge sums used by them for purely speculative purposes. Some of our major education institutions are included in this category because of the tax exemptions granted in their original charters as charitable or eleemosynary institutions.

Some years ago certain industrialists who had accumulated tremendous wealth conceived the idea of setting up trusts or foundations effective upon their death for the very laudable purpose of benefiting our institutions of learnings, for research in medicine and other fields—to aid the needy, and for other worth-while purposes of improving the general welfare. Among these are the Carnegie Foundation, the Russell Sage Foundation, and, later, the Rockefeller Foundation. The profits from their operations were quite generally used for the specific purpose for which they were originally created. They have added to the material growth and welfare of our country. They were placed in a tax-exempt status because their income was used for humanitarian and worthy purposes.

Realizing the looseness of the provisions of the present law, a large number of greedy individuals conceived the idea of taking advantage of the law to serve their own selfish purposes, with the result that in the name of charity and higher education thousands of so-called family trusts have mushroomed in the last few years, resulting in a loss of hundreds of millions of tax dollars to the Government each year.

The Virginia Law Review of February 1948 reported that there are in existence today more than 10,000 foundations of this type, and the vast majority are of the "family" variety. The actual number is not known, it may well run into double or triple that number. These trusts are very secretive about their business. They take the position that their finances are nobody's business. They have long feared the spotlight of publicity and the possibility of legislative action to bring them in line. These foundations receive today preferred tax treatment. They are definitely obligated to justify their public sanction. The larger and older foundations have recognized this responsibility; annual reports are published and the public can ascertain where the income goes. All should be required to report their financial and other operations, and tax exemption should be limited only to their direct contributions to institutions with an active program for social welfare.

Let me point out a few of the operations of recent date of some of these so-called trusts or foundations.

The Hershey family formed the nonprofit Hershey Industrial School, which today owns most of the profitable Hershey Chocolate Co. Because of its tax-exemption status, operating costs of the company are not high. True, they contribute to the school, but it would be very interesting to know the exact story of the millions of its profits that have gone into the building of a sugar empire in Cuba.

In October 1948 a Chicago real-estate operator organized the Boston Foundation. Its first move was to purchase and lease the Edgewater Beach Hotel on Chicago's lake front. The real-estate operator is now president of the operating company, leasing the property from his own foundation. Its contributions to Chicago charitable institutions last year was $105,000, in tax-exempt money. It would be interesting to know where the balance of the profit went.

A year ago one of the South's profitable textile operations was turned into a tax-exempt foundation, involving its $34,000,000 holdings. The community gets about $400,000 in tax-exempt moneys—about equal to the taxes the company formerly paid locally. All of its other huge profit total is tax-exempt to the Federal Treasury.

Our universities and colleges have gone into business in grand style under this strangely overlooked weakness in our laws. Union College recently purchased all of the properties of Allied Stores Corp., one of the largest national department-store chains. The same college recently acquired the Abraham & Straus property in Brooklyn for $9,000,000 and immediately leased it back to Abraham & Straus at low rentals under an 80-year lease.

Oberlin College owns Montgomery Ward, Sears, Roebuck, and Woolworth locations in many parts of the country. The University of Pennsylvania, headed by that eminent Republican, Harold Stassen, and a Presidential candidate of that party, owns the Lit Bros. store property in Philadelphia. Lit's, of course, leases it from the university at a very favorable rental.

Columbia University, the haven of General Eisenhower, owns the site of much of Rockefeller Center. Cooper Union College owns the property upon which the Chrysler Building stands. New York University has gone into the macaroni business in a big way; it is also interested in the manufacture of piston rings, table china, leather goods and other products through the ownership or control of business institutions, all enjoying tax-free status. Had these particular corporations remained in private status last year, they would have paid $1,500,000 in Federal taxes. The Bureau of Internal Revenue, realizing that noodle making was stretching the dough too far, went into court to compel the university to pay taxes. This case is pending at the moment in our Federal courts.

Meanwhile, the involvement of educational institutions in the field of banking, real estate, commerce, and industry goes merrily on. Universities own haberdasheries, citrus groves, movies, cattle ranches, the Encyclopedia Britannica (owned by the University of Chicago), and a large variety of other enterprises. The University of Wisconsin controls patent pools and collects royalties. Universities and colleges, together with foundations, have an annual income from their business activities of well over a half billion dollars annually. Were this income not tax-exempt, they would pay $173,000,000 in Federal taxes annually.

Realizing the danger involved in the rapid spread of this system, the Association of American Colleges has issued a warning that the right to tax exemption has been abused by many colleges, and should be watched very carefully.

Some of our Republican friends in Congress are directing blasts against the cooperatives for not paying just taxes. However, I want to point out the cooperatives are in an entirely different position from these so-called charitable trusts and educational institutions. Cooperatives are set up to supply goods and services needed by their membership. Furthermore, about 30,000 cooperatives do pay income taxes, while only about 5,000 do not. By selling goods to their members at reasonable prices, the co-ops have succeeded in throwing much-needed light on the exorbitant prices charged by many of the big private monopolies, while these so-called charitable trusts and foundations, interested in securing all the profit they can possibly squeeze out of their commercial operations, do nothing that might offend the corporate giants they are nested in. The Biblical observation, "Charity covers a multitude of sins," applies very aptly to the operations of these family trusts and foundations of recent years.

An interesting light was thrown onto the operations of one of these so-called trusts some months ago as a result of the investigation conducted by the Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce into the operations of Textron, Inc.

This investigation disclosed that Textron, Inc., had employed the device of charitable trusts to a substantial extent as a means of acquiring risk capital which was used in its business transactions, such as sales and leases of plants and equipment and by substantial loans to Textron, Inc., and its affiliates. A number of trusts were created to provide the large funds this firm needed for its gambling operations. The operators of this scheme formed six different trusts in the New England area. First. The Rhode Island Charities Trust—named the city of Providence Community Chest as the sole beneficiary. The trust was formed in 1937, but testimony revealed that not a cent was paid to the Community Chest until 1945, and then the sum of $10,000 was turned over to it. During 1945, 1946, and 1947 the Community Chest received a total of $85,000 from the trust, while the officers and the bank handling the funds for the trust received a total in excess of $140,000. This trust has never made an accounting to the beneficiary, nor has its books ever been audited. This is the story, substantially, of most of these so-called charitable trusts.

But the most disconcerting and dangerous feature of all in the operation of some of these trusts is brought out by the experience of the city of Nashua, N. H., with this corporation and trust. They purchased the Nashua Textile Mills in 1945, a mill which had been a mainstay of the economy in this community since 1823. Its previous owners were essentially manufacturers and not speculators in mill properties. Through the cooperation of loyal local labor the mills and the community prospered. Textron closed this plant shortly after acquiring it, transferring its activities in this field to Puerto Rico, where cheap, sweat-shop labor was available, throwing 5,500 real American workmen out of jobs and demoralizing the community.

This is a clear indication of tax-free income misused to destroy American unions, and to blight the spirit and destroy the well-being of American labor. It is high time some action was taken to eliminate such demagogic and un-American practices through the inadvertent cooperation of our own Government.

These loop-holes and tax-evasion schemes must be eliminated. If prompt action is taken, the present excise taxes can be reduced or repealed as I have so consistently urged, and it would aid materially in reducing or eliminating the deficit we are faced with and place the country in a sound financial position.

I am informed, however, that 10 of the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee, unfortunately, in combination with a few southern Democrats, are holding back the efforts of the Democrats who seek to remedy the pernicious situation referred to above. I fully realize these Republicans are under the influence of the National Association of Manufacturers, among other pressure groups, which are opposed to any fair elimination of these loopholes in the law. The Republicans themselves should try to pry themselves loose from this vicious influence and I sincerely hope that some of the afore-mentioned 10 Republicans will recognize their responsibility to the people and aid the Democratic Members in amending the present law.

There is one more point I want to bring out clearly in connection with these lease-back deals made between the trusts and foundations who purchase businesses, land, and properties, and the firms who lease them back at favorable long-term rentals. The rent they pay is a deductible item in their income-tax returns, again reducing the taxes they would otherwise pay to the Federal Government, and also giving them an unfair competitive advantage over the small-business competitor. It is tending to build up monopolies more and more, while driving the small-business man to the wall.

In the interest of legitimate, honest small business, and in the interest of the honest taxpayer, as well as in their own interest, these Republican members should join with the Democratic members of this committee who are trying to bring out a bill as urged by our President, and vote to eliminate these loopholes that are resulting in the loss of hundreds of millions of dollars of revenue to the Treasury each year. Not only that, but these same Republican members should vote with the sincere Democratic members to eliminate the exemptions that have been given to life-insurance companies, oil and mining interests, and other giant monopolies via the so-called depletion allowances, by which these groups have been able to evade their just contribution to the cost of government which protects and safeguards their far-flung interests.

In addition to those now being charged with tax evasion, I have noticed that the steel and lumber racketeers have robbed the American people of millions and millions of dollars. I also observed that the textile manufacturers who controlled the price of textiles and the shirt manufacturers who boosted the price of $1.50 shirts to $5 and $6, saying the least, their actions have been criminal.

I feel that their activities should be penetrated as well as those of the war profiteers whose activities have been ignored.

I feel, therefore, Mr. Speaker, that if the Ways and Means Committee fails to report a fair bill, eliminating these loopholes and tax-avoidance schemes, the full responsibility will lie with the Republican members of that committee, and the Republican Party will be foreclosed from charging that we Democrats failed to repeal or reduce excise taxes as recommended by the President and which we Democrats desire.

If the Republicans continue to oppose a fair tax bill, I shall insist in the next Congress that the number of Republicans on the Ways and Means Committee, as well as on some of the other committees where legislation recommended by the President is held up in which the masses are vitally interested, be reduced so that the majority party as now constituted, and as I know will continue in control of our legislative body shall actually have a working majority in the next Congress and work for the will of the people.

I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN].

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include certain statements and excerpts, and I ask the same privilege for the special order I have this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

TAX BILL

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I, too, want to commend the Democratic members of the Committee on Ways and Means for bringing to this House a much better bill than I ever expected the committee to bring to us. This bill does not go as far as I would like it to go in some respects on the excise taxes. I would like to see some of the other taxes reduced, and some eliminated. But, I concede that they have gone very far and it will be of great help to business in this country and to consumers in general for those reductions to be made. I am sure that the committee went just as far as it was possible for them to go, and I commend them for the fine work that they have done.

No. 1: The elimination of these excise taxes will be helpful to all business as well as consumers; it will be especially helpful to the smaller businesses of the country.

No. 2: It will be especially helpful to the smaller businesses of the country on tax reductions and adjustments of taxes on corporations earning less than $167,000 a year. It is true that there will be a slight increase on the larger corporations, but I see no reason why they should be opposed.

CORPORATION NATURAL PERSON

Under the fourteenth amendment the Supreme Court of the United States has held that a corporation is a natural person. That holding by the Supreme Court has given corporations many benefits and privileges that they would not otherwise have in all the States of this Union and in interstate commerce. They have all the benefits of a natural person. So you would naturally assume that if they were taxed no more than a natural person that they would not have any cause for complaint. It is purely a coincidence, I am sure, that the increase in taxes on the larger corporations, which, of course, are included in that category of natural persons, is from 38 percent to 41 percent, and that 41 percent is exactly one-half of what a natural person would pay under similar like and comparable circumstances, or 82 percent. So, if corporations are required to pay just one-half of what natural persons pay and they have all the rights, privileges, and benefits of natural persons, who would be required to pay 82 percent, I do not see where they have much cause to be alarmed, and certainly they should accept it and pay the taxes.

DEFICIT FINANCING

We must not continue in deficit financing any longer than we can possibly help. If we were to make the mistake of eliminating that 3 percent tax on big corporations we would be voting for deficit financing to the extent of almost an additional half billion dollars a year. We should not do that. We should keep this bill as it is. We know that the President will veto the bill if we do not raise substantially as much money as we reduce in taxes. So, a vote to eliminate the corporation taxes would be a vote to kill the bill.

I know that there will be opposition to this bill. There is opposition to all tax bills. We have been unable to reduce the budget as much as we would like to, so the only way we can do is to raise as much of the money in taxes to keep the deficit from being any larger than it is, and a vote to reduce corporation taxes would be a vote to continue and enlarge the amount of deficit financing.

BIG BUSINESS OR LITTLE BUSINESS

So far as this bill is concerned, it is an issue between little business and big business, little business for it and big business against it.

I made the statement here one time, and I reiterate it, that I have never known the time when there was a conflict of interest between big business and little business that the United States Chamber of Commerce did not take the side of big business. I predict they will take the side of big business in this case. That same statement goes for the National Association of Manufacturers. Every time, in case of a conflict of interest, they take the side of big business as against little business. Remember, I say where there is a conflict of interest they are inevitably for them.

POINT 4 PROGRAM

The point 4 program to guarantee American investments abroad is definitely in favor of the smaller businesses of the United States. The big business concerns can deal with other countries successfully themselves without any help from our Government. They have sufficient resources, influence, weight, and size to deal with the ordinary foreign country. This is not true with the smaller concerns; they need the Government's protection and help, at least in a limited way and in a discreet and prudent manner, as proposed in point 4.

SIDE OF BIG BUSINESS

It is not unusual that such organizations as the United States Chamber of Commerce and the National Association of Manufacturers both oppose this program. It is true, and the officials of each organization boast of the fact, that their membership is predominantly made up of small businesses, but in case of conflict between big business and small business each one always takes the side of big business. It is not unusual for them to act at the same time.

I have a letter from the National Association of Manufacturers, dated June 14, 1950, from Mr. Earl Bunting, managing director, stating that the association is opposed to the point 4 program. In the same mail I received a letter, dated June 14, 1950, from the Chamber of Commerce of the United States over the signature of Mr. Clarence R. Miles to the effect that the United States Chamber of Commerce opposes the point 4 program.

VOTES OF ORGANIZATIONS COMPARED

The recent report of the Joint Committee on the Economic Report contains some interesting information about how different organizations stand on major issues. I am inserting herewith a copy of that report. It is as follows:

[14] Adopt policies in close conformity with essential principles of the gold standard.
[15] Recommends a general expansion of RFC activity.
[16] CED has not studied the whole agricultural program but in general CED opposes direct controls and any plan that involves subsidies in a period of high business activity.
[17] Valley authorities should be considered as public works, which are not needed now.
[18] OASI should be limited to providing a minimum layer of basic protection, leaving ample room for individual and voluntary group effort.
[19] Should be extended to farm people on a trial basis.
[20] The housing problem is primarily an individual responsibility.
[21] Provided that all control of schools remains with State and local governments.
[22] Providing articles 11 and 12, dealing with foreign investment, are eliminated
[23] Stimulate imports of articles required by the economy; but American industry must be protected against unfair competition.
[24] The Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act should be amended to require analysis by the Tariff Commission and ratification by the Senate.
[25] But AFL also advocates a program to induce domestic consumers to prefer American-made products.
[26] The movement of capital should be carried on by private enterprise; the export of capital should not be stimulated as a device to reduce domestic unemployment.
[27] At progressively lower amounts, terminating in 1952; recipient nations should not pursue policies of nationalization.
[28] At a level for 1950–51 slightly lower than that recommended by the President.
[29] Greater emphasis should be placed on self-help projects; the program must not be used as a means of dumping United States surpluses.
[30] Every effort must be made to terminate ERP in 1952; the program must not be used for dumping United States surpluses.

It will be noticed that on 20 important issues where both the National Association of Manufacturers and the United States Chamber of Commerce took a definite stand, they took the same stand. It will also be noticed that the Committee for Economic Development has a record on important issues not too much unlike the National Association of Manufacturers and the United States Chamber of Commerce. More surprising still is the American Farm Bureau Federation stands with these different big business concerns on the same side of so many important issues.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, this bill constitutes a document of 152 pages. The report of the committee, including the minority report, is 160 pages long. I confess at the outset, Mr. Speaker, that I am not competent to discuss all the intricacies of this amazing measure.

I have been somewhat interested personally in the expression of disappointment which has come from two Members of the majority side with respect to the failure or inability of the Committee on Ways and Means to accomplish certain things which they would like to see accomplished. Those things, however, will be thoroughly discussed in the general debate by men who have studied this whole difficult problem from top to bottom.

Mr. Speaker, I now yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McGREGOR].

Mr. McGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, the bill before us for consideration, H. R. 8920, known as the Revenue Act of 1950—the increase-decrease tax bill—in my opinion represents the greatest hoax that has ever been put over on the American people and it is clearly another example of the "mis-deal" of the present administration. This bill represents, for the first time in history, two subjects relative to taxation, an increase and a decrease, and it comes on the floor of Congress under a procedure known as a gag rule which prevents the division of the two subjects and does not give to the people back home a knowledge of whether their Congressman is for increased taxes or decreased taxes.

I have always opposed the gag rule—a rule which prevents amendments on the floor—because I felt it was the right of the 435 Members of Congress to express their views and have those views accepted or rejected by a majority of this elected body rather than to follow the gag-rule procedure of forcing us to accept the dictates of a majority of the Ways and Means Committee comprising 25 members.

I believe that this legislation is a "misdeal" and a hoax because I think it is possible that an orderly reduction of a substantial number of wartime excise taxes without the imposition of any new taxes can and should be made. This can be done by cutting unnecessary Federal expenses, a procedure I am in accord with as shown by my record.

No nation can spend itself into real prosperity. Prices are rising and the real value of savings, pensions, annuities, and insurance are shrinking and being cut almost in half. Taxes are enslaving the American people of their right to spend their own money. The average American family of four is paying approximately $31 a week in taxes—four times as much as just 10 years ago. If we are to continue and have a real prosperity, unnecessary Federal expenses must be immediately reduced and they can be reduced, Mr. Speaker. Experience has proven to me if we give the Washington bureaucrats money, they will spend it, so let us have no new taxes and cut down unnecessary Federal expenses.

There are many sleepers in this bill, Mr. Speaker, one of the outstanding ones is the flat 10-percent withholding tax. This clause means that the Government will withhold 10 percent of every individual's investment income or patronage refund, however meager, and keep approximately 5 percent of this amount until the recipient dies or until the income or patronage refunds cease. The flat 10-percent withholding taxes will be applied to all dividends received by colleges, hospitals, churches, and similar organizations. There are many things in this legislation that I am in accord with but I certainly would like the opportunity of voting for that which I approve and against that which I do not approve.

I am voting against the gag rule so that I can have that opportunity. If the gag rule fails, I probably will vote for the legislation because I definitely feel that many of the wartime excise taxes should be reduced.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, there are no other requests for time on this side.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] to the effect that the bill now under consideration is 152 pages in length and is highly technical, it is virtually impossible to digest let alone explain all of its provisions. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include in my remarks a statement setting forth fully and clearly, and in an intelligent manner, the provisions of this important bill. The statement was prepared by the staff of the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there any objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

(The matter referred to follows:)

SUMMARY OF PRINCIPAL PROVISIONS OF THE REVENUE BILL OF 1950

I. Excise taxes: Excise taxes reduced or repealed on the following articles or services, in accordance with the attached schedule: Luggage, jewelry, furs, cosmetics, admissions, cabarets, chewing tobacco, snuff, cigars, distilled spirits used in medicines, amusement devices, tires and inner tubes, automobile parts and accessories, musical instruments, refrigerators, sporting goods, electric, gas, and oil appliances, photographic apparatus, business and store machines, matches, telephone and telegraph, transportation of persons and transportation of property.

II. Income taxes:

(a) The interest element of installment payments of life insurance proceeds would be subject to income tax.

(b) Dealers in State and municipal bonds would be denied a deduction for bond premium on bonds maturing in 5 years or less unless such bonds are sold within 30 days from the date the bonds are purchased.

(c) The dividends-received credit for property distributed in kind would be limited to 85 percent of the basis of the property in the hands of the distributing corporation.

(d) Percentage depletion of 15 percent extended to fuller's earth, refractory clay, quartzite, fire clay, perlite, diatomaceous earth, and tripoli; percentage depletion of 5 percent extended to stone (including clate), brick and tile clay, shale, oyster and clam shell deposits, sand, gravel, marble, and granite; percentage depletion for coal increased from 5 to 10 percent. No change in percentage depletion for oil, gas, sulfur, and metal mines.

(e) Dividends from earnings and profits of corporations accumulated prior to March 1, 1913, would be subject to tax.

(f) Distributions in liquidation of foreign subsidiaries of domestic corporations would be taxed at ordinary income rates in certain cases.

(g) Certain distributions of stock of family-type corporations used to pay estate and inheritance taxes would not be treated as dividends.

(h) Capital gains and losses: The holding period for long-term capital gains and losses is reduced from 6 months to 3 months and gain or loss from the sale or exchange of business property used in the trade or business would be treated as capital gain or capital loss. There would be no change in existing law respecting the right of livestock raisers to treat sales of breeding stock as sales of capital assets.

(i) Taxpayers would be prevented from converting short-term gains into long-term gains through the short-sales device.

(j) Income derived by shareholders in so-called collapsible corporations would be taxable as ordinary income rather than as capital gain.

(k) Nonresident alien individuals would be subject to tax on capital gains while in this country.

(l) A 1-year carry-back and 5-year carry-forward of net operating losses would be substituted for the present 2-year carry-back and 2-year carry-forward.

(m) Deduction would be disallowed for the amortization of bond premium attributable to conversion privilege.

(n) Employees of the United States working in possessions of the United States would be subject to tax on their salary.

(o) Residents of Puerto Rico would be taxable as residents of the United States on income from the mainland and from sources outside Puerto Rico, and would be exempt from Federal income tax on income earned in Puerto Rico only if a bona fide resident throughout the taxable year.

(p) Income taxes of small corporations under $167,000 a year would be reduced through the imposition of a flat 21 percent normal tax rate, and a flat 20 percent surtax rate on income above a $25,000 surtax exemption. (See attached table.)

III. Treatment of income of and bequests to certain tax-exempt organizations:

(a) Would tax the unrelated active business income, with an exemption of $1,000, of the following: (1) Labor, agricultural and horticultural organizations; (2) literary, library, scientific, research, educational, and charitable organizations, including hospitals and foundations; (3) business leagues, chambers of commerce, real estate boards, or boards of trade.

(b) Would tax as business income, rents derived from commercial or industrial property purchased with borrowed funds by the tax-exempt institutions mentioned above, and leased for a period of 5 years or more, on the ratio of the borrowed funds to the total purchase price.

(c) Would impose a tax on accumulated investment income of charitable trusts and foundations (interest, rents, dividends, and royalties) where the funds are not spent on designated purposes within the taxable year or within 2½ months after the close of the year. No tax would be applicable where the accumulations in trust are for a period of not more than 5 years if the trust instrument designates that the funds be turned over to the tax-exempt organizations. A trust would be permitted to accumulate tax-free earnings equal to its highest annual income during the preceding 5 years, and also accumulate tax-free earnings for 25 years where the trust is established by will.

(d) Would deny deductions for income, estate and gift tax purposes to donors of property for charitable trusts and foundations unless the instrument under which the organizations are established affirmatively provides that no part of the organization's assets may be loaned or sold to the donors of the organization or any of its officers or trustees, or any member of their families or to a corporation controlled by them; that only a reasonable compensation for services actually rendered may be paid to such persons by the organization; that the services of the organization may not be made available to such persons on a preferential basis; and that no substantial part of the assets of the organization may be used to purchase securities or other property from such persons.

(e) Would disallow in the case of private trusts or foundations, charitable deductions to a contributor for income, estate and gift tax purposes, if (1) the contributor, or members of his family, have voting control of the organization to which the contribution is made; and (2) the contribution consists of stock in a corporation in which the contributor together with members of his family control 50 percent or more of the voting stock or 50 percent or more of the total stock, including the stock held by tax-exempt organizations which the family control.

IV. Income taxes of life insurance companies: The correction of the formula for the taxation of life insurance companies contained in House Joint Resolution 371 would be made applicable to 1947, 1948, 1949, and 1950.

V. Estate tax:

(a) Property transferred by decedent more than 3 years before death will not be included in his gross estate, and transferred within 3 years of a decedent's death will be included unless the taxpayer rebuts the presumption that the transfer was in contemplation of death.

(b) The estate tax deduction for the support of dependents prior to settlement of an estate is repealed.

VI. Miscellaneous amendments:

(a) Would require a 10 percent withholding of tax on dividends paid to stockholders of corporations and on patronage refunds of cooperatives, in cash or in kind. The provision would require the submission of information on withholding to the shareholder by January 31 in the form and manner chosen by the corporation. The corporation is to file an information return with the Commissioner by March 1.

(b) Interest on tax refunds reduced from 6 to 3 percent.

(c) Would modify the provisions of the Internal Revenue Code which now permit corporations to pay income taxes in four quarterly installments after the close of their taxable year by requiring the following schedule for payments, effective for taxable years ending on or after December 31, 1950:

Year	First quarter	Second quarter	Third quarter	Fourth quarter
	Percent	Percent	Percent	Percent
1951	30	30	20	20
1952	35	35	15	15
1953	40	40	10	10
1954	45	45	5	5
1955	50	50

The above schedule would mean that at the end of 5 years these corporations would be paying their income tax in two installments within 6 months after the close of their taxable year.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8920) to reduce excise taxes, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 8920, with Mr. DELANEY in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, general debate is limited to 2 days, to be equally divided and controlled by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 33 minutes.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, H. R. 8920, a bill to reduce excise taxes and for other purposes, is the result of nearly 5 months of continuous work by the Committee on Ways and Means. After almost a full month of public hearings during which more than 350 witnesses appeared and testified, the committee went into executive session for approximately 4 months to study and discuss the record of 3,000 pages and to prepare a tax bill.

AGREEMENT ON EXCISE-TAX REDUCTION

From the outset, the entire committee was in agreement that there should be a reduction in excise taxes, especially those excise taxes which were imposed and increased to finance the prosecution of the war.

As pointed out in the committee report, the excise taxes today, 5 years after the cessation of hostilities, remain at the wartime peak, yet it is generally recognized that excise taxes, in contrast with income taxes upon individuals and corporations, have little relation to ability to pay.

Strong demand for repeal of the excise taxes came from producers, distributors, and consumers of articles subject to the tax. It was pointed out that the war excise taxes were creating serious unemployment problems in some fields and certain industries.

This is the third tax-reduction bill since the end of the war. The Revenue Act of 1945 reduced taxes on corporations and individuals by about $6,000,000,000 and removed nearly 12,000,000 individuals from the income-tax rolls. Individual income taxes were further reduced by approximately $5,000,000,000 by the Revenue Act of 1948, which removed an additional 7,000,000 persons from the income-tax rolls. Yet the wartime excise taxes which are not based upon ability to pay and which were added by three successive revenue acts during the war, the Revenue Acts of 1941, 1942, and 1943, are, with but minor exceptions, still in full force and effect today.

Ideally, we should have liked to reduce excise taxes without the necessity of providing offsetting revenue from other sources. It would have made our job much more pleasant and much easier if the Congress had reduced appropriations to eliminate or reduce the budget deficit and to provide a safe margin within which to make the excise tax reductions the Committee on Ways and Means deemed advisable. But our committee was confronted with an actual situation—not an opinion or a theory. We are still faced with a deficit of $3,500,000,000 to $4,500,000,000 for the fiscal years 1950 and 1951, according to the most optimistic estimates, even if the bill under consideration is enacted into law. Under these circumstances, in my opinion, it would have been an admission of lack of courage and imprudent fiscal irresponsibility for the Committee on Ways and Means to report to the House an excise-tax reduction bill which would have added to the deficit in the present period of peace, peak prosperity, and high national income. I must emphasize that I could neither willingly report nor support a tax bill that did not substantially make up from other sources the revenue lost by excise-tax reduction. In my opinion, it would be a great disservice to the country to enact a tax law increasing the Federal deficit at this time.

ADDITIONAL TAXES NECESSARY TO AVOID ADDING TO DEFICIT

Initially, it was the purpose of the majority members of the committee to try to meet the goal suggested by the President of limiting excise-tax reductions to the amount of revenue that we might be able to make up from closing loopholes in the present tax laws. Although the committee bill does not go as far in this direction as I should have liked, many important defects in the existing tax laws have been corrected, and some of the obvious loopholes have been closed.

In view of the decision of the committee to reduce excise taxes by a larger amount than recommended by the President, and since the loopholes closed did not recoup the revenue lost from excise-tax reduction, we had no alternative but to impose additional taxes if we were to avoid increasing the deficit. As much as I should have liked to avoid any increase in taxes, it is unjustifiable, if not unthinkable, in my opinion, for the Congress now to further weaken the fiscal position of the Government.

As stated in the committee report, if tax rates must be increased, the corporation income tax is probably the least objectionable source for the additional revenues. Corporations have received the largest percentage of tax reduction since the end of the war. Moreover, the corporate tax rate increase provided in the bill, I am advised, averages less than 2 percent of all taxable corporate income. In fact, there is no increase on any corporation with income below $167,000 annually, and most of them will have their taxes reduced.

It is probable that no major tax bill reported by the Committee on Ways and Means ever had the complete approval of every member of the committee. Almost certainly there will be some provisions which each committee member would like to see changed if he could have his own way. This is true of H. R. 8920. In fact, this bill probably contains more things with which I personally may differ, and omits more proposals that I should have liked to see included, than any other tax bill on which I have worked. Nevertheless, I have great confidence in the good judgment of a majority of my colleagues on the Committee on Ways and Means. At the very least, I would not set my own opinion above that of a majority of the committee.

SUMMARY OF REVENUE EFFECT OF THE PRINCIPAL PROVISIONS OF THE BILL

The committee made a complete examination of the entire war-excise-tax

field. Our deliberations dealt not only with the increases made by the Revenue Act of 1943, but also other war increases made since 1940. While the relief is not as great as I would have liked to see if the budget situation had been more favorable, substantial relief is granted in the case of admissions taxes, transportation of persons and property, communications, retail taxes on jewelry, luggage, furs, and toilet preparations, and the manufacturers' excise taxes. The bill also eliminates the tax on rebuilt and reconditioned automobile parts. This tax has caused quite a bit of irritation throughout the country. I was particularly happy to have the tax removed on cooking stoves and reduced on automobile parts and accessories and tires and tubes. These taxes are on vital necessities and therefore constitute a real burden on our people. The tax on sporting goods used predominantly in the schools is also eliminated. I am sure the membership will all be happy to know that the bill removes the taxes on ladies' handbags, baby oils, and children's toys.

According to the staff of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation, the revenue loss from excise-tax reduction on a liability basis will be $1,010,000,000 a year, one hundred million of which will be recouped from additional income taxes which the manufacturers, distributors, and employees in the industries now subject to the excise taxes will pay as a result of increased business. The reductions in excise taxes are allocated among the various classes of excises as follows:

Reduction in the retail excise taxes on jewelry, furs, toilet preparations, and luggage, including complete repeal of the tax on women's purses, billfolds and pocketbooks, will lose $236,500,000 in revenue.

Reduction in the taxes on admissions from 20 percent to 10 percent and on cabarets from 20 percent to 15 percent, will lose another $200,000,000.

The committee decided to reduce the manufacturers' excise tax on tires and inner tubes, automobile parts or accessories, musical instruments, household-type refrigerators, business and store machines and ordinary matches by approximately one-half of the percentage-point increase made since 1940. The 25-percent tax on cameras and camera lenses, however, and the 15-percent tax on photographic film were both reduced to a uniform 10 percent. Apparatus and equipment used in the business of photography is eliminated from the tax. The loss in revenue from the changes in the manufacturers' excise taxes is $195,000,000 annually.

The taxes on communications—telephone and telegraph service—would be reduced by $117,000,000 a year. The greatest tax-rate reduction in this field is given to domestic telegraph and radio service, in the hope that the reduction from 25 percent to 10 percent will enable this important industry to survive. The tax on local residential telephones was reduced from 15 percent to 10 percent, and long-distance calls from 25 percent to 20 percent.

The tax on passenger fares is reduced from 15 percent to 10 percent, while the tax on transportation of property has been cut in half, that is, from 3 percent to 1½ percent, with an over-all loss from reduction of the taxes on transportation of $240,000,000 a year.

Miscellaneous reductions in certain occupational taxes, medicinal alcohol, and chewing tobacco, snuff and cigars account for the remaining loss of $21,000,000 a year.

The following table summarizes the reductions in the excise taxes, both on the basis of a full year of operation and for the fiscal year 1951:

[In millions of dollars]

Retail excise taxes	Loss in excise revenue
	In a full year of operation	In the fiscal year 1951
Retail taxes	236.5	172.1
Admissions and cabaret taxes	201.0	132.8
Manufacturers' taxes	194.5	126.2
Communications taxes	117.0	81.4
Transportation taxes	240.0	160.1
Other taxes	21.0	17.4
Total	1,010.0	690.0

The pending bill makes the following changes in other taxes:

(a) Corporation tax adjustments: Under existing law, corporations with incomes under $25,000 a year are taxed at the rate of 21 percent on the first $5,000; 23 percent on the next $15,000; and 25 percent on the next $5,000. All corporations with income above $50,000 are taxed at an effective rate of 38 percent, with a lesser rate for corporations with incomes between $25,000 and $50,000 a year. By revising the corporate tax structure to impose a flat 21-percent normal tax on corporations and a 20-percent surtax on corporate surtax net income above $25,000, the committee bill yields additional revenue of approximately $433,000,000 a year over existing law.

(b) Charitable trusts, family foundations, educational institutions, and so forth: By taxing the unrelated business income of certain tax-exempt organizations, and by imposing limitations and restrictions on the investment operations and accumulation of investment income of charitable trusts and foundations, it is estimated that the bill, over the long run, will provide about $100,000,000 a year from this source.

(c) Miscellaneous loopholes: The closing of more than a dozen miscellaneous loopholes will yield $95,000,000 a year from this source.

(d) Municipal bonds: The long-run effect of denying a tax benefit to dealers in municipal bonds for premiums on tax-exempt bonds held by them for investment rather than for resale will be $20,000,000 a year.

(e) Reduction in interest rate on tax refunds: The ultimate effect of the reduction in interest rate on refunds of Federal taxes from 6 percent to 3 percent will be $45,000,000 a year.

(f) Life insurance companies: The inclusion in the bill of the provisions of House Joint Resolution 371, already passed by the House, for correction of the formula for the taxation of life insurance companies and making it applicable to 1950, would yield $70,000,000 a year.

(g) Withholding of tax on corporate dividends and patronage refunds: To insure the collection of individual income taxes on more than $1,000,000,000 of corporate dividends and patronage refunds of cooperatives which are now estimated to be omitted from individual income tax returns, the bill provides for a system of withholding of tax at the rate of 10 percent, somewhat similar to that now in effect for salaries and wages. It is estimated that this provision will increase revenues by $170,000,000 a year without any increase in taxes.

(h) Percentage depletion: On the other side of the profit and loss statement, for a moment, the extension of percentage depletion allowances at the rate of 5 percent to sand, gravel, granite, marble, stone, brick and tile clay, shale and shell, and at 15 percent to borax, fuller's earth, refractory and fire clay, quartzite, perlite, diatomaceous earth, metallurgical and chemical grade limestone and tripoli, and the increase from 5 percent to 10 percent of the depletion allowance for coal will reduce revenues by about $35,000,000 a year when fully effective.

The following table summarizes the estimated revenue effect of the bill for a full year of operation:

REVENUE EFFECT ON THE 1951 BUDGET

In the fiscal year 1951 and for the next few years, the revenue collections will actually be greater than the proposed reduction in excise taxes. Assuming that excise tax changes become effective on September 1, 1950, the net loss in revenue from excise tax reduction for the fiscal year 1951 would be $670,000,000, while additional revenues of $1,214,000,000 provide a net increase in collections of $544,000,000 toward further reduction in the budget deficit. This is attributable principally to the acceleration of tax payments of corporations, a reform that I have felt for some time was badly needed. Under existing law, a wage earner has his income tax deducted on payday. A person doing business either in the form of a partnership or an individual proprietorship must pay his estimated income tax quarterly during the year in which the income is earned. Yet under existing law, corporations may delay payment of their income taxes not merely until the end of the year in which the income is earned, but may pay in quarterly installments over the following year. For taxpayers on a calendar year basis, these quarterly payments fall on March 15, June 15, September 15, and December 15. This means that 50 percent of the tax liability is now paid during the first 6 months after the close of the taxable year and the remaining 50 percent is paid in the second 6 months.

It is only fair and equitable that corporations should pay the taxes due the Federal Government more promptly after the income has been earned. In order, however, not to impose too severe a burden from a sudden shift to more current collection of corporate taxes, a gradual transition period of 5 years is provided by the bill.

Ultimately, within a period of 5 years, corporations will be paying 100 percent of their taxes during the first 6 months after the close of their taxable year, but during the transition period corporations would pay as follows:

First year: 60 percent in the first 6 months; 40 percent in the second 6 months.

Second year: 70 percent in the first 6 months; 30 percent in the second 6 months.

Third year: 80 percent in the first 6 months; 20 percent in the second 6 months.

Fourth year: 90 percent in the first 6 months; 10 percent in the second 6 months.

Fifth year and thereafter: 100 percent in the first 6 months.

The following table shows in detail the estimated revenue effect of the provisions of the bill for the fiscal year 1951:

CONCLUSION

In conclusion, those who sincerely desire to see excise-tax reduction now should bear in mind the fair warning of the President in his tax message to Congress on January 23, 1950. The President said:

> I want to make it very clear that I could not approve excise-tax reductions unless they were accompanied by provision for replacement of the revenue lost, because I am convinced that sound fiscal policy will not permit a weakening of our tax system at this time.

As I have already pointed out, I would have liked to see all of this revenue made up through the closing of loopholes, but this is not possible under action of the committee. The most feasible alternative, in the opinion of a majority of the committee, was to secure additional revenue through an increase in corporate rates on corporations with large income. There the burden is felt less because of the high profits corporations are enjoying at the present time.

The easy road would have been to reduce excise taxes and nothing more, as was suggested by the minority. But they used up the temporary budget surpluses in 1947 and 1948 solely with income-tax reduction. So I think when the minority shed so many tears about the delay in excise-tax reduction and accuse the Democratic majority of "fiddling while the people waited" it may be a fair question to ask why they did nothing whatever to reduce excise taxes during the 2 years in which they were in control of the Congress. We who wish the Congress to assume and retain its responsibility for the fiscal integrity of the Government had no other choice. We had to provide offsetting revenue.

I trust that the membership will, upon reflection, come to the conclusion that if we are to relieve the country from the burden of the war-excise taxes, this bill affords the most feasible basis of accomplishing that end.

Mr. FARRINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. FARRINGTON. I note in the bill as reported by the committee Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands are exempt from the 15-percent excise tax on transportation of persons. Would the chairman explain the committee's reason for refusing to extend that exemption to the Hawaiian Islands and to Alaska?

Mr. DOUGHTON. The Virgin Islands and Puerto Rico are possessions of the United States, while Alaska is in a Territorial status, and is a part of the United States within the scope of the uniformity clause of the Constitution.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. COOPER. I am sure the distinguished chairman will recall and that the Delegate from Hawaii will bear in mind there is a serious constitutional question involved on that point because the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii are parts of the United States. Therefore, the question of uniformity of the tax rate would naturally be involved. In view of the serious constitutional question involved, the committee is of the opinion that action should not be taken along the line indicated by the gentleman.

Mr. DOUGHTON. A subcommittee of our committee went to Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands to study the fiscal and economic conditions there and they reported very favorably on the action taken by the committee in this bill with respect to the Virgin Islands and Puerto Rico.

Mr. FARRINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I think it is important to establish for the purposes of the record that the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii are being asked to pay taxes on identically the same basis as the rest of the States of the Union while Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands are exempted from that tax which falls with particular weight on the two Territories. I do not dispute the position of the committee, but I do want to say it is a most compelling argument why Hawaii should be admitted to the Union as a State.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. My attention has been called to the fact that under section 204, having to do with percentage depletion, the bill proposes to add a clause to the existing law on gross income from mining in the following words: "but such term shall in no case include transportation beyond the property."

In connection with nonmetallic minerals, such as feldspar and bentonite, and other minerals of that sort, the common practice is to collect or pick up the rough ores and then transport them to a central mill. In many cases 50 percent or more of the cost of the operation is involved in getting them to the processing plant. Until these ores have been processed, they are not usable. You have only crude ores. They are not products. They are only moved rocks or clays. The transportation to a processing mill, whether 100 yards or 20 miles, is a part of the mining. Transportation after milling or even grinding is something else. To make this clear, would the chairman say that it is not intended to deny the transportation costs where they are a part of the handling of the crude ore before it is processed or milled?

Mr. DOUGHTON. The subject of depletion was one of the controversial subjects that was before our committee and was considered very carefully. What we did is the decision of the majority members of the committee.

I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER] if he has some observation to make.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has again expired.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield myself four additional minutes.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I am sure the chairman will bear in mind, and if the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] will refer to page 65 of the report, he will see the explanation of this provision. Briefly, it simply means this, that percentage depletion is provided for the production of the mineral but not for the transportation of it.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. On page 65 the language says, "transportation of the product." If "the product" means the milled mineral, that is one thing, but if it is the crude ore, that is something else.

Mr. COOPER. Well, it is crude ore that is being talked about.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS. I would like to call attention to this proposition: Just as the gentleman from South Dakota says, there has been a great deal of complaint lately with reference to that language. I participated rather actively in this matter in the committee. We discussed this proposition, which is the mining of coal, and it was decided that in coal production there is a lot of expense before the coal finally leaves the property on which it is mined. Sometimes it is screened, and sometimes it is washed and pulverized and made into different sizes. At that time, while we were discussing this, we intended that all that expense would be included, before taking the coal further. As an illustration, in Ohio, for instance, we have what we call strip mines. The coal is mined and taken long distances before it is disposed of. It is not treated at all. It is taken up as far as Detroit, for instance, and sold. It would not be fair to consider that transportation as a part of the depletion cost, because that is simply going too far.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. But coal is a usable product when it is mined, generally speaking; whereas, clays are not.

Mr. JENKINS. With reference to the production of clay, in most of the countries where clay is produced the brick and clay plants are close by, contiguous to where the clay is produced, but in some places they are not. In some places the clay must be hauled long distances. If that is the case, the same applies as with reference to coal. I doubt whether the language we have does fix it definitely and closely enough. This ought to be made more specific when the bill goes to the other body. But the intention was to grant to those people who produced minerals a rather complete concession, but it was not intended to apply to that product every step they hauled it.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. If the haulage is merely a matter of 5 or 6 or 12 or even 20 miles to a central milling plant, it seems to me it is a part of the cost of production, because the product is not usable until it leaves the mill.

Mr. JENKINS. That will be a proposition of interpretation by regulation or further clarification in the other body.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] has again expired.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 50 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, first of all, I want to compliment our distinguished chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON]. We are all very proud of his service in the Congress these many years. I have served on the Ways and Means Committee since 1933, and during that time I have never known him to be unfair or partial in his attitude toward the minority. It is a great pleasure to work under such a chairman. We look forward, of course, to the time when perhaps he will be very glad to work under a chairman from our side. At any rate, he has performed a great and splendid service for his country.

Three days ago the Bureau of Labor Statistics officially reported that between April 15 and May 15 the cost of living took the highest jump of any month in the last 2 years.

Today we in the House of Representatives are considering, and I fear on the verge of passing, a bill which will drive prices to unprecedented levels—a bill that will increase the costs of the necessities of life to the point where the low- and middle-income families will be compelled to reduce their present standard of living, where they will literally have to tighten their belts.

The bill before us today is one of the most dangerous measures ever to come before the House. It is dangerous for these reasons:

First. It creates an extremely dangerous psychology that may throw this Nation into a serious recession or economic depression.

Second. It puts a floor under taxes. By sponsoring this bill, the Truman administration serves unmistakable notice on the American people that they can expect no tax reduction; that, on the contrary, the tax rates, if they are changed in the future, must go higher.

Third. It adds fuel to the fires of inflation.

Fourth. It creates the fiction that the people are being given tax relief when the facts will show that the people in reality are having their taxes increased through higher prices for the things they have to buy.

Fifth. It firmly imbeds wartime excise taxes in the peacetime tax structure.

Sixth. It plunders people who owe no taxes, especially the old people who are living on dividends.

Seventh. It raids the meager treasuries of charitable institutions—churches, hospitals, homes for the aged and crippled children.

In short, this bill is the most dangerous and dishonest tax bill ever to be reported by a responsible congressional committee.

H. R. 8920, reported out of the Ways and Means Committee and brought to the floor of the House today, is indefensible. It violates the principles of sound and just taxation. Many of the provisions of this bill are unjust, inequitable, and un-American. It will tend to paralyze enterprise and place a penalty on honesty. It has made reductions in some excise taxes in order that the public may not know the extent of the injustice, dishonest and discriminatory character of other provisions of the bill.

There are provisions in H. R. 8920 which plunder the public to the point of confiscation. Under the terms of this revenue measure, an army of bureaucratic employees will be added to the Government payroll to administer this unsound, unjust, deceptive piece of legislation.

Does any intelligent person dispute the fact that all taxation is paid out of production and that all production bears the burden of taxation? Can it be successfully controverted that all production is hampered and handicapped by too high taxation?

Why are prices of goods at this time so inordinately high? Is not one of the factors that all products are increased in price in the exact proportion of taxation?

Let every taxpayer remember that when the top 41 percent corporation tax is laid on the product of a corporation, directly or indirectly, it must come out of the product, and that every such tax must be paid by the ultimate consumer in the price of the product. Is there any possible way for a producer to pay taxation of any kind except by adding the tax to the cost of his product?

The people will have to learn, perhaps the hard way, that excessive Government spending and high taxation mean ultimate depression, oppression, and destruction. This bill with its top 41 percent corporation tax will take from the people the money they should have to use for themselves to buy what they want and need. A slight, partial and discriminatory reduction in the excise taxes presented in this bill is to lull the taxpayers into the false belief that they are getting tax relief. Instead of tax relief this bill hikes taxes. In addition it places a burden on millions of old people who are trying to exist on a meager income from corporate dividends.

I again repeat I am for a liberal excise-tax reduction. At the beginning of this session of Congress I introduced a bill which would have completely eliminated many of the excise taxes and reduced drastically nearly all others. I have consistently championed excise reduction since the end of the war.

I think that we should have had excise relief long ago. But I can't go along with this deceitful measure.

I know of a case that is typical of thousands of elderly people. An old couple, each one of them past 65 years old, the wife blind and cared for by her husband. They own a humble home. It has to have repairs and taxes on it have to be paid. Their only income is from dividends amounting to $1,400 a year. They have five exemptions, two each because of age and one because of blindness. Therefore, they owe no income tax. Yet under this bill 10 percent of their annual income of $1,400 from dividends will be withheld from them by the Government. This old couple in the sunset of life, unable to work, is compelled under this bill to turn over to a spendthrift administration $140 for it to use without paying interest. Half of the $140 withheld will be continuously withheld by the impecunious Truman administration. It must be remembered that the tax bill is President Truman's. It has been made to meet his specifications and by his command.

What of a church which is exempt from income taxation, which receives dividends from a few stocks donated to it? Does the church escape? No. Ten percent is withheld under the provisions of this bill. The Government takes the money, uses it, and does not pay interest on it. Unless this provision is sometime repealed the church will be out half the amount withheld by the Government without a termination date.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. May I ask if in the two cases cited either the elderly people or the church or the charity owe any taxes whatever?

Mr. REED of New York. Not one cent.

What about the hospitals in the counties you represent, my colleagues, some of which may have an income of say $8,000 annually from dividends? The income of a hospital under present law is exempt. It is still nontaxable. But under the provisions of this bill the Government will withhold 10 percent of the $8,000—or $800—even though nontaxable. This administration is indifferent to the urgent needs of hospitals for money to care for the lame, the halt, the critically ill and the blind. The Government confiscates this $800 to the extent at least of taking it and using it without interest. Moreover, the hospital will always be out at least half the $800. If there are any financially hard-pressed institutions in the country today it is the local hospitals. The drive for funds in every large American community demonstrates their financial difficulties.

The colleges, of which there are thousands—many of them denominational—are hard pressed for funds. Most of them are the owners of a few stocks received as benefactions, from which stock income is derived in the form of dividends. Do these colleges, although exempt from taxes, escape the rigors of this confiscatory witholding provision of H. R. 8920? They do not.

What about the homes for crippled children? Do they, too, have to sacrifice the use and the interest on their income from dividends to gratify the greed of the Washington spendthrifts? They do.

This legislation presupposes that every American citizen and every free institution is a thief and a swindler.

There are provisions in this bill which will furnish all the information necessary for the Treasury and Internal Revenue Bureau in every respect to protect the revenue from loss through unreported dividends. All that would be required to protect the revenue would be to put in operation form 1099. It is applicable to corporations and cooperative organizations. Form 1099 could be filed before February 28 showing the aggregate amount of dividends or patronage refunds paid to any individual, trust, or estate, and the date of such payment. All taxpayers could be required to itemize the amount of each dividend and patronage refunds received together with the name of the payer or corporation. Corporations are now required under existing law to file a 1099 return showing the name of the taxpayer and the amount of dividends paid, only in those cases, however, where the amount of the dividends paid is $100 or more. By requiring corporations and cooperatives to file this form on all dividends and patronage refunds, irrespective of the amount, the Bureau will be advised of the name of every recipient, and not just those who received $100 or more from any one company, together with the amount received.

This simple, understandable, effective remedy to meet the problem, if there is one, of failure to report dividend income is not acceptable to the Truman administration, for the reason that it does not lend itself to the creation of more political jobs for the approaching congressional elections.

To continue the subject of the 10-percent withholding tax on dividends, I wish to present the views of an income tax expert, who speaks from tax practice rather than theory:

I am all for the Treasury Department getting every tax dollar that they are rightfully entitled to, but in the past few years since withholding taxes have been in force I have had many opportunities to see how long it took for the taxpayer to get money refunded to him resulting from overpayments.

Dividends are already plenty taxed now—taxed to the paying corporation at 38 percent, and taxed to the individual at from about 16.6 percent on up.

Were this plan put into operation it would impose a heavy expense on the paying corporation in addition to the expense of handling the present withholding tax and might result in the reduction of dividends.

The Treasury Department would soon decide that a new department was needed to properly handle this plan and would immediately require from 30,000 to 60,000 or more additional employees to handle it—and, of course, require a large sum of money to operate the new department.

Now—

Continues my friend—

for a look at the taxpayer's side of the matter: A large number of men employed on a salary, or wage try to save something for their old age and usually invest it in common stocks, preferred stocks, bonds, and Government bonds. These they lay away and as dividends are paid on them, they reinvest the earnings in still other securities, or use them for some specific purpose (such as paying on the home, the car, or some item of furniture, etc.).

Some of these men die before reaching the age of retirement, while others retire and attempt to live on this dividend income. In other cases it falls to the widow to live and operate her home on these dividends. In all cases these quarterly dividend checks help to keep things going. Beginning at age 65 the double exemption on the Federal income tax allows each person (man or wife) $1,200 of income not taxable and in the instances mentioned above these dividends would not be subject to income tax. In a great many instances neither the husband nor the widow would fully understand about this 10-percent withholding, nor how to go about getting it back. In such cases the tax which was withheld would become another tax on income (in the form of dividends), as they would not get it back. In all cases where it was withheld when the income was not taxable it would require from 1 year to 1¾ years from date of dividend payment to get it refunded, and then without interest.

I continue quoting:

I have in mind many situations which would apply to clients of mine, especially those who are at present in the 64th or 65th year. The following are two instances:

A. Man and wife have just reached 65 years during 1950—so they are entitled to an income tax exemption of $2,400.

They receive dividends from 10 to 15 stocks of approximately $1,200.

They have quite a few United States War Bonds, series E, which will mature in 5 to 7 years and on which they have reported interest each year according to schedule prepared for them, but which interest they will not get for 5 to 7 years as the bonds mature.

Under the proposed method of withholding of 10 percent of dividends income during the year they will be out $120 of cash income, or $10 a month which, after all, will still buy some necessary items. Now, if they are properly advised they will apply to get that $120 back, and so if lucky they may get back in a year and three-quarters from date of first dividend payment of the year, but before they get it their return must be audited, they will be questioned, etc.

B. A man died very suddenly leaving a wife, some common stocks, a little life insurance, and his home, which was about paid for. In her case she is about 53 years so she has a $600 exemption. She tries to supplement the income received from the dividends on her stock by renting several rooms in her home (she has no children home), but says it is rather difficult going as it is now.

Under the proposed method with a 10 percent cut in her income from dividends she will really find it tough going. Now if she files her tax return and the tax is not as much as has been withheld on the dividend income, she will have to wait a year to a year and three-quarters to get the refund, besides going through the same questioning and possibly having the amount of tax that was claimed to be withheld disputed by the tax auditors. In that case more delays. That may sound unreal, but it has happened to several persons already this year under the regular withholding plan.

It seems a crime to me to put in force a plan like that which will affect widows, older people, and those dependent on income from dividends for their living when such a plan is not necessary. For example, there are over 900,000 stockholders of American Telephone & Telegraph. Allied Chemical has thousands. So does the various investment trusts such as Massachusetts Investors Trust and many others. A large percentage of those are widows or old people who are dependent upon dividends for a living and a 10 percent cut would really hurt.

The foregoing statements are taken from situations which are not theories, but actual situations as I know them. Present Federal taxes take a large bite out of the lowest wage earner and should be reduced. They can only be reduced by a reduction in the Federal expenditures.

In the light of the increased tax load which H. R. 8920 will place upon the already overburdened public, an editorial points out:

What is needed in Washington is some clearness of vision and some sound American common sense; some realization that taxation means national exhaustion; some understanding that what the Government spends the people must pay; and that whatever is paid to the Government must be deducted from the purchasing power of the community, from the consumption of goods, from the manufacture of products and consequently from the expansion of business, and from the employment of labor.

There is one thing the Democratic Party has never learned either from experience or observation, and that is that the growth and development of business is what Government should encourage not penalize and paralyze. For 17 years the New Deal and its successor, the Tru-manite spenders, have taught millions of citizens that they can live off the rich taxpayers. This cannot be done even under a program of confiscation of all taxable income over $10,000, for the reason that it would raise only $4,000,000,000, because the Truman welfare state program calls for over $7,020,600,000 as its estimated initial cost, and an additional cost of $25,187,000,000 as the annual expense of the President's proposal when in full operation.

To confiscate all incomes in the United States over $26,000 would yield only $990,000,000.

A corporation tax rate of 50 percent would raise only $3,000,000,000 in 1 year. Yet, to win votes President Truman would urge an annual expenditure of $65,000,000,000 to finance his spending program. It is a well-known fact to all sound economists that "the process of production requires the laying out of capital long before, in some cases many years before, any returns can be expected from the investment. No intelligent man of business will take such long risks with his savings or borrowed money when conditions are unsettled, and even the most venturesome are fearful of what lies ahead. Without confidence in the future, without trust in the Government, without faith in the courts, and without some assurance that the laws of the game will not be changed, capital will not seek investment."

And in the same connection let me quote Cicero:

Nothing—

Said he—

so cements and holds together in union all parts of a society as faith or credit.

This was written by Cicero at the time the Roman Republic was destroying both faith and credit.

No statesman before or since Cicero has pointed out so clearly as he did, at the moment of their occurrence, the causes of a nation's ruin.

If the provisions contained in the 152 pages of H. R. 8920 are carefully examined with its high tax rate, its drastic changes in the rules of the business game and its confiscatory aspects, no intelligent man of business will risk his venture capital in a new enterprise. The Trumanite program of spending, taxing, and confiscating is destroying public faith and public credit.

Venture capital is the very heart and life's blood of free enterprise. It is essential to full employment. Venture capital can come only from profits distributed as dividends and from the savings of the people. Impose too high a tax on these and the expansion of industry and of payrolls stagnate. Why? Because it has been fully demonstrated that confiscatory taxes prevent the creation of risk or venture capital. What interest has the laboring man in venture capital? He should have this interest. It requires on the average an investment of $8,000 in factory, tools, and machines to give one man or one woman a job. This is the average but it varies according to the character of the industry. The investment per job ranges from $2,000 per job to $40,000. The tax imposed in H. R. 8920 will not and cannot produce venture capital. It will retard savings. It will cut dividends. It will reduce the income of individuals and hence impair the effort to save venture capital.

ACCELERATION OF CORPORATE PAYMENTS—THE BIG HOAX

Under present law corporations may pay their taxes in four installments. In order, however, to bring revenue into the Treasury more quickly, the bill contains a provision for accelerating these payments so that within a 5-year period corporations will have to make their payments in two installments instead of four. This proposal will produce no additional revenue but has the political virtue of reducing the fiscal deficit for fiscal 1951 by approximately $700,000,000. As originally proposed, corporations would have had to immediately pay their taxes in two installments instead of four. As now contained in the bill corporations will pay 110 percent of their taxes in each Federal fiscal year over a 5-year period. The political motive is just as clear although the sleight-of-hand trick has been considerably modified from the original proposals, which was characterized by an organization of small businesses as a piece of "economic illiteracy."

Nevertheless, the proposal as it now stands is unwise and is an illustration of the frantic efforts being made by the Democratic majority to conceal the waste of the people's money perpetrated by the Truman spenders.

One of our leading newspaper chains—Scripps-Howard—has the slogan, "Give light and the people will find their own way." Here is what it has to say about the big hoax to hide the deficit:

The speed-up in corporate tax collections will not bring in a single dollar of additional revenue. It will only bring in some of those dollars sooner, and to that extent diminish the amount of red ink in the embarrassing fiscal years immediately ahead. And, when the speed-up schedule reaches its goal of two tax payments a year instead of four, the budget-makers will no longer have that cushion of corporate taxes due.

But others will have to worry about that. Many politicians now serving will no longer be in office.

There would be more public opposition to this speed-up if more people generally understood that when a corporation balances its books at the year's end, the profit figure is not represented by cash in the bank, but consists largely of inventories of raw materials, semifinished products, and finished goods in transport, in warehouses and on the shelves, in the endless stream of manufacturer and merchandising.

This speed-up provision is likely to cause sporadic unemployment as businesses borrow money from the banks, squeeze down inventories, and slow down production in order to catch up with the Government's new tax-payment schedule.

But it probably won't cause any layoffs until after the November election.

PRE-MARCH 1, 1913, HEARINGS

Section 205 of the bill imposes for the first time on corporate stockholders a tax on distributions of earnings, profits and appreciation in value of assets accrued prior to March 1, 1913. This new tax is unjustified, unnecessary, inequitable and discriminatory, for the following reasons:

First. To adopt the present provisions would be an unwarranted departure from the declared policy of the Congress consistently followed in Federal income tax legislation for 34 years. Distributions of earnings and profits or from appreciation in value accrued before March 1, 1913 are not taxable because they were exempted from taxation in the provisions of the Federal income-tax law in 1916, it being the purpose of the Congress to distinguish between earnings and accumulations prior to March 1, 1913—the effective date of said law—and to tax only earnings and accumulations after that date. The Congress studied this question extensively again in 1921, 1924, 1928, 1932, 1934, and 1942, and on each occasion refused to change the basic principle established in 1916.

Second. March 1, 1913, has long been definitely established in the law and in the concepts of the Congress as the dividing point between property (capital) and income for purpose of Federal taxation. Earnings and profits, and increase in the value of property accrued prior to that date, have been properly treated as capital, and not subject to tax whenever or however realized, or to whomsoever distributed in dividends. In the case of a complete liquidation of a corporation which was dealt with in Lynch v. Turrish (247 U. S. 221 (1918)) it was held that appreciation in value of assets accrued prior to March 1, 1913, was not taxable as income to stockholders when distributed. In Lynch v. Hornby (247 U. S. 339 (1918)) it was decided on very technical grounds and distinctions that dividends declared and paid in the ordinary course of business by a corporation to its stockholders after March 1, 1913, out of surplus accumulations before that date, were taxable to the individual shareholders as income.

The distinction above noted is a very tenuous one. In point of substance and practicality, what difference should it make that a stockholder—as in Lynch against Turrish—realizes the pre-March 1, 1913 surplus by a complete corporate liquidation after that date instead of—as in Lynch against Hornby—realizing it by virtue of the fact that a corporation after that date operates the assets in which the surplus inheres and sets aside for distribution the proceeds of such operation? Technical distinctions seem to disappear when the standard of fair and equal treatment is applied.

Third. The proposal here, if adopted, would result in the imposition of discriminatory tax burdens, in that (a) only corporation stockholders, and not individuals and partnerships, are affected by the tax, and (b) it discriminates against the stockholders of those corporations which have kept their pre-March 1, 1913, surpluses in the business and used them to expand industry for the purpose of increasing the economic strength of the country.

Fourth. It is frequently not practicable for a corporation to distribute pre-March 1, 1913, surpluses. It is a matter of common knowledge that all well-managed corporations, especially those which envision growth, must devote a certain portion of each year's income to betterments, additions, and general business expansion. Yet since the Revenue

Act of 1917, in order to take advantage of the exemption from income taxation, a corporation must first have distributed all earnings accumulated by it since February 28, 1913, in other words, "strip itself to the bone" in order that its stockholders may avail themselves of the exemption in the 1916 Revenue Act. For this reason, many corporations have not distributed their earnings and increase in value of assets accrued prior to March 1, 1913.

Fifth. The Treasury's claim of alleged simplification of tax computation and collection procedures as an argument for this proposal is illusory. Pre-March 1, 1913, earnings and appreciation in values have already largely been determined. Even where they have not, and whatever the administrative problem may be, simplification in income-tax procedure should not be attained at the price of inflicting unfair and discriminatory treatment upon taxpayers.

Sixth. The adoption of this proposal would not close any loophole as the Treasury suggests. Rather it would be a gouging out from the code a provision which, after full and mature deliberation, the Congress placed there in 1916 and has kept there since despite all the repetitive arguments now advanced against it.

Seventh. There is no evidence that the proposed amendments would result in the collection of any additional revenues. In the 34 years since the enactment of section 115 (b), many of the corporations which had surpluses as of March 1, 1913, have either distributed them or lost them in the course of their business operations, especially in the period of depression of the early 1930's. While there is still a substantial number of corporations with pre-March 1, 1913, surpluses, generally they have accumulated additional surpluses since that time which under the law must be distributed first. It is therefore unlikely that any great number will distribute pre-March 1, 1913, surpluses as dividends in the near future. Of course, if such surpluses are distributed in liquidation, they are constitutionally not taxable—Lynch against Turrish, supra. It is only when these surpluses are distributed as dividends that the tax would be levied.

TAXING THE INTEREST ELEMENT IN INSTALLMENT PAYMENTS OF LIFE INSURANCE

I state without fear of successful contradiction that H. R. 8920 sets up a racket for the confidence men and the swindlers. I refer to the provisons for taxing the interest element in installment payments on life insurance. You lawyers all know that there are vultures who prey upon the widows and orphans where benefits from insurance policies are paid to them in a lump sum.

The professional racketeers will hail the promise to tax the interest element on installment payments of life insurance as manna from Heaven. This provision will force lump-sum payments and thus throw down the bars of protection to widows and orphans, the protection of whom has always been considered a wise and humane public policy. I deplore the fact that such a provision should be enacted into law to aid a racketeering group of gougers in exploiting the insurance benefits bequeathed to the widows and orphans of the Nation.

There is a great difference from both a social viewpoint and a tax viewpoint between the purchase of a life annuity with money on which income taxes have already been paid and the indemnity paid to a beneficiary for loss of earning power of the insured. The vast majority of the latter payments are to widows and minor children. Sixty-five percent of the beneficiaries are women; 26 percent are men. Death benefits in 37 percent of the cases are paid to wives; in 23 percent of the cases to children, in 28 percent to estates, institutions, and others such as trustees. Ninety-six and five-tenths percent of death benefit payments are less than $2,000 a year.

The imposition of this tax at this time without a similar method being applied to purchased annuities is grossly unfair. It adds one more discrimination to the code which cannot be justified. The argument that the 3-percent annuity rule may later be corrected is not sufficient reason for the imposition at this time of this tax standing by itself. As you know only too well from your own experience, piecemeal revision has been the bane of the present Internal Revenue Code.

SALE OF BUSINESS PROPERTY

Section 209 (b) of the bill reverses the policy established in 1938, and continued in 1942, by providing that for taxable years beginning after the enactment of the bill losses from 117 (j) transactions—and also abandoned property—must be treated as capital losses instead of ordinary losses. An execption is made in the case of casualty losses which will still be treated as ordinary losses.

In 1938 the definition of capital assets was amended to exclude "property used in trade or business, of a character which is subject to the allowance or depreciation." The purpose of this amendment was to permit ordinary loss deductions for losses sustained on the sale of depreciable property, and as a corollary the gain was fully taxable. In 1942 Congress amended the law by enacting section 117 (j), which provides that net gains from the sale or exchange—or involuntary conversion—of depreciable property and real estate used in the taxpayer's trade or business for more than 6 months are to be treated as capital gains, and net losses from such transactions as ordinary losses. The effect of this change was to continue the policy adopted in 1938 of treating business property losses as ordinary losses and to make the gains from the sale or exchange of such property, including also real estate used in the trade or business, as capital gains subject only to the maximum effective rate of 25 percent.

There are many good reasons for continuing the provisions of section 117 (j) which treat as long-term capital gain net gains realized on the sale of depreciable property and land used in the taxpayers' trade or business for more than 6 months and treating net losses on the sale of such property as ordinary losses. A major objection to the Treasury proposal is that it runs counter to the policy of encouraging the replacement of obsolete equipment and encouragement for the sale of business property. Moreover, of course, section 117 (j) is not a "one-way street," as the Treasury claims, because in the case of depreciable assets losses on their sale generally reflect the inadequacy of the depreciation rates. Such losses should be allowed as ordinary losses because they are basically a cost of the business.

If there is to be any change in section 117 (j), then at least a fair and equitable change should be made, and not the provisions contained in H. R. 8920. Under existing law, corporations cannot deduct any capital losses from ordinary income, and the effect of the majority proposal will therefore be to prevent many businesses from taking any losses from the sale of business property. Most businesses do not have capital gains against which they will be able to apply the loss sustained from the sale of their plant and equipment, and in a period of depressed conditions and falling prices the severity of the majority provision will be most aparent. Demands will then be made for relief—and properly so.

A more equitable rule, and one which would encourage, and not discourage, industry to improve its plant efficiency by the replacement of obsolete equipment, would be to at least provide that if there is no offsetting capital gain then 25 percent of the loss from a 117 (j) transaction would be permitted against ordinary income. The 25-percent rate is the same rate applied to the capital gains.

CHARITABLE TRUSTS AND FOUNDATIONS

Among the complex provisions dealing with charitable trusts and foundations are two provisions which the Congress should not enact without at least giving the problem more study so that the full implications may be fully appreciated. I refer to the following two provisions contained in H. R. 8920:

First. Section 331 of the bill which denies tax deductions to donors of gifts to charitable trusts or foundations where the donor or members of his family control the organization to which the contribution is made and the contribution consists of stock in a corporation in which the donor, together with members of his family, controls 50 percent or more of stock including the stock held by the charitable trust or foundation.

Second. Section 321 of the bill which imposes a tax on the investment income of all future inter vivos trusts where the income under the trust is accumulated for more than a 5-year period even though the only purpose is to accumulate sufficient funds in order to fulfill a specific charitable objective such as the building of a library, church, or hospital.

It is apparent that if a donor desires to give stock of a corporation to a university he may make it directly and a deduction is allowable. If he gives the same stock to a foundation which neither he nor his family control and directs its use for the benefit of the same university a deduction is allowable. If he gives the same stock to a foundation, even one controlled by his own family, and directs its use for the same university the deduction is still allowable unless the family and the foundation also control the corporation. In short, the same gift can be made to the same donee for the same objectives in any number of ways without the creation of a tax situation to the donor. It is frivolous to contend that a measure of such a character and having such legal possibilities of escape from taxation is a revenue measure.

Since the tax would only be involved where the donation is of a particular kind of property to a particular type of foundation the proposal is not only class legislation but a social measure as well. Surely family-controlled businesses do not offend public morals. Such businesses have added much that is good to the social and economic life of America. Certainly family foundations are not conceived in inequity or conducted for nefarious ends. The story of the Guggenheim, Carnegie, Rockefeller, and a hundred other family foundations is one of accomplishment. Also they have relieved the Government of this country and our local governments of far greater expenditures than any taxes which might have been collected. If neither the family business nor the family foundation have inherent evils I cannot conceive of the social immorality which arises when the two are brought together.

I think I have demonstrated that the pending proposal will not create revenue for the individual who desires to make substantial donations may still do so tax-free. If this is the case why should he or his estate be penalized, and it is a penalty, make no mistake about that, if those same donations are to be administered through a foundation whose policies he and his family direct? It seems to me the proposal is obviously put forward as a New Deal social reform. If this is so it should be done openly and hearings should be afforded to permit the committee to canvass as to the proposal's real objectives and as to the merits of those objectives.

I have touched upon some of the more obviously inequitable and unsound provisions of this bill. There are many more. For example, no provision for floor stock refunds has been made—another deliberate Democratic injustice to those who have large floor stocks upon which the higher excise tax rate has already been paid. This unfair failure to provide floor stock refunds will penalize with large losses many small businesses and even many large stores, particularly in the West, which serve such great areas that tremendous stocks of goods have to be kept and the excise tax paid.

The public has been urging, demanding, and appealing to the Truman spendthrifts and to his majority in Congress to do two things—cut Federal expenditures and give tax relief, especially excise-tax relief. The Truman spendthrifts have turned a deaf ear on both demands.

I call attention to the fact that at the opening of the first session of the Eighty-first Democratic Congress more than 50 bills designed to afford excise-tax relief were introduced by Republicans. Every one of these was ignored by the Democratic Congress. These Republican bills are on file in the Ways and Means Committee.

I have had some legislative experience that no other Member on the Ways and Means Committee, except its distinguished chairman, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON], has had. I was a Member of Congress immediately after World War I. What were the fiscal conditions which the Republican Party had to face in 1919 when it came to power? Let me call the attention of the Members of the House to these postwar problems. I would have the Democrats who have joined in the Truman philosophy of unrestrained Federal spending and consequent deficit financing realize that when taxes are too high more revenue can be raised by lowering them than by skyrocketing them.

Tax reduction, a balanced budget, and debt retirement have ever been the traditional fiscal policy of the Republican Party. Our party is dedicated to a solvent America, an expanding economy, and a high standard of living for all the people under a free-enterprise system.

On the other hand, the Democratic Party is dedicated to the principles of deficit financing, higher taxes, and a controlled economy leading to bankruptcy, socialism, and war.

I shall now state some facts to counteract the false philosophy now being preached to and practiced on the American people by the Truman spenders of the people's money.

Debt in 1919 after World War I was $26,000,000,000; taxes, highest in peacetime in the history of the United States; six or seven million persons idle; soup kitchens organized in our cities; how could the Nation's productivity and employment be stimulated? was the issue confronting the people.

How was it met? Did the Republican Party plunge the Nation into deficit spending? Did it increase the national debt? The first thing the Republican Party did was to retrench, cut expenses to the bone, but did not impair essential services.

Next in 1919–20 it promptly cut personal-income taxes from 12 percent to 8 percent.

Again in 1921–23 another cut was made in individual-income taxes of married persons by increasing their personal exemption from $2,000 to $2,500 and the exemption for each dependent was increased from $200 to $400.

In 1924 the rate was reduced from 8 percent to 6 percent; also the tax for 1923 was reduced 25 percent by the 1924 act.

Again in the 1926 Revenue Act—year 1925–27—the personal-income tax was reduced from 6 percent to 5 percent; also the exemption for a single person was increased from $1,000 to $1,500 and the exemption for married persons was increased from $2,500 to $3,500.

In 1928—year 1929—the rate was reduced from 5 percent to 4 percent—1½ percent on first $4,000; 2 percent on second $4,000.

What was the effect of these reductions in taxes in the face of our national debt?

The six or seven million idle people were put to work.

One billion dollars each year for 10 years was paid on the national debt. The greatest period of prosperity was enjoyed by the people during this period of tax reduction; the budget was balanced each year for 10 years.

What about the World War I excise taxes? The Revenue Act of 1921 repealed a large number of war excise taxes which were a thorn in the flesh of the consumers.

The 1921 and 1922 act covered another large group of excise taxes inimical to business stimulation. The Revenue Act of 1924—June 2, 1924—repealed another large group of burdensome excise taxes. The Revenue Act of 1926—February 26, 1926—repealed another group of burdensome taxes on business enterprise and consumers.

Thus by the reduction of war taxes—Federal income taxes and war excise taxes—following World War I, business was stimulated, prosperity resulted, budget was balanced, and the national debt reduced $10,000,000,000 in 10 years.

The Truman spendthrift administration cries out that taxes cannot with safety be reduced in the face of a $257,000,000,000 debt, a $50,000,000,000 spending budget, and a $5,000,000,000 deficit.

Let us look into this piece of deception.

For example, in the fall of 1945 the Bureau of the Budget estimated that the administration would have a deficit of over $30,000,000,000 for the single year 1946—that is the period between July 1, 1945, and June 30, 1946.

Business was slipping, unemployment was increasing. How was the objective of providing incentives for business expansion and to increase consumer purchasing power to be achieved? There was only one answer and that was to provide tax relief to individuals and business enterprises.

Accordingly, the Revenue Act of 1945, the provisions of which became effective January 1, 1946, was enacted even though it was estimated that its provisions would result in a loss of revenue in excess of $5,000,000,000. This Revenue Act of 1945, despite an existing deficit of $30,000,000,000, was passed.

The President did not veto it. The act lowered slightly individual rates, allowing the same exemptions for the normal tax as were previously given only for the surtax.

What relief did this give in the face of the $30,000,000,000 deficit? It removed approximately 12,000,000 of the 48,000,000 then on the income-tax rolls from the tax rolls. This 1945 act made several changes in the corporate rate, the net result in general was to give a total combined rate of 38 percent instead of 49 percent as in 1945.

Not only this, but in the face of a $30,000,000,000 deficit the excess-profits tax was repealed for 1946 and later years and the capital-stock tax was repealed with respect to taxable years ending June 30, 1945.

All of this tax reduction program of 1945 was done to forestall a threatened depression. Now then, what happened to the revenue under the stimulating effect of tax reduction?

After these reductions under the 1945 revenue bill our tax receipts instead of being less than the previous year, increased an additional $300,000,000 and by 1948 the revenue had increased by approximately $1,700,000,000 over 1946.

The bill, H. R. 8920, is only one more of the step-by-step legislative proposals for the Truman spendthrifts which, if enacted into law, will lead to a further decline in our free enterprise system.

I believe that nowhere else have the economic catastrophes which have led to the decline of a great country been summarized more briefly and effectively than by James H. Brested in Ancient Times:

The penalty of wealth seemed to be ruin, and there was no motive for success in business when such prosperity meant ruinous overtaxation. Many a worthy man secretly fled from his lands to become a wandering beggar, or even to take up a life of robbery and violence. The Roman Empire had already lost, and had never been able to restore, its prosperous farming class. It now lost likewise the enterprising and successful businessmen of the middle class. Diocletian therefore endeavored to force these classes to continue their occupations. He enacted laws forbidding any man to forsake his lands or occupation. The societies, guilds, and unions in which the men of various occupations had long been organized were now gradually made obligatory, so that no one could follow any calling or occupation without belonging to such a society. Once a member he must always remain in the occupation it implied. * * * Even the citizen's wages and the prices of the goods he bought or sold were as far as possible fixed for him by the state. The Emperor's innumerable officials kept an eye upon even the humblest citizen. They watched the grain dealer, butchers, and bakers, and saw to it that they properly supplied the public and never deserted their occupation. In a word, the Roman Government now attempted to regulate almost every interest in life, and wherever the citizen turned he felt the control and oppression of the state.

Staggering under his crushing burden of taxes, in a state which was practically bankrupt, the citizen of every class had now become a mere cog in the vast machinery of the government. He had no other function than to toil for the state, which exacted so much of the fruit of his labor that he was fortunate if it proved barely possible for him to survive on what was left.

President Truman and his spendthrift followers are leading a free people to the same disasters so clearly illustrated by Dr. Brested. Those who vote for H. R. 8920 will assist in the spendthrift high tax program.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DELANEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8920) to reduce excise taxes, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. McDaniel, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3776) entitled "An act to amend and extend the provisions of the District of Columbia Emergency Rent Act, as amended"; requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. KEFAUVER, Mr. LEAHY, and Mrs. SMITH of Maine to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

EXTENDING SELECTIVE SERVICE ACT OF 1948

Mr. VINSON submitted the following conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 6826) to provide for the common defense through the registration and classification of certain male persons, and for other purposes:

CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. NO. 2345)

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6826) to provide for the common defense through the registration and classification of certain male persons, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the text of the bill and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "That subsection (b) of section 17 of the Selective Service Act of 1948 (62 Stat. 604), as amended, is hereby amended by striking out 'July 9, 1950' and substituting therefor 'July 9, 1951'.

"SEC. 2. The Selective Service Act of 1948 is hereby amended by inserting after section 20 the following new section.

"'AUTHORITY TO ORDER RESERVE COMPONENTS TO ACTIVE FEDERAL SERVICE

"'SEC. 21. Until July 9, 1951, and subject to the limitations imposed by section 2 of the Selective Service Act of 1948, as amended, the President shall be authorized to order into the active military or naval service of the United States for a period of not to exceed twenty-one consecutive months, with or without their consent, any or all members and units of any or all reserve components of the armed forces of the United States and retired personnel of the Regular armed forces.'

"SEC. 3. So much of section 10 (b) (4) of the Selective Service Act of 1948 (62 Stat. 604) as precedes the second proviso is hereby amended to read as follows: '(4) to appoint, and to fix, in accordance with the Classification Act of 1949, the compensation of such officers, agents, and employees as he may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of this title: Provided, That the compensation of employees of local boards and appeal boards may be fixed without regard to the Classification Act of 1949:'.

"SEC. 4. This Act may be cited as the 'Selective Service Extension Act of 1950'."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title of the bill, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

Amend the title so as to read: "An Act to extend the Selective Service Act of 1948, as amended, for a period of one year, and for other purposes."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6826) to provide for the common defense through the registration and classification of certain male persons, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate amended the House bill by striking all after the enacting clause of the House bill and substituting completely new language. All provisions of both the House bill and the Senate amendment were therefore in conference.

The House bill proposed to extend the Selective Service Act of 1948 for a period of 2 years; the Senate amendment provided for a 3-year extension. The House bill and the Senate amendment thereto contained widely different provisions which limited the use of the compulsory features of the 1948 act until certain actions in the form of concurrent resolutions or declarations had been taken by either the Congress or the President. As a consequence, the House bill and the Senate amendment were in complete disagreement as to the form any extension of the 1948 act would take.

The managers on the part of the Senate and on the part of the House both receded in part from their disagreement and agreed to extend the Selective Service Act of 1948 in its present form for a period of 1 year to July 9, 1951, due to world conditions.

The House bill contained authority for the President to order into the active military or naval service of the United States for a period of not to exceed 21 consecutive months, with or without their consent, any or all members and units of any or all Reserve components of the armed forces of the United States and retired personnel of the Regular armed forces in the event the Congress, by concurrent resolution, declared an emergency existed which required an increase in the armed strength of the United States. The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate receded from its disagreement and agreed to an amendment which authorizes the President to order these components of the armed forces to active duty for 21 months within the personnel strengths provided by section 2 of the 1948 act.

The Senate amendment contained a technical provision with respect to the classification status of certain employees of local and appeal boards. The House bill contained no comparable provision. The managers on the part of the House receded from their disagreement and accepted the Senate amendment as necessary to correct a technical reference to the Classification Act of 1949.

The House bill contained a short title authorizing the act to be cited as the "Manpower Registration Act of 1950." The Senate amendment contained no comparable provision. The managers on the part of the Senate and the managers on the part of the House both receded in part and accepted as a short title "Selective Service Extension Act of 1950."

With respect to the title of the bill, the managers from both Houses agreed to an amended title, "An Act to extend the Selective Service Act of 1948, as amended, for a period of 1 year, and for other purposes."

Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the conference report on the bill (H. R. 6826) to provide for the common defense through the registration and classification of certain male persons, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, if that is the case, I object. We have an understanding that we are going to have a record vote on this, and that is why I am not objecting. But if that understanding is to be violated, then I will object.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, we will have a record vote on the final passage of the conference report.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I had no knowledge of any agreement that may have been made. Certainly, whatever agreement was made is not binding upon any individual member. A subject such as this, it seems to me, should be considered by the Members of the House before they are asked to vote on this. I am not in disagreement with the conference report; I supported it. But I do believe the Members should be present to consider and discuss it, and that is why I made the point of order that a quorum is not present.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from New York withdraw his point of order for the time being?

Mr. COLE of New York. Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I have the assurance of the gentleman from Georgia, the chairman of the committee, that he will ask for a record vote on this very important issue? I think the membership of the House should go on record on this important question.

Mr. VINSON. I will ask for a record vote on the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I renew my point of order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. SCRIVNER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what was the request?

The SPEAKER. The immediate consideration of the conference report.

Mr. SCRIVNER. I shall not object to that, Mr. Speaker, but I make the point of order that a quorum is not present. In view of the newspaper reports as to what the conference report contains, which is drastically different from that which passed the House, I feel that every Member should be present during the consideration of the conference report.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SCRIVNER] makes the point of order that a quorum is not present. Evidently a quorum is not present.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 305 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

By unanimous consent, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

EXTENDING SELECTIVE SERVICE ACT OF 1948

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the conference report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, these are critical and momentous times in which we are living. No one can tell what tomorrow will bring forth. In that atmosphere we conferees of the House and Senate felt that the only sensible thing to do was to extend the present selective-service law for 1 year, and that is what the conferees have unanimously agreed to. There were differences between the House and Senate, and, after long debate, probably those differences could have been reconciled, but we felt, in view of the world situation, that the sensible thing to do was merely to grant an extension for 1 year of the present Draft Act, and that is what we have done.

As you all know, under the present Draft Act the President has the authority to induct. If this conference report is agreed to, and the law is extended for 1 year, he can exercise that right if he sees fit to do so.

When the bill was before the House, the House placed a provision in the bill that upon the adoption of a concurrent resolution authorizing inductions, the President would have the authority to order the Reserves and the National Guard into Federal service. In conference we left out the requirement for the concurrent resolution, and the conference report provides that the President has the authority, if he desires to exercise it, for a period of 1 year, to order in the Reserves and the National Guard. As it is today, before the President can order in the Reserves and the National Guard, there must be a specific act of Congress authorizing him to do so. So in this draft extension we are saying that the President has the authority to order in the Reserves or the National Guard if, in his judgment, it is necessary to do so.

I think that in an emergency, the proper way to proceed would be first to order in all the organized reserves, order in the National Guard up to the numerical limits authorized in the law, and, lastly, to invoke the power of the draft. Of course, the President does not have to follow that procedure. The President can reverse that. Under this extension he could first order in the draftees. He could get up to his numerical ceiling in that way without ordering in the Reserves. We have given him full discretion, but we hope, if this authority must be used, he will first order in the Reserves and the National Guard before he exercises his right to order in the inductees. That is the substance of the conference report; it merely extends the present draft law for 1 year, to July 9, 1951. Every power given in the act of 1948 is carried forward for 1 year. We felt, in the uncertain times in which we are living, with no one knowing what lays in store, that the sensible thing to do in this instance is exactly what we did when the Rubber Act was before us a few weeks ago, that is, extend it for a period of time, because we cannot tell where we are drifting we do not know where the present difficulties may end. The situation is not of our making. We all know that the situation is clouded and uncertain. Therefore the safe and sound thing to do in such a situation is to stand where you were previously standing without embarking on severe restrictions on existing emergency authority.

If there is any question I shall be pleased to answer it; if not, I yield 15 minutes to my distinguished colleague the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT].

(Mr. SHORT asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks and to include two newspaper articles.)

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, most of the Members of this House know that I have up to this hour at all times violently opposed peacetime conscription. Perhaps I have not been the most intelligent, but certainly I have been one of the most vigorous and consistent opponents of peacetime draft because it is repugnant to free men.

I know how the uncertainty that hangs over the youth of the Nation makes it difficult for a young man to plan his education, and how difficult it makes it for him to find employment. Who would spend much time and money in training one who would soon leave.

I also realize that not since January of last year has any branch of the armed services resorted to peacetime draft, and they have succeeded in getting all the men they wanted or needed. However, the power of the President to conscript men during this past year and a half certainly has not been abused.

The bill we passed last week in the House provided that we should keep intact the Selective Service System by having registration and classification of all male eligibles between the ages of 18 and 25, but that none should be inducted until a concurrent resolution of both Houses of Congress was passed.

Your conferees fought for that position which you took. We met with the Senate conferees yesterday and got nowhere. We slept on it overnight—in fact, we have done very little sleeping the past two nights because something unusual but not at all surprising happened on Sunday. Events change one's outlook and position. We met again this morning and when it was apparent we were hopelessly deadlocked, and in view of world conditions and the tense international situation, we felt that unless the Senate would recede and agree to the House position, the best, the wisest, and the easiest thing for us to do would be not to extend and modify the more or less unintelligible version of a new draft law for 2 or 3 years but to continue the existing law for 1 year, and in addition give the President the authority whether Congress is in session or not to call out the National Guard or any of our Reserve components.

If any Member here ever entertained the slightest doubt as to the motives and purposes of one of our erstwhile allies, that doubt should now completely be dispelled. Though we promised in this last conflict we were fighting to respect the territorial integrities of the little countries and to give the people of those small nations the right to determine in free, open, and untrammeled elections, without outside pressure or external influence, the kind of governments they should have, we know one of our erstwhile allies, even before the surrender of Germany or the capitulation of Japan, forcibly seized a large hunk of Finland, and grabbed off Lithuania and Estonia, Latvia, Bessarabia, Ruthenia, Poland, East Prussia, and practically all of the Balkan States with the exception of Greece and Turkey and extended her frontier clear to the Elbe.

She threatened the little country of Iran, having an eye on the oil deposits there, and before the capitulation of Japan, came into the Pacific war at the eleventh hour after the United States had won that war almost single-handedly. Three days before the surrender of Hirohito, on board the battleship Missouri, to General MacArthur, this nation entered the Pacific war in order to grab off all of Manchuria, the south half of Sakhalin, the Kuriles, and to seize the north half of Korea, the industrial half above the thirty-eighth parallel.

She has been nibbling here, grabbing there, eating away, gnawing under, winning every round of this fight since the shooting stopped in 1945, winning every battle of the cold war without firing a shot.

We all know the technique of Soviet Russia. It is psychological penetration, it is subversive infiltration. It is to go into the little weak countries surrounding that vast territory where there is poverty and discontent, and by appealing to the discontented elements in the hope of creating mass confusion and offering impossible promises to stir up violence, the same technique, if you please, of Adolf Schickelgruber to divide and destroy. It is adroit but insidious and damnable.

What has happened in the last several hours? Her puppet regime in northern Korea without any provocation and without any justification attacked the people south of the thirty-eighth parallel. Once more the master mind is at work in the Kremlin, the 14 men who would rule the world, trying to test western civilization to find out just how far it can go without getting opposition reaction from those who oppose them.

If we sit idly by and allow Russia to come under this tree with an open basket to catch the ripe fruit that is about to fall, where will she strike next? Perhaps Formosa, that would dangerously impair our line of defense in the far-western Pacific from the Philippines through Okinawa to Japan. Korea today, Formosa tomorrow, the Philippines the next day, then Indochina, finally perhaps Iran. Heavens, where will there be an end and when shall we call a halt?

It was not an easy decision that your conferees had to make today. We have been wrestling with our consciences but we had to face brutal facts and meet a reality, unpleasant as that reality is. No longer can we continue to bury our heads like an ostrich in a sand dune with wishful thinking and expect peace to come to a shattered and a war-torn world. We already have lost too much face in the Orient, and face-saving means everything out there as many of us know. I see the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SIKES], the gentleman from California [Mr. JOHNSON], and others here who were with me in Korea when General Hodge had 40,000 American troops there in 1946, and we realized then that the moment we withdrew from that peninsula which is only 100 miles from Japan, that the Communists would move in, so there is nothing amazing or striking about what has taken place. The thing that surprises me is that they have not taken it over sooner because we withdrew a year ago.

Now, the big issue at stake in this thing is the supreme and severe test of the United Nations. Mr. Speaker, either it is going to be a going and successful concern from here out or it is going to crash and fall to pieces. For my part I want it to succeed. I voted for it originally. I still have faith and confidence in it. I know there have been many setbacks, bitter disappointments, but every infant has to crawl before it can walk; it has to walk before it can run, and no one can call the United Nations a failure until it is given a full and fair trial. Of course, one obstinate member, along with her satellites, because of the veto power, has balked much of the progress that could have been made, but I think with all of its weaknesses and failures it has accomplished much good and has promoted a much wider and better understanding among the different nations and the different peoples of this earth. Ye gods, we must realize that we are living in a shrunken world that has become a miniature province.

Coming back from Australia 3 or 4 years ago I had the honor of addressing the Chamber of Commerce in Honolulu for our genial and distinguished Delegate, Mr. FARRINGTON. That luncheon was at noon. The next evening I was having dinner with Mrs. Short here in Washington. We stopped in San Francisco to refuel about 1 or 2 o'clock in the morning, the only stop, but we were traveling in an oxcart, a C–54.

Only 2 weeks later a couple of our boys flew in 14½ hours nonstop from Honolulu to Andrews Field, adjacent to the District of Columbia.

Now we can fly across the continent, as one of our jet bombers did not so very long ago, from Moses Lake in the State of Washington to Andrews Field, in 3¾ hours, more than 600 miles an hour.

Not so long ago, coming back from Saudi Arabia and Iran, we had breakfast in Bermuda. I had luncheon in Washington, D. C., spent 4 hours in my office, and that same evening was having dinner with my family down in the southwest corner of Missouri near the Kansas-Oklahoma line.

So whether we like it or not, we must realize that modern science and technological developments and new methods of rapid transportation and communication have annihilated space and conquered time, and pushed Tokyo and Moscow up into our front yard.

We are going to have to live and get along with people, but so long as there are brigands in this world, so long as there are aggressors abroad, we must remain invincible and impregnable in this country on land, sea, and in the air. We shall continue to trust in God but still keep our powder dry. We will speak softly and reasonably but, if we have a thimbleful of brains, we will carry a big stick, because the only language that some people understand is the language of force. Having gone all through European Russia in 1931, I think I know enough about the Russian temperament to know that they respect strength and have only contempt for weakness.

Let us all hope and pray, as the President told several of us this noon down at the White House in the Cabinet room, with members of the Armed Services and Foreign Affairs Committees of both Houses of Congress, in addition to representatives of the State and Defense Departments, with all the Secretaries and the Joint Chiefs of Staff present, let us hope and pray that by taking bold, positive, firm action now we can stave off another world catastrophe. If we had challenged Hitler back in the thirties, after the anschluss of Austria, after the invasion of the Rhineland, after the seizure of the Sudetenland, if we had acted before he had gone into Poland, he perhaps would have thought a second time before he ever entered that country on the 1st of September 1939.

We should have learned from our past painful experiences. Much as I dislike a peacetime draft, we must realize that while we are not perhaps in a shooting war at this minute, certainly we are not enjoying peace anywhere in this world. We are not living in peacetimes, we are living in dangerous and perilous times. We are living in times that try men's souls, and I hope that our souls will prove to have the mettle capable of standing up sounding and showing a clear challenge to the forces of aggression wherever they might raise their ugly heads.

Mr. Speaker, under leave granted me, I include the following two articles from today's Washington Evening Star:

THEY MUST BE STOPPED

At the moment, in the confusion of war news from southern Korea, it is far from certain whether the United States—acting through the United Nations—has enough time left to throw in aid of a type effective enough, and on a scale large enough, to save the country from being completely overrun by the Kremlin's puppet invaders from the north.

Prior to being taken by surprise by this act of Communist aggression (a surprise that throws serious doubts on the use of our intelligence system), the official American view was that the southern Koreans could hold their own against attacks from the north, provided (1) that they had a genuine will to resist, and (2) that the Russians did not intervene by offering heavy support to their puppets—two points that are open to considerable question at this time.

The one basic fact that is really clear right now—amid conflicting reports about the fate of Seoul, the capital city, and about the morale of the southern Koreans—is that the invaders, undoubtedly acting on instructions from the Kremlin, have no intention of obeying the Security Council's order to cease fire and withdraw to their own territory north of the thirty-eighth parallel. Accordingly, at its meeting in New York today the UN Council will have to do something about this challenge to its authority, but just what it can do, or will do, is problematical in the extreme, though conceivably it may call upon the United States to take the lead in applying direct military pressure to the situation.

In this connection, however, what needs to be emphasized is this fact: That the success of anything we may do in concert with the United Nations—whether we limit ourselves to the shipment of military equipment or intervene directly with such things as our air power—will depend largely on the character of southern Korean resistance and on the scope of Russian intervention. If the resistance folds, then obviously our help will not save the country. By the same token, if the Soviet Union goes all-out in supporting its puppets, even a combination of determined resistance and heavy American aid will be incapable of holding the peninsula. For that peninsula is strategically and tactically untenable in the sense that the Russians, with their continental lines of communication, could take it with relative ease if they put full-scale force behind a drive to take it. That is why Korea has been excluded from the official United States concept of what constitutes our primary line of defense in Asia and the far Pacific.

But the fact remains, regardless of all these considerations, that our country and the United Nations as a whole have compelling reasons to do everything possible at this stage—even at the risk of war—to save southern Korea. For what the Russians seem to be doing, through their northern puppets, is probing a soft spot in the free world to find out how far they can go without having the free world hit back. They may be ready to carry this test to the point of a global explosion, but whether they are or not, it seems clear enough that if they are not resisted to the full right here, and right now, it will be only a matter of time before they do precisely the same thing elsewhere—against Iran, for instance.

What we are up against, in short, is much more than a situation confined to southern Korea, whose downfall could easily shatter the United Nations and gravely undermine American influence throughout the world. What we are up against is exactly what we were up against in the 1930's when Hitler was on the march. He could have been checked then, and the Second World War probably averted, by resolute action, and the same may be said now of the Russians. They should be stopped; they must be stopped. For it seems virtually certain that if they are allowed to get away with this latest of their postwar crimes, they will grow progressively more criminal in the future.

True enough, any complete effort to have a showdown with the Kremlin at this stage involves grave risks. But those risks must be measured in relation to the much graver risks that would confront us later on as a result of failure to act resolutely now. The future of the free world is at stake. We have a chance to stop the Russians today without war; if we fail to make the most of that chance, then on some future day, as surely as the sun rises and sets, we shall have to try to stop them with a war that could end in the ruin of our civilization.

IS RUSSIA READY TO FIGHT OVER KOREA?

(The author of this article has been writing a personalized column for the Associated Press since the days when he served as a war correspondent with American troops in north Africa. He expresses here a sort of average man's view of the meaning of the Korean explosion.)

(By Hal Boyle)

Is this the start of a third world war?

That is the question that touches most American hearts today. It is being asked again and again, as news pours in of the fighting in far Korea, the "Ireland of the Orient."

I believe the answer is "No." I believe that the answer would still be the same even though the United States dispatched troops, ships, and planes to back up the cease-fire decree of the United Nations.

Why? My conviction is that Soviet Russia isn't yet ready to plunge the globe into another international conflict.

She stretches across 7,000 vulnerable miles that aren't ready for war. Both her frontiers and her wide open heartland are unprepared for war, if we can believe what our military authorities say about her.

Let her own Russian-trained forces in Korea sweep through the opposition, as they have been doing. Or let them fail. Soviet Russia isn't yet ready to tie her own dreams of world conquest to the Northern Korean troops.

She yet expects to take Korea by the inaction of the Western World.

Again why? Because at present the Soviet military and political aim is to try to take the countries on its vast borders by their own interior revolutions. Greece yesterday, Korea today, Southeast Asia tomorrow. And where the day after tomorrow? Wherever poverty and interior political disaffection makes a country ripe for picking.

Russia backed down in Greece, is grappling in a sudden bold grab for Korea, hasn't yet made its main bid for Southeast Asia.

Why doesn't this mean war right now? For a deep and basic reason inherent to Russia's approach to its own predicament.

In Russia's very strength—its great sprawling, contiguous reach of land—lies its great weakness. It can be hit from many angles, and to keep itself from being approached it has endeavored to surround itself with buffer extensions of itself.

Whether or not it really accepts these satellite states into the pattern of its being, its leaders are trying frantically to protect the main body of Russia from possible enemy blows.

Russia lost the first battle for Berlin when its attempt to starve the German population was countered by the great Allied airlift, which flew in food, fuel, and medicine.

That was a substitute for direct force—and it worked. The Russian propaganda failed. The Allies delivered.

It is my conviction that even stronger measures can be taken in Korea than were employed in Greece—if the Allied command decides it is worth the gamble.

Russia is still barking in Korea—just another test of her pressure—and isn't ready to bite. She'll still stand for her bluff being called. And I'd call Joe Stalin now, just as Adolf Hitler should have been called when he marched into the Rhineland.

Remember?

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the conference report.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 315, nays 4, answered "present" 1, not voting 110, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AUTHORIZING DEPARTMENTS OF THE ARMY, NAVY, AND AIR FORCE TO TRANSFER CERTAIN REAL PROPERTY

Mr. KILDAY submitted a conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 5368) to authorize the Departments of the Army, Navy, and Air Force to participate in the transfer of certain real property or interests therein, and for other purposes.

MERCHANT SHIP SALES ACT OF 1946

Mr. HART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 3571) to continue the authority of the Secretary of Commerce under the Merchant Ship Sales Act of 1946, and for other purposes, as amended.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand this is a unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. HART. Yes; it is.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 14 of the Merchant Ship Sales Act of 1946, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 14. No contract of sale shall be made under this act after December 31, 1950, and no contract of charter shall be made under this act after September 30, 1950, except as provided for charter under section 5 (e)."

SEC. 2. The fourth sentence of section 11 (a) of such act, as amended, is amended to read as follows: "A vessel placed in such reserve shall in no case be used for commercial operation, except that any such vessel may be used during any period in which vessels may be requisitioned under section 902 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended, and that any such vessel may be used under a bareboat charter entered into pursuant to authority vested in the Secretary of Commerce on or after October 1, 1950."

SEC. 3. Section 5 of such act, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof subsections to read as follows:

"(e) Notwithstanding the provisions of sections 11 and 14 of this act, as amended, the war-built cargo vessels owned by the United States on September 30, 1950, may be chartered pursuant to this act for bareboat use in any service which in the opinion of the Federal Maritime Board is required in the public interest and is not adequately served and for which privately owned vessels are not available for charter by private operators on reasonable conditions and at reasonable rates for use in such service. No charters shall be made by the Secretary of Commerce under authority of this subsection until the Federal Maritime Board shall have given due notice to all interested parties and shall have afforded such parties an opportunity for a public hearing on such charters and shall have certified its findings to the Secretary of Commerce.

"(f) Notwithstanding the provisions of sections 11 and 14 of this act the Secretary of Commerce may charter any passenger vessel, whether or not war-built, owned by the United States on September 30, 1950, pursuant to title VII of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended."

SEC. 4. Section 2 of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution authorizing the Commandant of the United States Coast Guard to waive compliance with the navigation and vessel-inspection laws administered by the Coast Guard", approved March 31, 1947 (Public Law 27, 80th Cong.), as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. The authority granted by this resolution shall remain in force only until December 31, 1950: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed to authorize the Commandant of the United States Coast Guard to grant a waiver for the employment of alien seamen, or a waiver permitting a vessel to sail with less than its specified complement on board."

SEC. 5. Notwithstanding the provisions of section 27 of the act of June 5, 1920 (41 Stat. 999), as amended by act of April 11, 1935 (49 Stat. 154), and by act of July 2, 1935 (49 Stat. 442), or the provisions of any other act or regulation, vessels of Canadian registry shall be permitted to transport iron ore between United States ports on the Great Lakes during the period from the date of enactment of this act to December 31, 1950, or until such earlier time as the President by order may designate.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert "That section 14 of the Merchant Ship Sales Act of 1946, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 14. No contract of sale shall be made under this act after January 31, 1951, and no contract or charter shall be made under this act after June 30, 1950, except as provided for charter under subsections (e) and (f) of section 5 hereof, as amended.'

"SEC. 2. The fourth sentence of section 11 (a) of such act, as amended, is amended to read as follows: 'A vessel placed in such reserve shall in no case be used for any purpose whatsoever except that any such vessel may be used for account of any agency or department of the United States during any period in which vessels may be requisitioned under section 902 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended, and that any such vessel may be used under a bare-boat charter entered into pursuant to authority vested in the Secretary of Commerce on July 1, 1950, or granted to the Secretary of Commerce after such date.'

"'(e) (1) Notwithstanding the provisions of sections 11 and 14 of this act, as amended, war-built dry-cargo vessels owned by the United States on or after June 30, 1950, may be chartered pursuant to this act for bareboat use in any service which, in the opinion of the Federal Maritime Board, is required in the public interest and is not adequately served, and for which privately owned American-flag vessels are not available for charter by private operators on reasonable conditions and at reasonable rates for use in such service. No charters shall be made by the Secretary of Commerce under authority of this subsection until the Federal Maritime Board shall have given due notice to all interested parties and shall have afforded such parties an opportunity for a public hearing on such charters and shall have certified its findings to the Secretary of Commerce. The Secretary of Commerce is authorized to include in such charters such restrictions and conditions as the Federal Maritime Board determines to be necessary or appropriate to protect the public interest in respect of such charters and to protect privately owned vessels against competition from vessels chartered under this section: Provided, however, That all such charters shall contain a provision that they will be reviewed annually by the Federal Maritime Board, with recommendations to the Secretary of Commerce, for the purpose of determining whether conditions exist justifying continuance of the charters under the provisions of this subsection.

"'(2) A charter existing on June 30, 1950, with respect to a war-built dry-cargo vessel may be extended to September 30, 1950, if application is made within 10 days after the enactment hereof for the charter of such vessel under subsection (e) of this section and if the Secretary of Commerce deems such extension is justified in accordance with the provisions of section 5 (e) (1): Provided, however, That a new voyage under such extended charter shall not be begun after September 30, 1950, unless it has been determined prior to such date, in accordance with the procedure set forth in this subsection, that the continued use of the vessel in the service is required. The Federal Maritime Board shall conduct all hearings on applications made under this paragraph immediately upon receipt thereof and shall promptly certify its findings to the Secretary of Commerce, provided that all such certifications shall be made not later than September 30, 1950.

"'(f) (1) Notwithstanding the provisions of sections 11 and 14 of this act, as amended, the Secretary of Commerce may charter any passenger vessel, whether or not war-built, owned by the United States on or after June 30, 1950, pursuant to title VII of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended.

"'(2) Charters existing on June 30, 1950, with respect to passenger vessels may be continued until December 31, 1951, or until expiration thereof by the terms of their provisions.'

"SEC. 4. Section 2 of the joint resolution entitled 'Joint resolution authorizing the Commandant of the United States Coast Guard to waive compliance with the navigation and vessel-inspection laws administered by the Coast Guard' approved March 31, 1947 (Public Law 27, 80th Cong.), as amended, is amended by striking out the date 'June 30, 1950' and inserting in lieu thereof the date 'June 30, 1951.'

"SEC. 5. Notwithstanding the provisions of section 27 of the act of June 5, 1920 (41 Stat. 999), as amended by act of April 11, 1935 (49 Stat. 154), and by act of July 2, 1935 (49 Stat. 442), or the provisions of any other Act or regulation, vessels of Canadian registry shall be permitted to transport iron ore between United States ports on the Great Lakes during the period from the date of enactment of this act to December 31, 1950, or until such earlier time as the President by order may designate, and such vessels shall be permitted during the period from the date of enactment of this act to December 31, 1950, to transport coal to Ogdensburg, N. Y., from other points in the United States on the Great Lakes, or their connecting or tributary waters."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LITTLE KANAWHA RIVER FLOODS

Mr. BURNSIDE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Mr. Speaker, floods in the Little Kanawha have done tremendous damage. They have swept away houses, washed out railroads, destroyed livestock, and ruined cultivated lands. They have left in their wake infertile fields, gullied farms, gutted channels, and ruined pastures. Perhaps even worse, they have changed the character of the channel itself so that even greater damages may result from even smaller storms.

A program of land restoration is needed. Such a program would have for its purpose the reduction in runoff, the prevention of erosion, and the stabilization of stream flow. It would develop for the watershed of the Little Kanawha those measures and practices which would not only aid in reducing the damages due to flood and erosion, but also in promoting better land use so as to make better use of the water that falls in the drainage. These practices would aid in reducing the runoff in flood time and would aid in increasing the low water flow, so badly needed to maintain industries and domestic water supplies, to aid in pollution abatement, and to provide other benefits that a stabilized river would have.

Such a program of land restoration in aid of flood control is possible under the Flood Control Act of 1936, as amended and supplemented. Under it, the Department of Agriculture is charged with developing the program, and, should Congress later authorize it, carry it out in cooperation with the local people.

A survey of the Little Kanawha watershed is therefore needed. Such a survey would determine the specific needs of the basin, and what is required to reduce runoff and prevent erosion. It would also recommend those practices and measures required to reduce the damages in the watershed. A survey of the Little Kanawha watershed has already been authorized by the Congress. A preliminary study by the Department of Agriculture has indicated that conditions are such that a land program would provide benefits in excess of cost. Barring unforeseen contingencies, a plan could be prepared within the year outlining the measures and practices necessary. All that is now lacking is the necessary funds to undertake the investigation so that a report can be presented to the Congress.

A study of the amounts carried in the appropriation bill for next fiscal year reveals that there are insufficient funds in sight at this time to carry out this work in the Little Kanawha. It is therefore requested that $100,000 be added to the bill as it now stands to enable this investigation to be made. It is urgent that this be done now because of the great hazards which exist in the watershed, hazards which the recent floods have demonstrated are growing. If these are unchecked, a disaster is possible with far more tragic consequences than those which have developed to date. The need is urgent.

NURSERIES AND NURSERY SCHOOLS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. McMILLAN of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 3258) to continue a system of nurseries and nursery schools for the day care of school-age and under-school-age children in the District of Columbia.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act entitled "An act to authorize and direct the Board of Public Welfare of the District of Columbia to establish and operate in the public schools and other suitable locations a system of nurseries and nursery schools for day care of school-age and under-school-age children, and for other purposes," approved July 16, 1946, as amended, is amended by striking out "on and after July 1, 1946, and until June 30, 1950, and no longer."

SEC. 2. Section 3 of such act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. The Board is authorized to make and enforce rules and regulations governing admission to and use and enjoyment of said nurseries and nursery schools, including the fixing of fees to be charged parents for care and maintenance therein of their children; which fees shall, as near as practicable, equal the expenditures of the District of Columbia for personal services, labor, food, and supplies in the operation and maintenance of such nurseries and nursery schools or to enter into contracts with any private or public agency or agencies for such care and maintenance: Provided, That the Board may, in cases where parents are unable to pay for such care waive all or part of such fees. All fees collected under the provisions of this act shall be paid to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia and deposited into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of an account to be known as 'Miscellaneous trust-fund deposits, District of Columbia—Day Care Nurseries', said fund to be available, in addition to appropriations made pursuant to section 4 of this act, for expenditure for the purposes of this act: Provided, That such fund shall be audited and disbursed in the same manner as other trust funds are audited and disbursed by the District of Columbia."

SEC. 3. Section 4 of such act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4. There are authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1951 and for each fiscal year thereafter, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the District of Columbia not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act."

SEC. 4. Section 2 of this act shall take effect upon enactment.

Mr. McMILLAN of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MCMILLAN of South Carolina: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the provisions of the bill H. R. 8782, as passed, as follows: "That section 2 of the act entitled 'An act to authorize and direct the Board of Public Welfare of the District of Columbia to establish and operate in the public schools and other suitable locations a system of nurseries and nursery schools for day care of school-age and under-school-age children, and for other purposes,' approved July 16, 1946, as amended, is amended by striking out 'until June 30, 1950, and no longer' and inserting in lieu thereof 'until June 30, 1951, and no longer.'

"SEC. 2. Section 3 of such act is amended to read as follows:

" 'SEC. 3. The Board is authorized to make and enforce rules and regulations governing admission to and use and enjoyment of said nurseries and nursery schools, including the fixing of fees to be charged parents for care and maintenance therein of their children; which fees shall, as near as practicable, equal the expenditures of the District of Columbia for personal services, labor, food, and supplies in the operation and maintenance of such nurseries and nursery schools or to enter into contracts with any private or public agency or agencies for such care and maintenance: Provided, That the Board may, in cases where parents are unable to pay for such care waive all or part of such fees. All fees collected under the provisions of this act shall be paid to the Collector of Taxes of the District of Columbia and deposited into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of an account to be known as "Miscellaneous trust-fund deposits, District of Columbia—Day Care Nurseries," said fund to be available, in addition to appropriations made pursuant to section 4 of this act, for expenditure for the purposes of this act: Provided further, That such fund shall be audited and disbursed in the same manner as other trust funds are audited and disbursed by the District of Columbia: And provided further, That any balance remaining in such trust-fund account after June 30, 1951, shall be covered into the Treasury to the credit of miscellaneous receipts of the District of Columbia.'

"SEC. 3. Section 4 of such act is amended to read as follows:

" 'SEC. 4. There is authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1951, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the District of Columbia not otherwise appropriated, not exceeding $100,000 to carry out the purposes of this act.'

"SEC. 4. Section 2 of this act shall take effect upon enactment."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. MCMILLAN of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist upon its amendment and ask a conference with the Senate on the foregoing bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the following conferees: Messrs. MCMILLAN of South Carolina, GRANGER, and MILLER of Nebraska.

EXTENDING PROVISIONS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA EMERGENCY RENT ACT

Mr. McMILLAN of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House Committee on the District of Columbia have until midnight tonight to file a conference report and statement on the bill (S. 3776) to amend and extend the provisions of the District of Columbia Emergency Rent Act, as amended.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

H. R. 87 AND VETERANS IN THE POSTAL SERVICE

Mr. PHILBIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. PHILBIN. Mr. Speaker, when H. R. 87 was before the House, I was privileged to vote for it as I believe that it constitutes highly desirable legislation in the interest of our faithful postal workers and veterans.

There was no notice that a vote on the Presidential veto of H. R. 87 would be held yesterday. It was not on the official program. In any event, I was unavoidably detained at that time in my district attending the funeral of a very dear friend. If present in the House on that occasion, I should have carried out my convictions in favor of this legislation and voted to override the Presidential veto.

DISPENSING WITH CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Calendar Wednesday business in order on tomorrow and on Wednesday of next week be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

CONSENT AND PRIVATE CALENDARS AND SUSPENSIONS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the call of the Consent Calendar on Monday of next week and the call of the Private Calendar on Tuesday of next week be dispensed with, and that the call of both calendars be in order on Monday, July 10; and further that it be in order for the Speaker on Monday, July 10, to recognize Members for suspension of the rules.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

ATTACK UPON KOREA

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, the crisis in which we find ourselves enveloped is not of our making. The unprovoked attack upon the Republic of Korea reveals the Communist intention to invoke its will and its system upon the free peoples of the world.

I have no hesitancy in declaring my support of our President in the action taken to forestall the domination of South Korea. Drastic steps are necessary to preserve the peace of the world. The lives of Americans in the beleaguered nation must be protected; furthermore, the future course of world events hangs in the balance. Peace at any price is peace without honor.

A raging bully is loose, and we must at some time express the determination that further tolerance is insipid appeasement. The admonition of Theodore Roosevelt to "speak softly but carry a big stick" was never more appropriate. Now is the test of the United Nations; under its Charter transgressors of the peace shall be met with concerted and united action. Our policy is in keeping with the spirit of that Charter. We cannot and will not tolerate the imposition of armed force upon free nations.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, my attention has been called to remarks which the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SHAFER] made on the floor of the House under date of April 25, 1950, on the subject of Communists. In this connection I should like to call your attention to the paragraph near the top of page 5748 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, of that date, in which the gentleman from Michigan is quoted, as follows:

Assistant Secretary of State John E. Peurifoy admitted to the Senate Investigating Committee that nearly 100 moral perverts have been fired and nearly 200 Communists.

That statement, gentlemen, is incorrect. I am sure that he, and the other Members of the House, want to have the record show the true facts. They certainly do not want to get a distorted and incorrect impression which such a statement certainly gives. I have, therefore, checked into this matter very carefully, and this is what the record shows:

First. Deputy Under Secretary of State Peurifoy has never testified before the Senate Investigating Committee.

Second. Deputy Under Secretary of State Peurifoy did testify before the Senate Subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations on February 28, 1950.

Third. At that time Mr. Peurifoy made it clear and it is stated in the record of the hearings before the subcommittee that there were 202 employees, including 91 homosexuals, on whom security questions have been raised, who have left the Department over a period of 3 years since January 1, 1947, either through resignations or through reduction in force. Mr. Peurifoy further stated that does not mean that those employees were security risks or that a final adjudication had been made.

That is what Mr. Peurifoy said. He did not say that the State Department fired 202 people as security risks; he did not say that the State Department fired 202 Communists. On the contrary, he made it clear that those employees included in his figure of 202 were not all security risks. In fact, he emphasized that those employees were not all security risks by indicating that some security questions had arisen about them which had not been adjudicated when they left. At no time did he say they were Communists.

That is the record.

My friend from Michigan is in error, and knowing him as I do, I am sure that he will further examine the record, and upon finding he made an incorrect statement, will make proper correction.

CONTINUING SUSPENSION OF CERTAIN IMPORT TAXES ON COPPER

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 494) and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the act of March 31, 1941, entitled "An act to suspend certain import taxes on copper" (Public Law 33, 81st Cong.), is hereby amended by striking out "June 30, 1950" and inserting in lieu thereof "August 31, 1950."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, I am taking the action today of introducing a joint resolution which will provide for a further 60-day extension of the suspension of the import tax on copper. As you know, the tax will be reimposed on July 1 if some immediate step is not taken. The House Ways and Means Committee has scheduled a hearing on H. R. 7151—a bill providing a 2-year extension—for July 10. It is evident that joint consideration cannot be had until the end of July at least.

In view of the foreign crisis which has developed over the past few days, it would be sheer folly to jeopardize the supply of copper needed by this Nation. Unprecedented confusion will result from reinstitution of the tax during the period this legislation is in abeyance. The status of domestic producers of copper will not be changed by immediate passage of this resolution. Their arguments will still be heard by the committee during consideration of H. R. 7151.

An urgency exists to which we must apply ourselves. Military commitments must be met, and the national good overbalances regional considerations. Congress must demonstrate its capacity for meeting the needs of the hour, and it can best be done by the immediate consideration of this stop-gap legislation.

Unanimity of action will avoid confusion and uncertainty. In addition, the continuing cooperation of our friend and ally, Chile, will be assured.

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I concur fully in the remarks of the distinguished gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. PATTERSON], sponsor of this extender and I believe it to be in the best interests of national defense and our economy as a whole that the resolution be passed by the House without delay.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION INVESTIGATION BY SELECT COMMITTEE ON SMALL BUSINESS—HEARINGS, SECOND DAY

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, today was the second session of the hearings being conducted by the Select Committee on Small Business, of which I have the honor to be chairman, for the purpose of ascertaining whether the Federal Trade Commission is performing its function of protecting small business and curbing monopoly.

Our first witness was Mr. George J. Burger, vice president of the National Federation of Independent Business, Inc., claiming the largest individual membership of any business organization in the country. With the permission of the Members of the House I am including the full text of Mr. Burger's statement as part of my extended remarks.

Mr. Burger made clear that he had not come before our committee for the purpose of injuring the Commission, but that he had come for the purpose of finding out why the Commission has not been a more effective instrument for accomplishing its purposes and what means should be taken to make it such an effective instrument. He stated in his conclusion:

After reviewing the cases cited herein we come to the conclusion, Mr. Chairman, that there must be an immediate investigation made of the happenings in the cease and desist order against the United States Rubber Co. in 1939 by the Commission. Then there must be a thorough study and checking into why no follow-up action was taken by the Commission in the Federal court action in 1939 on the Goodyear-Sears case. Then there must be a thorough study of the trade practice rules. Are they a mere gesture for industry or can they bring the expected relief?

The actions of the House Small Business Committee in taking the appropriate steps can result in strengthening the Robinson-Patman Act and elevating the Federal Trade Commission itself into what the President of the United States and also an ex-President of the United States believe to be one of the most major agencies in the Government to keep the free enterprise system functioning, as a result of which the public will be the beneficiary and independent business of this Nation at both the production and distribution level will remain an important part of our economy.

With the permission of the Members of the House I am also including in my extended remarks the full text of the statement of James G. Patton, president of the National Farmers Union, read at our hearings this morning by Angus McDonald, of the National Farmers Union. Mr. Patton praised President Truman for his veto of S. 1008, the basing-point bill, and expressed the great interest of the farmer in the fight against monopoly and the enforcement of the antitrust laws, particularly by the Federal Trade Commission. He criticized the compliance operations of the Commission, although he recognized its budget difficulties.

I also include in my extended remarks, Mr. Angus McDonald's own statement. Mr. McDoanld criticized the Bureau of the Budget for the relatively small appropriations received by the Commission. He recommended that the Commission make more extensive use of its investigatory powers under section 6 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, particularly in relation to farm prices.

Murray D. Lincoln, president of the Cooperative League of the United States of America, was our third witness, and I include the full text of his statement in my extended remarks. He presented the thesis that the interests of small business and of cooperatives are identical, both being opposed to monopoly. He advocated more extensive appropriations for the Federal Trade Commission to conduct investigations, under section 6, including an investigation of the price spread between farmer and consumer. He stated:

We are confident that if we can develop facts so that the farmer and the cooperatives can make use of them, we will find the small-business men and the farmers and the cooperatives working together. We will stop the racketeers who are now selling falsehoods and suspicions and hate and discord.

STATEMENT OF GEORGE J. BURGER, VICE PRESIDENT, NATIONAL FEDERATION OF INDEPENDENT BUSINESS, WASHINGTON, D. C., BEFORE THE HOUSE SMALL BUSINESS COMMITTEE, INVESTIGATION OF THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION, JUNE 27, 1950

INVESTIGATION OF THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION

My name is George J. Burger. I am vice president and a member of the board of directors of the National Federation of Independent Business, Inc., head office, Burlingame, Calif., a national nonprofit organization organized under the laws of the State of California, which has the largest individual membership of any business organization in the Nation. I am also in charge of the Washington office of the National Federation of Independent Business, Inc., located in the Bond Building, Washington, D. C. We also maintain offices in Chicago, Cincinnati, and New York City.

I want to take this time to thank the chairman, the Honorable WRIGHT PATMAN, for the privilege extended to me in behalf of the federation and its membership, to appear here today and present our views on this major investigation.

It must be understood for the record that remarks which I will make are not in condemnation of the Federal Trade Commission, but are merely to explore its operation in an attempt to show the deficiencies in the administration of the laws intrusted to the Commission, and we trust that through the action of the House Small Business Committee, and the testimony which may be given by witnesses during these hearings it will be a help to the Federal Trade Commission in bringing about better enforcement of the laws through which the public will be the beneficiary, and more important, that the people we represent, independent business of this Nation will be benefited.

It must also be understood for the record that it will be found during the past 14 years that as an individual in my own private services representing independent tire dealers, and more recently in my official position as vice president of the National Federation of Independent Business, I have been an ardent supporter of the Federal Trade Commission and this statement can be confirmed through my many appearances before congressional appropriations committees urging increased appropriations for the Federal Trade Commission, and particularly in the recommendations made before the Joint Committee of the Economic Report July 14, 1947.

I think it is well to quote from a staff report to the Monopoly Subcommittee of the Committee on Small Business, House of Representatives, pursuant to House Resolution 64, Seventy-ninth Congress, page 26, of that report "The Statement from Mr. George Burger of the Burger tire-consultant service makes very detailed and lengthy charges that the cease-and-desist order issued by the Federal Trade Commission against the United States Rubber Co. in 1939 was meaningless in terms of practical results."

Mr. Chairman, it is necessary for me in my testimony to use as a pattern the experience that the Federal Trade Commission has had in the rubber-tire industry for over a period of 14 years. You will admit that this is no minor industry. In fact, it is one of the leading major industries of our Nation.

Prior to the enactment of the Robinson-Patman Act there were many hundreds of small independent tire manufacturers, and at the same time what could be commonly termed close to 100,000 independent tire-retail specialists, and our testimony will have to center around that industry as a pattern as to what we believe is taking place in the Federal Trade Commission which is bringing practically no beneficial results to Nation's independent retailers. Whether this is due to the inefficiency in the agency itself, or as a result of working on minor cases and overlooking the major cases in our economy, or whether the fault lies with the Congress itself because of lack of needed appropriations to the Commission to carry out the mandate of the Congress, we do not know, but it is the hope of our people—independent business people—that the committee will make its findings and recommendations at the earliest possible moment at the close of these hearings.

1. A major case was presented to me late in 1935 or early in 1936 from an independent retailer trading under the name of the Lon Williams Co., at Gadsden, Ala. He presented to me at that time a story alleging violations by his supplier, the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., of the Clayton Act. He alleged that practices of his supplier almost drove his company out of business. The Federal Trade Commission sent one of its representatives to visit with me at the time and the Commission was insistent that factual evidence of the alleged violations of Federal statute be secured for study and investigation by the Commission. Such evidence was secured in the form of invoices from the Goodyear Co. and letters from the Goodyear Co. to the independent retailer, and little or nothing further was done on the case. I had reviewed the correspondence very carefully and I believed there was substantial evidence for the Commission to follow through for relief and correction of the alleged violations of Federal statute.

2. On March 5, 1936, to the everlasting credit of the Federal Trade Commission they did issue a cease-and-desist order against the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. in its contract relationship with the Sears, Roebuck & Co. Briefly, Goodyear fought the order in the Circuit Court in Cincinnati. The Court, I believe, came to a decision in favor of the defense. The Federal Trade Commission appealed the decision to the Supreme Court, and it will be found that the Supreme Court sent the case back to Cincinnati Federal Circuit Court to be tried on the merits of the case. Possibly a lapse of 2 or 3 years took place from the time of the issuance of the cease-and-desist order of the Commission of March 5, 1936, until the case was finally terminated, and it will be found from the record that every so often the Goodyear officials have been found making statements to the effect that in some degree the Goodyear Co. won the case, or in simple words, the Court threw the case out of court.

What happened was that in the final decision of the circuit court in Cincinnati early in 1939, the court's decision was 2 to 1 favoring the defendant—the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. The court minority was very outspoken in condemnation of the majority decision of the court. No attempt was made by the Federal Trade Commission to appeal that important decision to the United States Supreme Court, and it resulted in establishing in the minds of many thousand of independent retailers that the laws were worthless insofar as protecting independent business and the opinion was commonly expressed that the big fellows can get away with it. Authorities in the rubber-tire industry and authorities outside of the rubber-tire industry believe that the injury and destruction which came to many thousands of members of the rubber-tire industry whose businesses were destroyed came through this contract relationship between the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. and the Sears, Roebuck Co., who the Government claimed had received a $41,000,000 preferential over the independent customers of the Goodyear company, and the Federal Trade Commission was most deficient in not fighting this case to the bitter end. The lack of action upon the part of the Commission was most demoralizing, and created a lack of faith in the Commission's actions.

3. In or around October 1936, to be exact, at the Statler Hotel in St. Louis, in fact, the chairman of this committee was the principal speaker at that tire dealer's national convention shortly after the enactment of the Robinson-Patman Act, and the chairman, the Honorable WRIGHT PATMAN, explained to a jam-filled banquet room, not alone to members of the rubber-tire industry, but to business people all around the area, what the Robinson-Patman Act meant to their future in protection to independent business both at the production and distribution levels. He also complimented that convention having the first set of fair trade practice rules approved by the Federal Trade Commission in conformity with the Robinson-Patman Act. These rules have been in existence 14 years and I know of no particular case of any major importance where the rules were enforced by the Commission so as to be of any beneficial help to the member of the rubber-tire industry.

We do know, however, that in or around 1939 or 1940, an organized campaign was instituted by three major rubber companies to put into use what could be termed (and even better business bureaus throughout the Nation concurred) one of the grossest misleading national advertising campaigns ever perpetrated in an industry—which was commonly known as the "50 off sale." It was so misleading and deceiving that in cities like Atlanta, New York, and other areas the city authorities moved in and took the necessary action to prohibit the continuance of this national advertising campaign. I think in one area in California, an arrest was made of an employee of a major company. Protests were filed by me as an official of the Tire Dealers Association with the Commission at that time, supported by factual evidence Nation-wide newspaper copy, etc., and it can be said that from the uproar created by our action (independent tire dealers or the better business bureaus, or the actions of the various city authorities) the campaign was discontinued by the three major companies and it is to be noted that some 6 or 10 months later, after the correction had been made, the Commission issued a cease-and-desist order.

4. In the spring of 1939, in my annual Nation-wide visit, one of the cities visited was San Francisco. At the conclusion of the meeting in that city a very prominent independent dealer placed with me an affidavit relating to a meeting held by a major rubber company manager in that area, and from the report on the action of that conference it was to drive the individual out of the tire business, and these rubber companies would institute a price-cutting campaign, which would eventually destroy the business of this dealer. Such affidavit, as given to me by this prominent dealer, was turned over to the Federal Trade Commission for action, and to this very day I never knew what happened to the case.

5. I am now coming to the real crux of the testimony and I refer to the earlier quotation made by me that cease and desist orders by the Commission, as we review the situation are meaningless. I am referring to the action of the Federal Trade Commission versus the United States Rubber Co., United States Tire Dealers Mutual Co., et al. It will be found from the record that the cease and desist orders of the Commission against the United States Rubber Co. in 1939 have brought about no beneficial effects that we can find and we do not know, up to this very moment, whether the United States Rubber Co. 11 years later has ever complied with the order of the Commission. In this respect it will be noted that the United States Rubber Co.'s legal representative, appearing before the Federal Trade Commission, attempted to place in evidence before the Commission early this year information that the Federal Trade Commission had approved the operations of the United States Rubber Co. and had given them its blessing. We find no record of such approval emanating from the Federal Trade Commission. Again we repeat, the order of 1939 is meaningless.

It will also be found that during the chairmanship of the present chairman of the committee in the Seventy-ninth Congress, the late Mr. George J. Schulte, then a staff member of the committee, called a high member of the Federal Trade Commission on the telephone and asked this question of the member of the Commission: "Has anything been done to find out whether the Commission's order against the United States Rubber Co. has been followed out?" The Commission member answered: "The economist who handled that case is no longer with the Commission." Mr. Schulte turned to me and said, "Apparently nothing has ever been done on the order."

Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, this action of the United States Rubber Co. was a tremendously major undertaking by that company, and when it was announced in January of 1937, industry throughout the Nation watched the development of his procedure. Some authorities in business publications from the very first instant had stated either by word of mouth or by letter that the action of the rubber company was to bypass the Robinson-Patman Act. When the plans of operation of the rubber company were brought to my attention before being made public information in the press, the highest of that company's officials stated in these simple words—that their independent customers were to be placed on parity to meet all types of fair competition within the rubber-tire industry. They referred to the competition of tire manufacturers' company owned stores, mass distributors, and oil companies. It will be found from the record that at no time has the rank and file of United States Rubber Co. independent dealers been put in a position to meet the competition as mentioned above. At no time have the United States independent dealers been able to purchase their tires on the same buying arrangement as the large customers of the United States Rubber Co. I am not interested in the United States Rubber Co., but I am interested in the Robinson-Patman Act and its enforcement to the very limit by the Federal Trade Commission, which act, in our opinion, right up to this very moment has never been completely enforced; but if it had been enforced, it would have brought about the desired results.

I have said before congressional committees that the lack of consistent action by the Federal Trade Commission to follow through on this major case has resulted in the complete nullification of the Robinson-Patman Act in the minds and planning of not alone the rubber industry but many other industries, as they are of the opinion that nothing will be done. Bear in mind, Mr. Chairman, that not alone was a major rubber company involved, but also a mass distributor and leading petroleum companies, which resulted in additional major contracts being entered into between major petroleum companies and major rubber companies, and this action brought about increasing mortality in the ranks of independent retailers.

It is significant and important to note that shortly after the Robinson-Patman Act became law June 19, 1936, it will be found that the head of the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., Mr. Paul Litchfield, announced the cancellation of his company's contract with the Sears Co., although that contract at that time still had 5 years to run. Some 30 days later Mr. Robinson, president of the B. F. Goodrich Co., announced the cancellation of their portion of the contract with the Atlas Supply Co. who, we believe, is owned by the Standard Oil of New Jersey, as both he and Mr. Litchfield stated the reason for the cancellation of these contracts was that they could not justify the price under the Robinson-Patman Act. We know this much, that three major rubber companies were then operating a thousand or more retail stores in the main trading areas throughout the Nation and these stores were in active competition not alone with their own independent dealers but with other independents. Time and time again, in or around 1936 many store managers came to me and asked me where they could get a position because, as they stated, under the Robinson-Patman Act the tire manufacturers could never justify the operation of retail stores. These stores, which are owned and operated by the manufacturers, have not decreased since 1936, but their numbers have increased throughout the Nation, and in fact, for practical purposes, insofar as the sale of truck and bus tires is concerned, no independent retailer can attempt to compete. An interesting incident, Mr. Chairman, which has a great bearing on this over-all operation, took place in or around October 1936. Fortune magazine published an article on the rubber industry, and in part they stated that the United States Rubber Co. was planning to discontinue their business relationship with independent retailers and confine all of their operations to the manufacture of private-brand tires so as to keep within the framework of the Robinson-Patman Act. Of course, the United States Rubber Co. denied the statement, but they entered into new arrangements January 1937 which were supposed to be within the framework of the Robinson-Patman Act, but in 1939 the Federal Trade Commission found them in violation of the act. The complete action of the Federal Trade Commission and the part this witness played in this major transaction appears in the committee print, United States Versus Economic Concentration and Monopoly, an investigation of the effectiveness of the Government's efforts to combat concentration, a staff report to the Monopoly Subcommittee of the Committee on Small Business, House of Representatives, pursuant to House Resolution 64, Seventy-ninth Congress, so there is no need to take the time of the committee to explore in detail, but it is our hope and trust that the committee and its staff will thoroughly examine that case as it appeared in the staff report.

Mr. Chairman, let me conclude this statement by reaffirming that this charge is not leveled against a particular company, but the principle involved is the importance of the Robinson-Patman Act. I have heard it stated time and time again by high authorities of the rubber industry "Burger, what is the Federal Trade Commission doing on the Robinson-Patman Act?" "How can the Commission permit, under the law, new contracts made by * * * rubber companies with major petroleum companies, etc.?" Not alone has this question been put to me by members of the rubber industry but also by leaders in many other industries. So it would appear that industry had become aware of the situation that nothing would be done, and this resulted in policies and plans of various producers being put into operation circumventing or bypassing the Robinson-Patman Act. To substantiate this statement I am quoting herewith from an address by Corwin D. Edwards, director, Bureau of Industrial Economics of the Federal Trade Commission before the Golden Jubilee Commerce Conference at the University of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis., on May 10, 1950:

"Some of the great oil companies act as intermediaries in the distribution of tires between tire manufacturers and filling stations. These filling stations are also actual or potential customers of independent tire dealers who perform a wholesale function. An oil company which buys the tires and resells them to filling stations must face the question whether or not its purchase price as compared with the purchase price of the independent tire wholesaler, constitutes receipt of an unlawful discrimination. Certain oil companies, however, do not buy the tires, but instead receive a sales commission from the tire manufacturer, in return for which they encourage their filling stations to buy the manufacturer's tires direct from him. It is asserted by attorneys for these companies that, when the oil company buys no tires, its commission, however large, cannot be an unlawful discrimination. Whether or not the arrangement is lawful, there can be no question that a preferential commission, like a preferential wholesale discount, may be used to transfer the tire business of the filling stations from the independent tire merchant to other channels. It is also obvious that a commission may serve as readily as a discount to enhance the profit of a powerful concern at the expense of others less powerful."

6. As a result of a survey made by me of Nation's dealers earlier in the year, in or around September 1941, I filed a brief with the Federal Trade Commission alleging violations of the Robinson-Patman Act in the operations of certain tire manufacturers operating retail stores, contract relationships with mileage and rental contracts in which a 100-percent monopoly appears to exist with the major tire manufacturers; pricing arrangements by major tire manufacturers (4) in the sale of the fifth or spare tire; the relationship between major oil and rubber interests in the sale and distribution of tires. This brief was all-inclusive, and while we realize that during the war period such action by Federal agencies was suspended for the duration of the war, there is no evidence that any appropriate action has been taken by the Federal Trade Commission since the termination of the war.

After reviewing the cases cited herein we come to the conclusion, Mr. Chairman, that there must be an immediate investigation made of the happenings in the cease-and-desist order against the United States Rubber Co. in 1939 by the Commission. Then there must be a thorough study and checking into why no follow-up action was taken by the Commission in the Federal court action in 1939 on the Goodyear-Sears case. Then there must be a thorough study of the Trade Practice Rules. Are they a mere gesture for industry or can they bring the expected relief?

The actions of the House Small Business Committee in taking the appropriate steps can result in strengthening the Robinson-Patman Act and elevating the Federal Trade Commission itself into what the President of the United States and also an ex-President of the United States believe to be one of the most major agencies in the Government to keep the free-enterprise system functioning, as a result of which the public will be the beneficiary and independent business of this Nation at both the production and distribution level will remain an important part of our economy.

In conclusion I wish to quote the words of Senator KNOWLAND on the floor of the Senate on April 25, 1950:

"I say to the Senator from Missouri that the longer I have been here in Washington—I have been in the Senate a little more than 5 years now—the more convinced I have become that the founding fathers were correct when they wanted this Government to be a government of laws, not a government of men. If we write out the law specifically and then require administrative officials to follow the directives of the Congress I think we shall be much better off."

STATEMENT OF JAMES G. PATTON, PRESIDENT OF THE NATIONAL FARMERS UNION, BEFORE THE HOUSE SELECT COMMITTEE TO CONDUCT A STUDY AND INVESTIGATION OF THE PROBLEMS OF SMALL BUSINESS, RELATIVE TO AN INVESTIGATION OF THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION, JUNE 27, 1950

First of all, I would like to commend the eminent chairman of this committee for his untiring zeal in attempting to preserve our antitrust laws. His work in this Congress to bring about defeat of the monopoly bill, S. 1008, has been outstanding. In my opinion, had it not been for the efforts of WRIGHT PATMAN, S. 1008 might well be the law of the land today. I also feel that others in this particular fight played outstanding roles, including JOHN CARROLL, of Colorado, Senators LONG, KEFAUVER, LANGER, DOUGLAS, and many others too numerous to mention.

The interest of the National Farmers Union in the monopoly fight in this Congress is not a novelty. It is merely the recent part of the continuous and sustained effort that the union has contributed to monopoly problems ever since its birth in 1902.

The American farmer, of course, had been concerned with monopoly for many years before that time. I think it is safe to say that if it had not been for farmers' protests against the great rising railroad and oil monopolies, there would have been no Sherman Act of 1890. Because it was the farmers of the South and West who were most affected by discriminatory freight rates, by stock-market manipulations, and by price squeezes which were engineered and planned by eastern industrial and financial leaders.

The result of these manipulations in the nineteenth century was to force the farmer to sell his products at a low price and buy what he needed for family living and farm production at a relatively higher price. The farmer in those days was almost completely at the mercy of those who controlled and rigged both industrial and farm prices. The farmer found himself selling in an open market and buying in a closed one. He found that the prices of things that he bought were relatively inelastic, and that prices of things he sold were elastic and responded daily, even hourly, to market conditions.

This situation, which came about with building of great corporate empires, has continued down to the present time. It is going on today. A cursory look at the price indexes of the Department of Agriculture indicates this. Farm prices have declined in some instances by more than 50 percent, and industrial prices have stayed up. This situation existed during the farm depressions of 1921 and 1929–32, and we may expect similar results today if this unbalance is not corrected.

Lowered farm prices, high inelastic industrial prices is not a one-way street. The end result of a price system administered by the great monopolies inevitably is economic disaster for the farmer and, of course, for labor and small business. The only difference is that the farmer suffers first and longest.

I call attention to these facts at this particular hearing because I believe that the only hope farmers and others have in remedying this situation is by adequate enforcement of our antitrust laws. And the most important agency of the Government insofar as antitrust laws are concerned is the Federal Trade Commission. I do not mean to disparage the work of the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice, but it seems clear to me that the FTC had been clothed with more adequate powers and that it is better equipped to work in the interest of three great groups, namely, farmers, small business, and labor.

The Federal Trade Commission, set up primarily to check incipient monopolies, not only is vested with subpena powers which the Department of Justice lacks, but is staffed with economists who have kept abreast of changing industrial and economic conditions that call for new information, amended decrees, and even changes in the law itself.

I call your attention to the recommendations which Thurman Arnold made to the TNEC in 1941. This previous Assistant Attorney General, far from being jealous of the FTC or looking at it as a rival agency, recommended that there should be closer cooperation between the Department of Justice and the Federal Trade Commission. He also pointed out that statutory authority of the Commission should be expanded, appropriations be increased. Here is what he said:

"I recommend, therefore, that Congress enact a statute empowering the Federal Trade Commission to investigate either on its own motion or at the request of the Department of Justice, to hear evidence presented by the Department, and to make public findings of fact as to whether a designated local ordinance or a State statute or a group of such statutes interferes with interstate commerce." (Final report and recommendations of the Temporary National Economic Committee, p. 134.)

"I recommend that section 7 of the Federal Trade Commission Act be amended to provide that on the request of the Attorney General the Federal Trade Commission or any member thereof hear evidence and make findings of fact and conclusions of law in any pending antitrust proceedings" (ibid., p. 137).

"The experience of centuries has indicated that it is wise to entrust fundamental decisions to a concensus of laymen or to a judge who is constantly exposed to the impact of lay opinion. * * * The judge sitting in equity expressed the view of an expert whose duties keep him close to the community at large. A continuation of this system, aided by reference to the Federal Trade Commission to make initial findings in a highly complicated case, is likely to keep a line of development under the antitrust laws appropriate to the structure and temper of the American economy" (ibid., p. 138).

In regard to duplication and appropriations, Arnold had this to say:

"Although the Commission and the Antitrust Division have authority to deal with some of the same problems, there is, in fact, no unnecessary or wasteful duplication of effort. The two agencies cooperate, so that neither one spends time or money in dealing with problems which the other has under consideration.

"The current appropriations for the Federal Trade Commission do not permit it to make full use of the powers which Congress has given it. We believe, for example, that it is desirable to give additional appropriations to the Commission which would enable it to carry on general investigations and make findings of fact with respect to economic conditions in various industries. Furthermore, the fact that the Commission does not have adequate funds to stop in their incipiency practices which lead to restraints and monopolies increases the later burden which must be assumed by both the Commission and the Department of Justice" (ibid., p. 117).

Mr. Chairman, I believe that the situation in regard to appropriations is just as true today as it was 9 years ago. The Federal Trade Commission, year in and year out, has been one of the most starved agencies in Washington. It has never received the amounts which the Commissioners felt were necessary. Every recommendation they made was trimmed down by the Budget Bureau which, apparently, did not understand how vital antitrust law enforcement is.

Failure of the Commission to enforce our antitrust laws, however, does not altogether stem from a starvation diet. The Commission itself has not used in some areas the powers conferred on it by Congress. Its procedure has been cumbersome; minor administrative matters have occupied the time and the attention of the Commission, and cases have proceeded at a snail's pace.

It was the purpose of Congress that the Commission aid the Department of Justice by determining whether or not a decree was being complied with. Section 6 (C) of the Federal Trade Commission Act plainly states that the FTC may check up to see if a decree is being complied with. The Commission is in a much better position to carry on such an investigation than the Department of Justice since it has the power of subpena. The Justice Department must resort to a grand jury. Yet, the Commission has never used this power on its own initiative. And in only four instances, in 1917, 1921, 1929, and 1936 was the power used at the request of the Attorney General. It seems apparent that cooperation in regard to compliance has been almost completely lacking. Neither has the Commission exerted itself to check up on its own compliance orders. Not until 1947 did the Commission set up any machinery for investigating its own decisions.

The reason given for this laxity was lack of appropriations. Attention was called to the fact that there were only nine attorneys in the Division of Compliance.

While recognizing the severe budget difficulty, we feel that the question of compliance is second to none, and that nevertheless the power of section 6 (C) must be used. Decrees become out of date; legal, economic, and industrial conditions change.

In 1920, the courts ordered the packers and food-canning concern to disintegrate. In 1940, it was found that only recently had steps been taken to carry out the order. As Thurman Arnold said, "Twenty years is a long time to wait for the enforcement of a decree" (ibid., p. 119).

Finally, I would like to recommend that the Commission give more emphasis to antimonopoly work and a less proportionate amount to cases which involve fraud, false advertising, and the like. Work in these two areas should be separate and departmentalized. Importance, rather than the number of cases an attorney handles, should be emphasized both in planning work, reorganizing the Commission, and awarding promotion. We feel that the results of one case such as the Cement Institute basing-point case of 1948 or the pending price-discrimination case involving the Standard Oil Co., may well determine the kind of world we and succeeding generations will live in.

For once the floodgates of monopoly are opened wide, once a little group of men in Pittsburgh, or New York, or Chicago can determine whether or not a steel plant may be built in Texas or Colorado, whether or not 352 gasoline filling station operators in Detroit may operate, our free-enterprise system will be doomed. The enterprising independent big-business man will be unable to assist in developing regions which have lagged far behind the North and East. Small-business men everywhere will be swallowed up by monopoly. The farmer will find himself in an economic strait-jacket. He will be a prisoner in a world where he must pay prices which the oligopolists have previously agreed on and he must take whatever is offered for what he has to sell.

STATEMENT OF ANGUS MCDONALD, ASSISTANT LEGISLATIVE SECRETARY OF THE NATIONAL FARMERS UNION, BEFORE THE HOUSE SELECT COMMITTEE TO CONDUCT A STUDY AND INVESTIGATION OF THE PROBLEMS OF SMALL BUSINESS, RELATIVE TO AN INVESTIGATION OF THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION, JUNE 27, 1950

I would like to expand and document Mr. Patton's statement in regard to monopoly as it exists among those who process and sell commodities produced by the farmer and to recite a few statistics to the committee regarding the behavior of farm and industrial production during periods of economic recession as well as the behavior of farm prices during the last few years and the situation regarding farm costs and farm income. I would also like to correlate this matter with the situation regarding profits of those engaged in the distribution of food. Finally, I would like to comment briefly on the budgetary situation of the Federal Trade Commission and the relationship of the agency to the Department of Justice.

It is a well-known fact that monopolistic situations exist not only in industries which manufacture the products the farmer buys, but in industries which process and distribute food which the farmer produces. For example, the three largest dairy companies in the country distribute about one-sixth of the nation's total volume of milk. Ninety percent of the distribution in many communities and cities is carried on by one company. Eight companies control more than one-third of all the bread manufactured. One company controls almost half of the manufacture and distribution of biscuits and crackers. Eight companies distribute almost three-quarters of the dairy products of the Nation.

Concentration is even greater in industries which manufacture and sell things the farmer buys. Two companies, for example, control the manufacture of 89 percent of all grain binders, 77 percent of all corn planters, 75 percent of all tractor-drawn cultivators, 68 percent of all tractors, 64 percent of hay loaders, and 61 percent of all tractor plows. Two companies produce one-half of the Nation's output of fixed nitrogen, and three companies produce half of the Nation's potash.

In regard to the behavior of industrial prices, history has proved that during periods when demand falls there is a tendency for industrialists to reduce production in order to keep prices relatively high. For example, during the period 1929–1932, production of motor vehicles declined by 72 percent while prices declined by only 12 percent. Agriculture implement production declined by 84 percent, whereas prices fell only 14 percent. Cement production declined by 55 percent, prices by only 16 percent.

Production and prices of agriculture commodities behaved in the opposite fashion. During the same period agricultural production declined only by 1 percent, whereas the price for agricultural commodities declined by 54 percent. Here are two brief tables which prove that during the years 1929 through 1932, the production of meat, poultry, dairy and food grains remained relatively stable, whereas prices of these commodities declined from 35 to 60 percent.

Production, 1929–32

[1935–39=100]

Year	Meat	Poultry	Dairy	Food grain
1929	103	100	93	113
1930	100	106	94	109
1931	103	101	96	114
1932	101	99	97	92

Prices, 1929–32

[1935–39=100]

Year	Meat	Poultry	Dairy	Food grain
1929	160	161	164	116
1930	135	128	142	93
1931	93	99	111	57
1932	65	81	86	45

Recent economic history seems to indicate that we are following in some degree the pattern which developed during the depression years. Farm production during the last 2 years has been the greatest in history, whereas farm prices have been falling ever since 1948. Prices of some major commodities have declined as much as 50 percent; farm net income has declined from a high of $17,800,000,000 in 1947, to $13,800,000,000 in 1949. Industrial prices, however, have declined very little and prices of food still remain relatively high. Farm prices and income will continue to decline in 1950. Cash receipts are down 9 percent during the first 6 months as compared to the first 6 months of 1949. Department of Agriculture economists estimate that net farm income will decline to about $12,000,000,000 in 1950. They also estimate that farm costs which have been rising for the last year will remain high.

The committee can perhaps get a better picture of the situation if I cite examples of typical farms. In 1949, net income of farm operators in the Corn Belt averaged from $1,600 to $3,100 per farm less than in 1948. In 1949 operators of dairy farms averaged about $1,000 less than in 1948. The income of spring-wheat farmers declined from $6,900 to $3,500. Winter-wheat farmers experienced a decline in income from $9,000 to $6,000. Cattle ranchers' income declined from $10,000 to $7,000.

Farm costs of these farmers during the same period went up. Costs of Corn Belt farmers in 1949 was the highest on record, 190 percent of prewar. The farm cost of dairy farmers in Wisconsin rose from 203 to 205 percent of prewar. Spring-wheat farming costs rose from 171 percent to almost 174 percent. Cost of cattle ranching rose from 141 to 165 percent of prewar.

The disparity between industrial and retail food prices on the one hand and farm prices on the other was reflected in the widening of price spreads between farmer and consumer. The farm price of wheat during the period January through October 1948 declined 30 percent, during the same period the retail price of bread rose slightly. In December 1947, the farmer got 24 percent of the consumer bread dollar; in April 1950, he only got 18 percent. In December 1947, the farmer got 25 percent of the dollar spent for corn flakes; in April 1950, he only got 14 percent. In December 1947 the farmer got 71 percent of the consumer's meat dollar; in April 1950, he only got 62 percent. In December 1947 the farmer got 63 percent of the dollar spent in dairy products; in April 1950 he got only 54 percent. In December 1947, the farmer got 70 percent of the poultry and egg dollar, in April 1950, he got only 59 percent. In December 1947, the farmer got 36 percent of all money spent for cereal and bakery products; in April 1950 he got only 27 percent.

Examination of the net profits of companies engaged in the processing and distribution of these foods give a clue as to who received the benefits of these widening price spreads. In 1948 the net profits of the Ralston Purina Co. were $5,700,000, its percent of profits was 11 percent. In 1949 the profits of this company rose to $11,700,000, its percent of profit to 20.2 percent. In 1948 the profit of the Kellogg Co. rose from $9,500,000 to $11,500,000; its rate on investment from 37 to 38 percent. During this period the profits of the National Dairy Products Corp. rose from $25,000,000 to $33,000,000. Profits of the Carnation Co. rose from $5,700,000 to $7,700,000. And so on. These are only a few of the example that could be given. During the last 3 or 4 years many of the food-processing companies more than doubled their profits.

It seems obvious from these facts that money which the farmer previously received has been going into the pockets of middlemen and processors. Consumers have benefited very little from these price declines. The share of the farmer in the final analysis has declined, his costs have remained high. The cost of living has stayed up, together with high profits.

I have gone into the matter of farm costs, farm income, price spreads, and behavior of farm and industrial prices at some length because we feel that the Federal Trade Commission is the only agency equipped with adequate power to do anything about this situation. We recommend, therefore, that the Commission launch a series of investigations in regard to price spreads that exist between wheat and bread, dairy products, and other commodities in which the price spread has increased drastically since farm income began to fall. We also recommend that the Commission seek to determine if industry is holding up prices of things the farmer buys by curtailing production or engaging in other practices, the result of which is to keep prices unduly high.

We recommend further that the Federal Trade Commission expand, if possible, its machinery set up to determine if its orders and the decrees of the courts are being complied with. We further suggest that the Commission cooperate more fully with the Department of Justice and that it should not be timid in using the powers that exist in section 6C of the act.

I would like to call the committee's attention to the situation that exists in regard to appropriations for the Commission. This table, which I would like to insert in the RECORD, indicates that over the years the Budget Bureau has severely trimmed practically every sum requested by the Commission. This amount has been further reduced by Congress. The severity in these cuts in amounts requested has been growing. For example, for the fiscal year 1950 the Commission requested almost $6,000,000 and got only $3,650,000, which seems evident to us that the Budget Bureau is blind to the need for increased appropriations.

Finally, I would like to express the feeling of the leaders of the National Farmers Union in regard to the Commission as reconstituted by the President during the last year. We feel that all three new members nominated by the President are able and courageous men, well fitted to cope with the task of enforcing our antitrust laws. The two new members already serving on the Commission are giving new life to antitrust-law enforcement. It is obvious that they have a sense of high devotion to the public interest. In regard to the third nominee for the Commission, whose name is before the Senate, we would like to call to the committee's attention that we favor his confirmation without any reservations despite the disapproval by the Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee.

STATEMENT OF MURRAY D. LINCOLN, PRESIDENT, COOPERATIVE LEAGUE OF U. S. A., BEFORE HOUSE SELECT COMMITTEE ON SMALL BUSINESS, JUNE 27, 1950

My name is Murray D. Lincoln. I am the president of the Cooperative League of the U. S. A., which is a national organization of consumer and purchasing cooperative organizations. This national organization represents approximately 1,800,000 families. A large part of the total number are the families of farmers, but there are many hundreds of thousands of families of wage earners in cities who are now members of consumer cooperative organizations.

I am also the president and general manager of the Farm Bureau insurance companies (auto, life, and fire) with headquarters in Columbus, Ohio, serving a million policyholders in 12 Eastern States. I am also president of the Cooperative for American Remittances to Europe, better known as CARE. I wanted to emphasize particularly my association with the Cooperative League because I understand that the first proposal that this committee should investigate the Federal Trade Commission was made by an advisory group which included the Washington representative of the Cooperative League of the U. S. A.

As these discussions about the Federal Trade Commission and its work have developed during the last year, it has been apparent to most of us that the Commission and its work have been very little understood. However, these discussions, and particularly the recent attacks made on the Commission during the fight over the basing-point legislation have served to emphasize the importance of this Commission to the consumers.

As I understand it, the Commission has several functions:

1. Protecting the consumer against false and deceptive practices.

2. Protecting the consumer's right to a free market where that right is impaired by price discrimination and by concentration of industrial power.

3. Protecting the consumer through preservation of the rights and opportunities of the small-business man, and thereby providing the competition which might insure to the consumer the protection of fair and vigorous competition.

4. Protection to the consumer through the economic research done by the Commission and through the reports made to the Congress by the Commission.

It might surprise some of the Members of Congress to know that we are particularly interested in the assistance the Federal Trade Commission can give to independent and small-business enterprise. You have been getting thousands of propaganda letters—presumably from some owners of small business—in which they attacked cooperatives. I am sure the number of small-business men who wrote to you constituted only a small percentage of all small-business men, but a few thousand letters become impressive even though they may be less than 1 percent or 5 percent of the total.

The fact is that in Sweden, where the economy has been kept sound and healthy despite handicaps such as few other nations have withstood, the cooperation of independent small business and of cooperatives has contributed to that nation's prosperity. The Swedish small-business men are kept informed. The Swedish small-business man knows from experience that he has prospered as the cooperatives have prospered. The Swedish small-business man knows that his most dangerous enemy is monopoly, and its political ally, fascism or nazism. The Swedish small-business man knows that the cooperatives protect him and his business against monopoly and, therefore, that the cooperatives are his best friend. I hope this can be an example for the United States.

I hope that through the work of the Federal Trade Commission and the Select Committee on Small Business, plus the informed wage earners, cooperatives and small business, working with your committee, understanding will be furthered between cooperatives and small business. Then monopoly will have cause for worry. Then economic and political freedom will be served.

You may ask how this is related to an investigation of the Federal Trade Commission. Let me show you:

Several years ago, in 1942, the Ohio Farm Bureau Cooperatives asked Ohio State University to make a study of the farmer's dollar. The study showed that in the purchase of feed, fertilizer and petroleum products, electricity and insurance, the farmer's dollar in Ohio was at parity or better than parity. These were the items farmers buy cooperatively. In sharp contrast are food, clothing, furniture, home-building materials, farm machinery and farm-building materials—items the farmer does not buy cooperatively in significant quantities. Here are the facts and figures, and I say to you that these may well be the most significant facts you will get.

Cost of things farmers buy cooperatively

Item	Base period	Index cost, September 1941
Feed	1910–14	104
Fertilizer:
Single, Ohio	1910–14	97
Double, Ohio	1910–14	73
Gasoline	1920	62
Interest rate	1920	67
Electricity	1920	50
Insurance	1935	54

Things farmers do not buy cooperatively in large volume

Item	Base period	Index cost, September 1941
Food	1910–14	126
Clothing	1910–14	144
Furniture	1910–14	142
Home building materials	1910–14	167
Farm machinery	1910–14	155
Farm building materials	1910–14	156

We are spending about $7,000,000,000 a year to try to maintain parity for the farmer. Here we have an example of how parity can be maintained at no cost to the Government.

Big business is now filling the newspapers and magazines with its propaganda about taxes.

I am trying to get you to help me in telling big business how it can solve the tax problem.

The fact is, as you know, that when the Government spends six, or seven, or eight billions of dollars to maintain parity prices, the Government is subsidizing business from whom the farmer buys.

Many of us are now supporting the proposal of Senator HUBERT H. HUMPHREY that the Federal Trade Commission shall be directed to investigate and report to the Congress on the cost of distribution of farm produce.

I plead with you to take just a small part of the six or seven billions and tell the Federal Trade Commission to get the facts about the food or farm-produce industry. Until you do, I am afraid you are just going to continue pouring money down the slot and into the hands of the farmer, and through his hands into big business, and then inevitably into the development of monopoly and fascism.

Here are some of the stark facts which confront us:

We increased our agricultural production during the war as much as we had increased it in the 20 years from 1919 to 1939. With approximately the same amount of land in cultivation as before the war, we are now turning out one-third more farm products. Not only that, but three farm laborers today are producing more than four did in 1939. This is certainly a record of which the farmers of America can be justly proud.

What we are going to do with this remarkable production in terms of human beings is quite another problem. It becomes an increasingly difficult problem when we realize that with more efficient productive methods and soil conservation practices we may be able to increase agricultural productivity from 1 to 1½ percent per year indefinitely. Perhaps, if our population continues to increase as it has since 1940, we will not have to concern ourselves with surpluses or what to do with more efficient producers. In the past 10 years the population has increased 14,000,000. By 1955 we can expect that we will have between 8,000,000 and 10,000,000 more persons within our economy.

In spite of this briefly stated optimistic picture in terms or production, we all, as consumers, are actually faced with very real problems over which the farmer has little control.

It is a fact that close to one-third of the families in the United States have an inadequate diet and would, if they could afford it, buy more and better food. I believe it to be highly probable that unless we take some effective action, our poorly nourished groups are going to become proportionately larger. This, of course, would be an unfortunate consequence of unfathomable proportions.

We are forced to recognize also that farm consumers, as well as city consumers just mentioned, are the victims of this same inabiltiy to purchase an adequate quantity of agricultural commodities. On the farm side of the picture we find that the prices which are received by the farmer are down some 22 percent since a postwar high of January 1948. While on the other hand, the prices of the things which the farmer uses in the production of agricultural commodities are down only 3 percent, this from a high of July 1948. While there are many directions from which we might approach this economic dilemma, it seems to me that a clue is almost self-evident in the spread between what the farmer receives for his products and the price which the consumer pays when he purchases these products. The city consumers' ability to consume must be increased because of its effect on both city and farm folk.

It is common knowledge that the farmer's share of the consumer dollar has gone down to around 48 cents. This extends, of course, from a low of 10 cents for the farmer's share of the bread dollar, to 58 cents as his share of the milk dollar—to 65 cents for poultry and eggs—and about 64 cents as his share of the beef dollar. A study of statements and charts produced by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, indicates that as prices received by the farmers have declined, so has the farmer's share of the consumer's dollar. In specific figures, the farmer's share of the retail food dollar declined from 53 percent in July 1948 to 49 percent in October 1949. It should be noticed, too, that the share for marketing agencies rose by a corresponding amount. Actually, farm prices have been drifting downward for the past couple of years, while marketing costs have remained about constant. It is significant to me that the consumer is not getting the benefit of the decline in the prices paid the farmers.

In fact, I would like to point out to you gentlemen of this select committee that as far back as 1937, which is now some 13 years ago, the Federal Trade Commission reported in one of its documents that "when the price to producers goes up, the full amount of the increase or more is usually added to the consumer's price—but that when the price to the producers goes down the consumer is often not given the benefit."

Let me illustrate with a few examples what I am talking about. Let us take bread as a first example. While bread was increasing in price for the 2-year period from October 1947 to October 1949—by a cent, the farmer's share on a loaf of bread had decreased from 3.3 cents per pound to 2.5 cents per pound. Now it is perfectly reasonable that part of this increased cost was due to the increased cost of salaries and wages, transportation charges, storage, and packaging, etc., but it seems a little unreasonable that this increase should come at the expense of only the farmer, while others along the line were increasing their margins at the expense of the consumer. Looking at oranges for a while, it would seem that here is another case where the grower is receiving a much smaller share of what should be his proportionate return. Out of the dollar spent for oranges in New York City the grower received 19 cents—picking and assembling costs 6 cents—packing and selling 16 cents, transportation 13 cents, auction 1 cent, and wholesale and retail costs 45 cents (Bureau of Agricultural Economics figures).

Now I don't pretend to be able to say how justifiable each of these costs all along the way actually is. But it seems to me that if we're going to do anything to help the farmer get a better price and the consumer a lower cost then we have got to do something about these tremendously large distribution costs. Oranges are an especially good example because processing compared to canned foods is relatively small, and so is the grower's return.

Look for a moment at the costs paid by consumers for apples in Chicago, which were shipped in from Washington State. The retail sales price was $5.13, and of this amount the farmer received $1.36. At the shipping point $1.21 was paid, while freight costs were only 73 cents. Nine cents was paid to auction, and $1.74 was paid to the wholesaler and retailer. Look again at where the tomato dollar goes for South Carolina tomatoes which were marketed in New York City. Out of this dollar the farmer got less than one-third, while the assembly and packer got more than 12 cents, transportation nearly 9 cents, auction 8.1 cents, and the retailer and wholesaler 39.3 cents. It would seem to me that the margins taken by those individuals in the distributive process between the farmer and consumer are unduly high in proportion to the amount of risk taken by them.

With your indulgence, I would like to mention one more example of a consumer item which shows a real disparity between its sale price and the price the farmer gets as his part of the raw material. In 1945, a study was made by the Department of Agriculture which disclosed that out of 100 percent cost of an article, that about 7 percent was for the farm value of the cotton. Supposing that a shirt cost $3. This means that there would be only 21 cents worth of cotton in the shirt. It seems to me that some study ought to be undertaken which would determine whether this is a fair margin for the farmer to receive.

I realize, gentlemen, that any serious investigation of the margins taken by various distributive media is going to be a complex, detailed, and time-consuming job. But if we want to be fair to both the consumer and the farmer—which actually includes all of us—then it seems to me that it is necessary to make such a detailed study. Let me suggest another path of investigation which may provide a clue for the examination of this problem. Out in Ohio last year about 50,000,000 bushels of wheat went to market, over and above what was consumed on the farm. Because the farmers of Ohio were unable to hold their production for a higher spring price, they lost up to 35 cents per bushel. This was because they had to sell under the loan price to speculators who were able to profit from their losses. Taking a conservative average of 20 cents per bushel loss, this means that the farmers of Ohio alone, in 1949, lost at least $10,000,000, for in April of 1950 wheat went up to the loan price. But at this time the farmer did not receive the benefit of the increment because the wheat was out of his hands and in the hands of the speculators.

A similar situation was found in corn, where farmers were forced to sell in the fall at 40 cents per bushel under the loan price. Once again this was necessary because the corn had to be moved in the fall instead of being held.

Now, gentlemen, this difference in price paid the farmer and cost to the processor is not just a "fair, reasonable service charge," as claimed by some grain speculators; it is actually a profit which should either be retained in the hands of the farmer in order to help better his economic situation or be passed on as a reduction in price which should partially accrue to the city consumer.

This situation becomes even more shocking when we look at what happened to soybeans in Ohio last fall. In the fall and early winter soybeans were selling for around $2. By April 1950, the price on soybeans had gone to $3. But the Bureau of Agricultural Economics shows that there were fewer soybeans in the hands of farmers in the early part of 1950 than there had been at any time since farmers started to raise soybeans. Here was a clear-cut speculative profit of a dollar a bushel, which affected the production of eighteen to twenty million bushels of soybeans on Ohio farms. This had a direct effect on the decline in income experienced by Ohio farmers in 1949. Because this decline was general throughout the country, I am certain that speculation in grain was one of the direct causes.

I would like to take this opportunity to make a very concrete proposal to your committee and to the Federal Trade Commission. I recommend that your committee, or some appropriate committee in the Congress, charge the Federal Trade Commission with responsibility for investigating the great disparity of prices between the producer and the consumer. I suggest that the Federal Trade Commission be given the required funds to make a thorough investigation of price spreads and that it bring its recommendations to the Congress.

It is my own feeling that the great costs of distribution are in part due to inefficiency—but that the greatest part of those costs lies in hidden profits to speculators and tremendous profits to huge corporations which stand astride the channels of distribution and take their toll automatically on the milk for America's growing children, the food for the needy as well as for those who can afford it, and for the clothing and other fiber products used by American consumers.

The Gillette committee in the Senate has turned up some revealing figures on the profits of America's great milk processing and distribution corporations. These profits keep at high levels even in depression years. At their bidding retail prices are kept high. Milk consumption falls with high prices—and both the farmer and the consumer suffer.

The Gillette committee revealed, for instance that National Dairy Products did a business of $986,000,000 in 1948, or nearly one billion dollars. Profits were $26,000,000 of invested capital—showing a net return of 10 percent.

The Borden Co. did a business of $650,000,000 in 1948. It reported profits of 2.95 percent of sales. The president of Borden's under questioning was unable to say what the profits were on capital investment. The committee investigation places it at 10 percent. The president of Borden's guessed it was 7 or 8 percent. Apparently, at the moment, nobody knows.

During the period between 1911 to 1918 the Department of Justice brought a total of 21 antitrust cases relating to milk. Eighteen of these 21 were brought within the past 12 years, and 9 have been brought since 1946.

There is one good example of what can be done to cut these costs of distribution.

The United States Department of Agriculture, in a recent study estimated that Minneapolis residents pay 2½ cents less per quart than they would otherwise pay. The reason is simple. There is genuine competition, free enterprise, in Minneapolis. The Franklin Cooperative Creamery does about 25 percent of all the milk business in the city. It holds down the price to the consumer and holds up the payments to the farmer at the same time. The cooperative yardstick saves Minneapolis consumers $2,000,000 each year. The demand for milk is increased—and the farmer's take-home pay is increased.

Why can't the cost of distribution be cut in other cities?

Why doesn't the Federal Trade Commission undertake a sweeping investigation of this price-spread problem? Won't this committee initiate and insist that some positive action be taken?

I am going back to that point No. 4 I mentioned—how the consumer on our farms and in our cities can be helped by the Federal Trade Commission. I have been told what purports to be facts—facts which I'd like to see given to every farmer.

The Federal Trade Commission made an investigation of the electric utility industry in the 1920's. I have been told by one of Senator George W. Norris' associates that this country would not have a TVA today had it not been for that Federal Trade Commission investigation. My friend, who worked daily with Senator Norris says we would not have an REA development had it not been for that Federal Trade Commission investigation. The investigation developed all the economic facts which justified and compelled the TVA and REA development.

I understand that very soon after the Federal Trade Commission completed that work, mysterious influences developed in the Congress to halt further economic investigations by the Commission. I am told that a very fine Congressman has boasted about his part in halting the investigations. My friends assure me that no question can ever be raised about the public service of that Congressman—that he was a wonderful public servant. Yet, he assumed leadership in tacking a rider onto the appropriations for the Commission. That rider simply provided that the Commission could engage in no economic investigations, other than those permitted by the regular annual appropriation, unless the investigations were authorized specifically by both Houses of the Congress and unless appropriations were made.

The result is obvious. All that was needed thereafter was to limit to a ridiculously small amount the appropriations for economic investigations. Then the Power Trust and all other monopolies would be protected against any more exposés.

I understand the Congress has given the Commission only about $75,000 or $80,000 a year for economic investigations. Then the Congress, through its rider on the appropriations bill, has denied, in fact, the Commission any authority to make investigations.

Gentlemen, I am emphasizing these statements to develop the service which I think this committee can give to the public.

As everyone is a consumer, when I refer to the public I also refer to the consumer. The public interest and the consumer interest are synonymous.

Sometimes we take a lot of pleasure in poking fun at economists. But we—farmers, labor, and consumers—and you in Congress need economists to match the economic research available to big business.

Big business has its economic organizations to get and expose economic facts. Of course that is true.

But apparently it is a bad thing for the masses of people to get and know these economic facts. Farmers are learning how to get these economic facts. Organized labor is learning how to get these economic facts. The cooperatives are learning how to get these economic facts.

We insist that small business, farmers, wage earners, cooperatives, and big business shall have the assistance of fact-gathering experts in the Federal Trade Commission.

Let me give you some illustrations of the type of facts developed and presented since the war by the Federal Trade Commission which are of great interest to those of us in the cooperative movement, and, I should imagine, to all farmers, workers, small-business men, and, in fact, all groups and individuals who are concerned with the public interest.

As one example, the Federal Trade Commission has told us in a report, The Merger Movement, that big firms are buying up smaller companies right and left. According to a report issued by the Commission in 1948, more than 2,500 formerly independent manufacturing and mining companies have disappeared since the war as a result of mergers. The asset value of these 2,500 firms amounted to $5,200,000,000 or roughly 5.5 percent of the total assets of all manufacturing corporations.

Those of us who are farmers are particularly interested to note that more mergers have taken place in the food industry than in any other field. Of the 2,500 firms which have disappeared as a result of mergers, some 370, or over 17 percent, have consisted of food processors. This means, of course, that the number of food processors available to the farmer as markets for his products is gradually being reduced. Because of these acquisitions, a few big companies have obtained more and more power to set the price which they are willing to pay the farmer for his produce.

I want to drive home the point that these mergers have actually consisted for the most part of big corporations gobbling up small companies. They do not consist, as some big business propagandists would have you believe, of little companies combined with each other in order to more effectively compete with their larger rivals. According to the report, more than 70 percent of the total number of firms bought up since the war have been absorbed by larger corporations with assets of more than $5,000,000. In other words, it is the large companies which are making the acquisitions. But the companies that are being bought up are essentially small firms. More than 70 percent of the total number of companies absorbed during this period have been smaller firms with assets of less than $1,000,000.

Not only has the Commission given us the hard facts as to the trend of mergers and acquisition; it has also shown us the results of this movement. In a report issued in 1949, entitled "The Concentration of Productive Facilities," the Commission has brought out the truly startling fact that in 1947, 113 giant corporations owned nearly half of the industrial facilities of all manufacturing enterprises. This finding is so important that I wish to quote the Commission's report directly. Here is what the Commission says, quoting from page 14: "In 1947, the 113 largest manufacturing corporations, with assets in excess of $100,000,000 each, owned $16,093,000,000 of net capital assets (property plant and equipment), or 46 percent of the total for all manufacturing, both corporate and noncorporate." I think all of us in the cooperative movement have long been aware of the power which a few giant corporations exert over the Nation's economy, but even in our worst nightmares we never imagined that the situation was as bad as the Commission has actually found it to be.

The Commission presented the facts not only as to concentration in manufacturing as a whole, but as to many important individual industries. In this same report the Commission found that the three largest companies in their respective industries own 100 percent of the industrial facilities in the aluminum industry, 95 percent in tin cans, 92 percent in linoleum, 88 percent in copper, 77 percent in cigarettes, 72 percent in distilled liquors, 71 percent in plumbing equipment, 70 percent in rubber tires, 69 percent in office and store machines, and so on.

Those of us who are farmers are, of course, greatly interested in the figures contained in the report relating to concentration in the production of articles which the farmer buys. Thus the report shows that two-thirds—exactly 66.6 percent—of all the industrial facilities in the agricultural machinery industry are owned by just three companies—International Harvester, Deere & Co., and Allis-Chalmers. We are also greatly interested in the concentration which exists among the food processors—the companies which buy the products which the farmer raises. According to this report, three companies own 68 percent of the facilities in the biscuit and cracker industry, 64 percent in the meat-packing industry, 56 percent in the dairy-products industry, 32 percent in the canning and preserving industry, etc.

In view of this enormous concentration in the food-processing field, is it not clear that the farmer is more or less at the mercy of these giant firms that buy his produce? And is it not also clear that the farmer will continue to be at their mercy as long as this concentration in the food-processing field exists?

A third report recently issued by the Commission which I also wish to call to the attention of this committee, is its report on the fertilizer industry, issued in 1950. Obviously, there are few subjects of greater interest to the farmer. If I had my way, a copy of this report would be sent free to every farmer in the United States. This report describes in great detail the history of the development of monopoly in each of the three basic fertilizer industries—nitrogen, phosphate and potash. It shows how each one of these fields has come under the control of a handful of monopolistic corporations. And it describes the types of monopolistic corporations. And it describes the types of monopolistic practices which these firms have used in order to rig the market and keep the price of fertilizer up.

Partly as a result of this monopolistic control the costs of distribution of fertilizer to the farmer are nothing less than outrageous.

Take, for example, the case of mixed fertilizer, regular 4–12–4 grade sold in my area, the East North Central States. According to the report, the average price paid by the mid-western farmer for this grade of fertilizer in the spring of 1941 was $30.49 per ton. Of that amount only $14.10 represented materials cost. That is to say, although the farmer paid over $30, only $14 was for nitrogen, phosphate, and potash—the materials which improve his soil's fertility. The remaining $16 went for distribution costs of one type or another, many of which could be reduced if the monopolistic control over the fertilizer industry could be broken.

The situation which existed in the midwest is not to be thought of as unusual. The figures in the report clearly show that it was typical of each region of the country. Take, for example, the State of the distinguished chairman of this committee. In the spring of 1941, the Texas farmer paid an average of $28 per ton for mixed fertilizer, regular 4–8–4 grade. Of that $28, only $15.31 went for nitrogen, phosphate, and potash. The remainder was again taken up by distribution costs.

How can the country expect to maintain its soil fertility when only about half of the farmer's fertilizer dollar actually goes for fertilizer materials?

It is facts such as these which I have cited with respect to mergers, economic concentration and the fertilizer industry which the country desperately needs for an understanding of how our complex economy works—of where the danger points are. I understand that the commission has been conducting these economic investigations with an appropriation which I understand is less than $100,000 a year.

This function should be greatly expanded. I cannot understand how anybody can disagree with the proposition that we need more and more of these facts.

Why do we need these facts? The cure for corruption and conspiracy and intolerance is the sunlight of fact. Give the small businessman and the cooperatives the facts and you will do many things. Let me list them.

1. You will save the small businessman from those who are exploiting him now by selling to him hate and intolerance.

2. You will develop cooperation and good will and unity within our United States.

3. You will do much to destroy monopoly and fascism.

4. You will make a great contribution to democracy and freedom.

Mr. Chairman, I think that TVA and REA contributed more to the welfare of our people than did almost any other developments of the last 50 years.

These developments were the fruit of inquiry into economic facts.

Mr. Chairman, I urge the Congress to strike down any rider on the appropriation bill such as I am told is there. I urge you to lead a fight to give the Federal Trade Commission several millions of dollars for economic investigations.

I think I've shown you how a few millions for investigation into the cost of distributing farm produce might save you billions of dollars, and more than that, might save for us both freedom and democracy.

I have been warned that someone will say, and I quote: "Look, we have the Department of Agriculture, which is knee-deep in economic reports," and "Look, we have the Department of the Interior, and the Department of Commerce, which are knee-deep in economic reports"—and—I am continuing to report what I am told will be the answers to my suggestions: "The committees of the Congress have made investigations"—and—"No one ever reads these economic reports, and no good comes from these economic investigations."

My first answer is that I think the Federal Trade Commission investigation of the electric-utility industry has proven how tremendous is that accomplishment.

My second answer, and this is most important, I want my Government to keep every window and door opened wide to the sunlight of economic fact, and every other kind of fact.

The Department of Commerce has sought for and developed, and then presented economic facts which are related to the selling of goods. That service was needed.

The Department of Interior and the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Labor and the Federal Reserve Board, and every other agency of our Government, have developed their economic facts related to our selling economy. They have opened all those particular windows on that side of our house. We should continue to keep them open.

But, I am wondering whether we do not have to open windows on the other side of our house, if we would be sure of having sunlight and fine and fresh and invigorating air in the house.

I am wondering whether we should not open windows on the consumer or buying side.

I am told that the end-road of every law the Commission enforces is marked "the welfare of the consumer." If so, the Commission had not been operating on all four cylinders during the last few years. We want to know why.

We are anxious to see this committee make this investigation of the Federal Trade Commission to help us to determine whether the Commission has failed us, or whether the Congress has failed both the Commission and us. The price spreads investigation I asked for earlier in this testimony would be one good step in the right direction.

To sum up, there is no place in Government now to which those who are interested in the consumer, on the farm and in the city, may turn for help in diagnosing our economic conditions. It seems to us that the Federal Trade Commission has been directed to do just that kind of work, but that the Commission has not performed. We want to know the facts. We are confident that if we can develop facts so that the farmer and the cooperatives can make use of them, we will find the small-business men and the farmers and the cooperatives working together. We will stop the racketeers who are now selling falsehoods and suspicions and hate and discord.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO] is recognized for 15 minutes.

MILLIONS OF ILLEGAL ALIENS ENDANGER AMERICAN SECURITY

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, during the past few weeks the country has been shocked by the discovery of two major alien smuggling rings. This news would be a matter of grave concern in normal times, but in the present era of Soviet fifth-column infiltration, it is a matter of critical importance to the national security.

The gathering war clouds resulting from the Communist aggression in Korea only serve to underline the threat to our national defense from the invasion of our borders by indeterminate numbers of illegal aliens.

In view of the importance of this question, it is difficult for many of us to understand the almost complete lack of interest in the problem of illegal aliens which has been shown by the New Deal and the Fair Deal administration during the past 17 years.

This problem is not a new one. It is, however, only since the rise of the New Deal that the infiltration of aliens—especially those with subversive missions to perform—has assumed major proportions.

The record of the present administration in the enforcement of the immigrations laws is the most drab history of indifference toward the laws of the land that this Nation has ever seen. All of us are familiar with such glaring cases as that of the Eislers—cases in which leading figures in the administration forced conscientious officers in our Immigration Service to violate the immigration laws for the sole purpose of allowing international Communist agents to get in this country. In my opinion, this is collusion in Washington to bring Communists in and keep them here.

This is only a small part of the real problem we must face today. There are in this country an estimated four to five million illegal aliens. It is impossible for me to give the exact figures, because this information is not available. Even the Department of Justice—which is charged by law with the enforcement of the immigration laws—does not know how many illegal aliens there are in the United States.

An indication of the magnitude of this problem is given by the sworn testimony of a district director of immigration that there were 125,000 illegal aliens in the Detroit district alone. This district is in the industrial heart of the United States. It forges the muscle and sinews of our national prosperity and security. Imagine, if you can, the danger of this situation in the event of war with Soviet Russia.

This problem must be solved because communism in the United States is an alien movement; its ideology is alien, its leadership is alien, and its membership is largely of alien origin.

As pointed out in the recent report of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary relating to the immigration and naturalization systems of the United States:

> Communism is, of necessity, an alien force. It is inconceivable that the people of the United States would, of their own volition organize or become part of a conspiracy to destroy the free institutions to which generations of Americans have devoted themselves. * * *
> The Comintern realizes that it cannot rely on native Americans.

Maurice Malkin, a former organizer of the Communist Party, himself testified before the same committee that—

> The Communist Party was organized and has been led by aliens since its inception in 1919.

These facts are supported by the continued presence in this country of aliens of the Eisler type who have been sent here by the Kremlin for the purpose of controlling Communist subversive activity in this country.

What has been done to solve the problem?

As far as I have been able to determine, there has not been a single deportation of any alien for advocating overthrow of our Government by force and violence—in other words, of a Communist—in the past 10 years.

In cases where public opinion has compelled the administration to act, alien Communists have been given a gentle slap on the wrist and allowed to depart voluntarily or to escape like Gerhard Eisler. Even in the Eisler case efforts were made to have his sentence for contempt of Congress suspended in order to permit his voluntary departure. This effort failed, because Eisler escaped before they could persuade the court to their viewpoint. Of course, we know what happened in the Gubitchev case, in which a convicted Russian spy was allowed to leave the country with impunity.

Should Communists by the thousands be allowed to roam over our land because there is no place to deport them—because Soviet Russia or one of her satellites refuses to accept them? I wonder how long the people of America are going to tolerate this worthless alibi. There are other means of solving this problem. There has been legislation before this House for years to give the Government the right to intern dangerous alien Communists whose countries of origin refuse to accept them. We should no longer tolerate this frightful indifference toward the problem of illegal aliens within our borders. We are in the midst of a cold war, now getting hot. We have seen in Korea and elsewhere that the threat is a serious one.

It is not going to do us any good to have a powerful army in Japan or in Germany, or in Africa, if millions of potential subversives are here in the United States where they can destroy us without military invasion.

In order that this problem might be solved, an investigation and study should be made by a select committee authorized to prepare legislation bearing on the subject of illegal entry of aliens and deportation of subversive aliens and their internment or deportation. This is a vital problem in America and bears directly on our survival as a Nation. A select committee should be appointed in order that this problem shall not become a political football.

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 28, 1950

(Legislative day of Wednesday, June 7, 1950)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father God, we bow this day in a spirit of solemn dedication as, in the onsweeping events of these troubled times, this dear Nation of our hope and prayer has come to an hour of destiny and decision. We thank Thee that in our ears is the sound of the liberty bell ringing once more around the earth. We would keep step with Thy purpose for all mankind as "Once to every man and nation comes the moment to decide, in the strife of good and falsehood, for the good or evil side, ere that choice goes by forever 'twixt that darkness and that light."

As our starry banner floats this June day in the free breeze of heaven it speaks to us of an awful sense of divine destiny, as our Nation prepares to take its part as the instrument of Thy providence in all the earth. We humbly pray that wherever it waves it may be to all men the emblem of freedom, equality, brotherhood, and justice; that wherever it is carried it may bring hope to the downtrodden, emancipation to the shackled, and doom to the thralldom of tyrants as, with the flags of united nations who cherish liberty more than life, it moves forward to meet and to make the future. In the name of that One whose truth makes all men free. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. LUCAS, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Tuesday, June 27, 1950, was dispensed with.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States submitting nominations were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3571) to continue the authority of the Secretary of Commerce under the Merchant Ship Sales Act of 1946, and for other purposes, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3258) to continue a system of nurseries and nursery schools for the day care of school-age and under-school-age children in the District of Columbia, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate; that the House insisted upon its amendment, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. MCMILLAN of South Carolina, Mr. GRANGER, and Mr. MILLER of Nebraska were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 494) to extend for 2 months the existing suspension of certain import taxes on copper, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

CONTINUATION OF AUTHORITY OF SECRETARY OF COMMERCE UNDER MERCHANT SHIP SALES ACT OF 1946

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3571) to continue the authority of the Secretary of Commerce under the Merchant Ship Sales Act of 1946, and for other purposes," which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That section 14 of the Merchant Ship Sales Act of 1946, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 14. No contract of sale shall be made under this act after January 31, 1951, and no contract or charter shall be made under this act after June 30, 1950, except as provided for charter under subsections (e) and (f) of section 5 hereof, as amended."

SEC. 2. The fourth sentence of section 11 (a) of such act, as amended, is amended to read as follows: "A vessel placed in such reserve shall in no case be used for any purpose whatsoever except that any such vessel may be used for account of any agency or department of the United States during any period in which vessels may be requisitioned under section 902 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended, and that any such vessel may be used under a bare-boat charter entered into pursuant to authority vested in the Secretary of Commerce on July 1, 1950, or granted to the Secretary of Commerce after such date."

SEC. 3. Section 5 of such act, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof subsections to read as follows:

"(e) (1) Notwithstanding the provisions of sections 11 and 14 of this act, as amended, war-built dry-cargo vessels owned by the United States on or after June 30, 1950, may be chartered pursuant to this act for bare-boat use in any service which, in the opinion of the Federal Maritime Board, is required in the public interest and is not adequately served, and for which privately owned American-flag vessels are not available for charter by private operators on reasonable conditions and at reasonable rates for use in such service. No charters shall be made by the Secretary of Commerce under authority of this subsection until the Federal Maritime Board shall have given due notice to all interested parties and shall have afforded such parties an opportunity for a public hearing on such charters and shall have certified its findings to the Secretary of Commerce. The Secretary of Commerce is authorized to include in such charters such restrictions and conditions as the Federal Maritime Board determines to be necessary or appropriate to protect the public interest in respect of such charters and to protect privately owned vessels against competition from vessels chartered under this section: Provided, however, That all such charters shall contain a provision that they will be reviewed annually by the Federal Maritime Board, with recommendations to the Secretary of Commerce, for the purpose of determining whether conditions exist justifying continuance of the charters under the provisions of this subsection.

"(2) A charter existing on June 30, 1950, with respect to a war-built dry-cargo vessel may be extended to September 30, 1950, if application is made within 10 days after the enactment hereof for the charter of such vessel under subsection (e) of this section and if the Secretary of Commerce deems such extension is justified in accordance with the provisions of section 5 (e) (1): Provided, however, That a new voyage under such extended charter shall not be begun after September 30, 1950, unless it has been determined prior to such date, in accordance with the procedure set forth in this subsection, that the continued use of the vessel in the service is required. The Federal Maritime Board shall conduct all hearings on applications made under this paragraph immediately upon receipt thereof and shall promptly certify its findings to the Secretary of Commerce, provided that all such certifications shall be made not later than September 30, 1950.

"(f) (1) Notwithstanding the provisions of sections 11 and 14 of this act, as amended, the Secretary of Commerce may charter any passenger vessel, whether or not war-built, owned by the United States on or after June 30, 1950, pursuant to title VII of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended.

"(2) Charters existing on June 30, 1950, with respect to passenger vessels may be continued until December 31, 1951, or until expiration thereof by the terms of their provisions."

SEC. 4. Section 2 of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution authorizing the Commandant of the United States Coast Guard to waive compliance with the navigation and vessel-inspection laws administered by the Coast Guard," approved March 31, 1947 (Public Law 27, 80th Cong.), as amended, is amended by striking out the date "June 30, 1950" and inserting in lieu thereof the date "June 30, 1951."

SEC. 5. Notwithstanding the provisions of section 27 of the act of June 5, 1920 (41 Stat. 999), as amended by act of April 11, 1935 (49 Stat. 154), and by act of July 2, 1935 (49 Stat. 442), or the provisions of any other act or regulation, vessels of Canadian registry shall be permitted to transport iron ore between United States ports on the Great Lakes during the period from the date of enactment of this act of December 31, 1950, or until such earlier time as the President by order may designate, and such vessels shall be permitted during the period from the date of enactment of this act of December 31, 1950, to transport coal to Ogdensburg, N. Y., from other points in the United States on the Great Lakes, or their connecting or tributary waters.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House, ask a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the Vice President appointed Mr. MAGNUSON, Mr. MCFARLAND, and Mr. WILLIAMS conferees on the part of the Senate.

NURSERIES AND NURSERY SCHOOLS IN THE DISTRICT

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3258) to continue a system of nurseries and nursery schools for the day care of school-age and under-school-age children in the District of Columbia, together with a message from the House insisting upon its amendment and requesting a conference with the Senate thereon:

Resolved, That the bill from the Senate (S. 3258) entitled "An act to continue a system of nurseries and nursery schools for the day care of school-age and under-school-age children in the District of Columbia," do pass with the following amendment: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That section 2 of the act entitled 'An act to authorize and direct the Board of Public Welfare of the District of Columbia to establish and operate in the public schools and other suitable locations a system of nurseries and nursery schools for day care of school-age and under-school-age children, and for other purposes,' approved July 16, 1946, as amended, is amended by striking out 'until June 30, 1950, and no longer' and inserting in lieu thereof 'until June 30, 1951, and no longer.'

"SEC. 2. Section 3 of such act is amended to read as follows:

" 'SEC. 3. The Board is authorized to make and enforce rules and regulations governing admission to and use and enjoyment of said nurseries and nursery schools, including the fixing of fees to be charged parents for care and maintenance therein of their children; which fees shall, as near as practicable, equal the expenditures of the District of Columbia for personal services, labor, food, and supplies in the operation and maintenance of such nurseries and nursery schools or to enter into contracts with any private or public agency or agencies for such care and maintenance: Provided, That the Board may, in cases where parents are unable to pay for such care, waive all or part of such fees. All fees collected under the provisions of this act shall be paid to the Collector of Taxes of the District of Columbia and deposited into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of an account to be known as "Miscellaneous trust-fund deposits, District of Columbia—Day Care Nurseries," said fund to be available, in addition to appropriations made pursuant to section 4 of this act, for expenditure for the purposes of this act: Provided further, That such fund shall be audited and disbursed in the same manner as other trust funds are audited and disbursed by the District of Columbia: And provided further, That any balance remaining in such trust-fund account after June 30, 1951, shall be covered into the Treasury to the credit of miscellaneous receipts of the District of Columbia.'

"SEC. 3. Section 4 of such act is amended to read as follows:

" 'SEC. 4. There is authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1951, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the District of Columbia not otherwise appropriated, not exceeding $100,000 to carry out the purposes of this act.'

"SEC. 4. Section 2 of this act shall take effect upon enactment."

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, U. S.,
June 27, 1950.

Resolved, That the House insists on its amendment to the bill (S. 3258) entitled "An act to continue a system of nurseries and nursery schools for the day care of school-age and under-school-age children in the District of Columbia," and ask a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That Mr. MCMILLAN of South Carolina, Mr. GRANGER, and Mr. MILLER of Nebraska be the managers of the conference on the part of the House.

Mr. KEFAUVER. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the Vice President appointed Mr. HUNT, Mr. KEFAUVER, and Mrs. SMITH of Maine conferees on the part of the Senate.

TRANSACTION OF ROUTINE BUSINESS

By unanimous consent, the following routine business was transacted:

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Petitions, etc., were presented, and referred as indicated:

By Mr. HUMPHREY:

A resolution adopted by the Village Council of the Village of Aurora, Minn., relating to the development of low-grade ore and taconite; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. LODGE (for himself and Mr. SALTONSTALL):

Two resolutions of the General Court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts; to the Committee on Finance:

"Resolutions memorializing the President of the United States and Members of Congress to oppose further tariff reductions on imports of shoes and textile goods

"Whereas loss of textile export trade during the past years has resulted in increased unemployment in shoe factories and textile mills and in the loss of great sums of money to the workers, the manufacturers, and the mill owners; and

"Whereas the proposed tariff reductions will still further adversely affect these great industries, which now find themselves unable to compete with the major European competitors, as well as those of Japan and India, where wage scales are so much less: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the General Court of Massachusetts hereby expresses its opposition to any further tariff reductions on imports of shoe and textile goods; and be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent by the secretary of the Commonwealth to the President of the United States and to each Member of Congress from this Commonwealth.

"Resolutions memorializing Congress relative to the importance of stockpiling worsted fabrics instead of raw wool

"Whereas it is the proposed intention of the Federal Government to mobilize industry within a 6 months' period; and

"Whereas the Federal Government is now engaged in a program of stockpiling raw wool; and

"Whereas it is the firm conviction of competent industrial leaders, based on accurate computations, that the stockpiling of wool is unsound at the present time and the stockpiling of worsted fabrics would assist materially in the Federal plan for mobilization, and would materially assist in relieving the present unemployment situation in the textile industry: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the General Court of Massachusetts urges the Congress of the United States to take such immediate action as is necessary to revise the policy of the Federal Government by the substitution of stockpiling worsted fabrics instead of raw wool; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent forthwith by the Secretary of the Commonwealth to the President of the United States, to the Presiding Officer of each branch of Congress, and to the Members thereof from this commonwealth.

Post of June 22, 1950, which appears in the Appendix.]

INTEGRATION OF WISCONSIN RETIREMENT FUND WITH FEDERAL SOCIAL-SECURITY SYSTEM

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I send to the desk a statement which I have prepared on the subject of the need for integration of the Wisconsin retirement fund with the Federal social-security system. I ask unanimous consent that it be printed at this point in the body of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR WILEY

Mr. President, the fate of 30,000 employees of Wisconsin State, county, and local governments and the families of these employees hangs in the balance. The conferees appointed from the Senate Finance Committee and the House of Representatives Ways and Means Committee have it within their power to make a simple provision in the law which will assure justice for 30,000 individuals, or which will put them out in the cold.

It was with extreme regret that the people of Wisconsin read that the Senate had unfortunately rejected the Wiley-McCarthy amendment to permit the integration of our retirement fund with the Federal system. During the debate on the Senate floor on June 20, I pointed out that not a single individual in the United States could possibly be harmed by this amendment, but that on the contrary, 30,000 and more individuals would be helped. The very modest pensions to which these individuals are entitled under the Wisconsin system would have been supplemented by Federal coverage.

In addition the widows and dependents of these employees would have been given a square break.

It is incredible that Congress should decide that employees of the Ford Motor Company are entitled to get private pensions plus Federal coverage, or employees of the Chrysler Corp., or of the General Motors Corp.; but that an employee of the State of Wisconsin, or of a Wisconsin city or county is not similarly entitled.

Mr. President, I now publicly appeal, as I have privately appealed, to the Senate-House conferees. I ask them to permit employees now covered by the Wisconsin retirement fund to get social-security coverage. Under the House provisions of H. R. 6000, such employees could get coverage provided Wisconsin entered into an agreement with Uncle Sam, and provided two-thirds of the employees so voted. I am sure that if these 30,000 individuals are given an opportunity to vote on this matter, they will vote with almost complete unanimity. They have everything to gain and nothing to lose from integration. The people of the United States have everything to gain and nothing to lose from permitting integration.

This Wisconsin situation is unique. The Badger State is the only 1 of the 48 States which had the vision and the foresight to plan for integration. Surely this specific situation can be met by a specific provision in the final conference report on the bill. Surely the needs of these 30,000 individuals need not be slighted.

They should not be and must not be discriminated against.

Let us reward the State of Wisconsin for its foresight rather than have it penalized. Let these employees come in under the Federal social-security system.

EXTENSION OF SELECTIVE SERVICE ACT OF 1948—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the diagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6826) to provide for the common defense through the registration and classification of certain male persons, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the unanimous-consent agreement the Senate will vote at 2 o'clock on the conference report on House bill 6826, the draft extension bill. There is no division of time and no control of time.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, as the distinguished Vice President has said, the Senate has entered into a unanimous-consent agreement to vote at 2 o'clock today on the conference report on the bill to provide for the common defense through the registration and classification of certain male persons, and for other purposes, the bill dealing with the extension of the Selective Service Act of 1948. It is my understanding that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. KEM] and other Senators who were desirous yesterday of having further time to examine the report, have done so, and they do not desire to debate it. Therefore, Senators who are interested in the military-assistance program bill, as a number of Senators are, should obtain the floor and proceed to discuss that program. It is my understanding there will be no debate on the pending business, the conference report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the unanimous-consent agreement the Senate will vote at 2 o'clock on the conference report on House bill 6826. Senate bill 3809, to amend the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, is the unfinished business.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I desire to address myself very briefly to the military-assistance program.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one statement?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, on yesterday I undertook to advise the Senate and the country of the importance—and I think everyone realizes the importance—of the military-assistance program bill which is before the Senate. It is my sincere hope that we may continue to debate the bill, that we may stick to the text, so to speak, and that extraneous matters may not be brought into the debate until we conclude the consideration of the bill. I should like to conclude it as speedily as possible. My hope is even yet that we may do so today.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maryland permit me to ask a question of the majority leader, inasmuch as I am temporarily sitting in the minority leader's chair?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes, if I may have unanimous consent for that purpose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? Without objection, consent is granted.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Let me inquire whether the majority leader means that there will be a night session.

Mr. LUCAS. No; I would not contemplate holding Senators here for a night session, but perhaps until 7 or 8 o'clock this evening, if we can finish the bill by that time.

AMENDMENT OF MUTUAL DEFENSE ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1949

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3809) to amend the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I hope this measure today will receive favorable consideration by the Members of the Senate, because it is another part of the pattern of national defense which must be sufficient in order to make sure that the cradle of civilization, the reservoir of civilization, the reservoir of democracy, which is western Europe plus the United States and Canada, is strong enough to make certain that civilization and democracy shall survive. It took only the background of events of the last few days in Korea to bring home to us in vivid terms how quickly war can come, how unexpectedly it can come, and how we in the United States cannot get ready for it in the future, as could be done in the past, after it comes.

Heretofore it has been our historic role to take refuge behind the vast oceans, the Atlantic and the Pacific, which God placed on either side of this great country. Prior to the day of the airplane, the only way anyone could come to America to disturb the peace, the progress, and the tranquility of our people and government, was over the seas. However, that day now is gone. Now our country can be approached through the air. Although it takes days or weeks to come to our country by sea, now our country can be reached overnight through the air.

Great airplanes capable of flying 10,000 miles nonstop and able to carry the most deadly weapons ever known are now available. Regardless of whether other countries yet have such planes which can carry such weapons and operate with such great accuracy, we can be sure that the day will come when they will have such planes and such weapons.

So we can no longer rely on the oceans to keep the enemy in check. With that phase of our national defense planning a thing of the past, we can no longer rely on the oceans to give us time. The time element has gone. We will never, never, never again have time, as we had it in World War I and World War II, to get ready, to build camps, to draft men, to build arms, to equip our men with arms, and to send them forth, a year or two later, as powerful, trained, and equipped armies to the battlefields of the world. On the contrary, the next time we shall either be ready or we shall rue the day when we tampered, impelled by expediency, with the raw elements, the irreducible necessities, of national defense.

The last war cost us $2,000,000,000 a week, $100,000,000 a year in wealth, $400,000,000,000 in 4 years of war. We had better spend some money now to convince any potential enemy that it is unwise to attack the United States and its allies, so strong are they in military might rather than to be parsimonious with our national defense and, exhibiting our weakness and that of our allies, inviting attack, because in the end we would pay a thousandfold in treasure and ten-thousand-fold in blood for our indifference in meeting this problem.

This problem has been with us ever since the last shot was fired in World War II. Simply because it was not constantly visible, many of us discounted it. When the Berlin airlift was undertaken many of us were concerned; but when that problem tapered off, many of us subsided into indifference.

Now that we are confronted with the situation in Korea, there is brought home vividly to us the fact that an adequate defense is a constant job, demanding the unremitting attention of Congress so as to keep our defense impregnable, as we can do within our resources, and to help those who are allied with us. To do differently is to invite disaster.

No, Mr. President; in the future we cannot conceive of a defense plan built entirely on the two great oceans, as we have done heretofore. Today those oceans are merely brooks, from the standpoint of national defense; their great width has been narrowed by the march of invention and discovery. Today it is only a short airplane ride from Maine to Moscow. It is only 9 hours by any kind of modern bomber from Siberia to Chicago, and only 8½ hours from Siberia to San Francisco. It is only an overnight journey from Moscow to Maine. That is the world in which we live. It is not the world I want, not the world any Senator wants; but it is the world of reality, and we have to face it as representatives of the people, charged with the harsh responsibility of recognizing the physical elements which we cannot change. Until reason asserts itself and replaces force, we have no alternative other than to make this country strong and to strengthen those who are associated with us in the undertaking of keeping democracy and civilization and liberty and freedom alive in this tormented world.

Now to come specifically to the arms program, Mr. President, let me say that it is my considered belief, based on some observation on the spot, over a period of time, that if it had not been for the Marshall plan, if it had not been for the North Atlantic security alliance, if it had not been for the arms implementation plan, if it had not been for those things taken as a whole, it would have taken Europe about 20 years, unassisted, to round out anything like a reasonable defense program, that is, both to raise the men and to equip them sufficiently to have some sort of a rounded, considered, balanced force capable of resisting, within proper limits, any conceivable enemy. With the Marshall plan, with the North Atlantic security alliance, and with the arms implementation, we are steadily cutting down the time required to put these nations in a state of defense.

Someone may ask, "Why don't the other nations do it themselves?" Of course we might answer that question by asking, "Can they do it themselves? Have they the wealth, have they the resources, have they the means, to reconstitute what we might call peacetime preparedness without outside assistance?"

Let us look at the facts. It was only 5 years ago that all the allied countries of western Europe were occupied by a foreign foe. They had been occupied for 4 or 5 years by the Axis powers. Everything the Axis powers desired in the way of machinery, farm equipment, horses, matériel, raw material, money, lumber—anything they wanted—was garnered from the countries that are now associated with us. The material was taken to factories to be turned into munitions of war. The currency systems of the countries were ruined. The people lived under a dictator, a conquering foe. The armies had fought back and forth over their lands. Their great cities had been bombed, first by one force, and then another. Finally, when the day of deliverance came, there they were—prostrate.

They had not had an army for 4 years, because the conquerors had not allowed them to have an army. With the coming of defeat for the European allies after Dunkerque, all the military equipment, the tanks, the guns, the planes, the mortars, the shells, the ammunition, and the artillery they had accumulated between World War I and World War II had disappeared. It had been scattered to the winds and utilized by the conquering foe, so after 4 years, when liberation finally came, they had neither an army nor any of the equipment which for 20 or 30 years they had been steadily amassing.

All of a sudden, when liberation came, they had another problem: they were free, but they had no factories capable of employing their people. The factories had either been bombed or destroyed, or the machinery gutted. Bridges were down. Locomotives had been destroyed or worn out. Freight cars had been destroyed or worn out. Eighty percent of the industrial establishments had been destroyed either in whole or in part. Four-fifths of the machinery in the industrial plants had either been destroyed or removed by the conqueror and melted down to make new machinery with which to carry on the war.

Picture a country, suddenly liberated—without factories, without machinery, without bridges, without locomotives, without railroads, without freight cars, without raw materials; with the harbors full of sunken ships, and without a merchant marine to bring the things needed. To expect it within 4 or 5 years to develop, in addition to meeting the great problem of rebuilding its own domestic economy, anything like a balanced defense force, is to expect a camel to pass through the eye of a needle.

The first task of those countries naturally was to get their domestic economies going again, to reconstitute the machinery in their factories, to remove the sunken ships from the harbors, to rebuild the destroyed bridges, to rebuild the destroyed homes, and to make work for the people, so that in a dynamic, revolving economy sufficient money could be siphoned off for governmental purposes to restore gradually the devastation, first—and that had to come first—and then, out of that restoration perhaps to get the sinews of war necessary to build up an adequate defense. They could not do both simultaneously. They first had to have a government and an economy stable enough to produce taxes which would support a defense establishment.

They have not yet completed the restoration of their defense economy, and they will not complete it for some time to come.

I saw a table not long ago which showed that France, in terms of 1939 dollars—not in terms of modern dollars; it would be much higher—had sustained a total destruction of property amounting to more than $21,000,000,000. That is, in 1939 value. France is a country only one-sixteenth as large as the United States of America. On a geographical basis, that would equal a devastation in our country of about $330,000,000,000, in 1939 dollars. Let us merely suppose we had a devastation to that extent: it can be seen what a problem we would have domestically before we could turn our attention to national defense. The total destruction of France, in 1939 dollar values, was more than $21,000,000,000, and, as I say, France is only one-sixteenth of the size of the United States. If we were to figure a comparable devastation in the United States on an area basis, that would mean about a $330,000,000,000 waste of our machinery, our plants, our bridges, our locomotives, and whatnot, in the United States.

In 5 years that country has had to repair the damage, to get the normal procedures of civil life moving again, to make government strong, to stabilize its economy, and to provide work, shelter, and food for the people. Had it not been for our help, every one of these countries—for I have only used France as a sample—would be far, far down the line from the point it has reached today with our help on the road to recovery.

More than that, communism would have spread over France and Italy, but for our assistance, to a degree that is almost unbelievable. I know that in 1946, when that great Italian leader, Premier de Gasperi, was trying to rally the democratic forces in Italy to withstand the threat of communism in Rome, and when the Holy Father, also in Rome, was trying to spread the word of Christianity and brotherhood as opposed to the vicious and foreign doctrine of communism, it was a very close question as to whether the Communists might not actually take over the Government of Italy. It was a frequent sight in the city of Rome to see a mass meeting sponsored by the Communists attended by 100,000 people. It was only the help of our own country, in my opinion, plus the resolution of the leadership of the Italian people and their devotion to their church, fundamentally, that turned the tide in Italy. There was Italy, which had been a battlefield, fought over back and forth.

The harbors of all the cities of Italy, bordering on the seacoast, were literally filled with sunken ships. I saw many of them with my own eyes. The great warehouses and dockyards had been blown and battered both by shore bombardments, sea bombardments, and bombardments from the air. To expect a country that had been through a period of devastation and turmoil such as Italy had gone through to rebuild its military defenses in 5 years, would be idle; it could not be done.

What has followed in the wake of World War II? There came to this body an agreement called the North Atlantic security alliance, whereby the United States pledged its solemn word that if any of the countries in western Europe allied with us were attacked, it would be considered an attack upon the United States. If a Senator had not voted for that pact, I could understand how he might vote against arms implementation or arms assistance, Mr. President, if you please. But if a Senator voted that an attack upon Holland would be considered an attack upon the United States, then it seems to me the flow of logic clearly indicates that we have got to strengthen Holland, because, for military purposes, Holland really is the United States, according to the North Atlantic security alliance, with certain minor qualifications and reservations.

That pact was passed by this body by an overwhelming majority. It was debated for weeks. We gave our solemn commitment to stand by the western European nations. When we signed the North Atlantic Pact we committed ourselves to go to the defense of any nation in that area. Those nations cannot have the defenses which are required. We must either help them to help themselves to become strong in the military field or we must spend more money here at home. The stronger they are, the less strong we have to be; the weaker they are, the stronger we have to be. The logic of that observation, I believe, is inescapable.

It would be an idle and a foolish thing for this country to attempt to carry the whole burden of military responsibility for that area. We must diffuse that burden. Each nation which is a party to the North Atlantic security alliance must do what it can best do. We cannot do it all. I do not want American boys to do all the fighting, to bear all the arms, to have all the training, to make all the sacrifices. But those who vote against the plan are saying, in my opinion, "I want America to do most of it. I realize that the other countries cannot do it themselves, but I do not want to help them; I want our country to do it all. When the hour of fateful decision comes, it must be the American boys who must do the fighting, American planes which must go into action, American tanks which must hold the enemy."

If we know that those nations cannot do it themselves because of the impact of the Second World War, if we know their defenses are not adequate, and we refuse to make them stronger within our ability so to do, then we must make our own defenses stronger. We must perhaps have selective service in operation——

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Even though those nations are not able to do anything at all, does that in anywise relieve us from our obligation?

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator has put his finger on the point with his usual keen sense of the situation. My answer is, Of course not; if they are unable today, if they refuse to become able, if they do nothing about it, or if they cannot do anything about it, we still have the job to do. My point is this——

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me finish, please. My point is this: I believe they want to do all they can do and are doing what they can do within the scope of their ability, but I believe that each time we give them aid it increases both their will to do more, their desire to do more, and their ability to do more.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. TYDINGS. I have not finished. I shall yield in a moment.

Every time we help them with one dollar of military aid, in my judgment, we save several dollars of military aid which we would otherwise have to spend for our own country.

I now yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I am in total agreement with the observation made relative to our responsibilities under the North Atlantic Pact, but I should like to ask the distinguished chairman of the Armed Services Committee with reference to the will to do. There came over the ticker a few minutes ago the news that Great Britain had not yet crystallized her responsibility—I believe that is the wording used—and the only thing Great Britain would do at this time would be to send ships, and then only for mercy purposes.

Does not the Senator feel that under the provisions of MAP a billion dollars of which is going to Europe, with Great Britain being the recipient of a large portion of it, there is a question about Great Britain's will to do what the distinguished Senator just spoke about?

I ask that question in all seriousness, because it seems to me that it is one thing to build up the military-assistance program, but it is another thing for the nations to have the will, which the distinguished Senator has mentioned, to aid in stopping communism wherever it is found, when they are the recipients of the dollars we send.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator has a good point there. I am sure Great Britain will do what it can, within the scope of its ability.

Mr. President, on my various trips up and down the Atlantic security-alliance countries, I have had the privilege of talking to the Defense Ministers of a number of them, and I have considerable confidential information from some of them. I have a document in my hand which is top secret, with permission to use parts of it whenever it seemed, in my judgment, wise to do so. I am going to take the liberty of reading a few things, because, after all, facts should be of some value. There is nothing so potent and powerful as a fact, and here are the facts.

What is the number of homes, that is, dwellings, destroyed during World War II?

The first country mentioned is France. In France the dwellings completely destroyed were 291,000; partially destroyed, 938,000; total completely and partially destroyed, 1,229,000 homes.

Farm dwellings completely destroyed, 78,000; partially destroyed, 200,000; total partially and totally destroyed, 278,000 farm buildings.

France is only one-sixteenth the size of the United States, yet France had 1,229,000 dwellings totally or partially destroyed and 278,000 farm buildings totally or partially destroyed. Mind you, during the war no homes were built in France; all building was at a standstill. The war in France lasted from 1939 to 1945.

Let us look at another item. What is the estimated value of the destroyed homes in replacement cost?

The estimated value of destroyed homes, in replacement cost, in 1938 dollars—not present dollars, but in high-priced dollars—including farm buildings, domestic buildings, and so forth, was $8,560,142,000.

That gives us some idea of the magnitude of the picture.

How many persons—men, women, and children—were killed or unaccounted for because of battle casualties or the results of battles, bombing, forced labor in other countries, and not returned to their homes?

Here is another figure which is difficult for us to realize:

Killed in the armed forces, 160,000.

Civilians killed in military action, 120,000.

Civilians executed in France, 40,000.

Civilians who died in Germany, 300,000.

Total casualties, 620,000, in that short war which France had, plus the period of occupation.

I am not counting the figures for the wounded, which were 400,000 in the army alone, nor the 1,500,000 persons who were prisoners of war, nor the 700,000 who were deported for forced labor.

What was the number of industrial plants destroyed during the war in France? Industrial and commercial buildings, 66,000 totally destroyed. Partially destroyed, 180,000. That is a total of 246,000 industrial and commercial buildings totally or partially destroyed. Public buildings, 6,000 completely destroyed; 26,000 partially destroyed.

What is the value from a replacement standpoint of the destroyed industries? The plants, equipment, and stocks destroyed—I shall give the totals only—had an approximate value of $1,252,000,000 in 1938 values.

How many bridges were destroyed? There were 6,800 bridges destroyed in France alone, of which 2,603 were railroad bridges. Railroad bridges require pretty heavy construction. If we think of France as being one-sixteenth as large as the United States and then realize that 2,603 railroad bridges were destroyed, it gives us some idea of the paralysis of transportation at the time when the war came to a close.

What is the replacement value of those bridges? I shall give totals only. The approximate value of replacing the bridges in 1938 dollars is $471,428,000.

How many ships were destroyed? France has always been a great maritime power. In the merchant marine before the war France had 1,177,000 gross tons of liner and passenger-cargo vessels. Forty-five percent of them were losses. In cargo vessels she had 916,000 tons; in coalers, 248,000 tons; in tankers, 316,000 tons; in fruit ships, 86,000 tons. Eighty-seven percent of her freight vessels were sunk. Thirty percent of her coalers were destroyed. Twenty-five percent of her tankers were destroyed. Of the freight barges, which tread the canals of France, 87 percent of her 12,000 barges were destroyed during the war.

What is the replacement value of these ships? Two hundred and thirteen million dollars in 1938-dollar values.

The general cost of replacement of the damaged harbors and supporting facilities in 1938-dollar values was estimated to be $472,000,000.

What was the damage to the railroad rolling stock—engines, freight cars, and passenger cars? Of the engines, 24 percent were totally lost. Sixty-four percent of the freight cars and 40 percent of the passenger coaches were totally destroyed. I am reading only general summaries. I should like to take the time to detail the information.

How much of the military equipment was lost through seizure by the enemy or in battle? This is an interesting question as we come to the consideration of this bill. With very few exceptions the entirety of French military equipment was lost either in battle or through seizure by the enemy. The material thus lost corresponds to the equipment—I wish Senators would listen to this—corresponds to the equipment of 100 divisions. That is as many divisions as the Russians now have actively engaged or ready for action. We have 10 divisions. France lost the equivalent of equipment for 100 divisions in World War II.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to finish with this information first, because time is running out and I wish to get these tables into the RECORD, if the Senator does not mind.

Mr. WHERRY. Oh, no. I want to accommodate the distinguished Senator.

Mr. TYDINGS. I thank the Senator. What is the estimated cost of the lost and damaged material? The approximate value in 1938 dollars was $2,000,000,000 in military equipment alone. That is gone. We came through the war, and when it was over we had all our equipment except what we had lost in battle. The French had nothing except the little bit that they were able to salvage in Africa and what we had used to equip the 8 or 10 divisions that had come up the Rhone Valley. We are tied to France and the other members of the North Atlantic Security Alliance because we have tried to build up their economic and military strength. Those are the facts of the present situation of France, ameliorated only by 5 years of their own efforts at recovery, plus the help we have been able to give them.

Mr. President, I have a great wealth of information. I have read information pertaining to France. I have it for Belgium, I have it for Holland, and I have it for Britain. I have it for all these countries.

Mr. WILEY. Can the Senator tell us what the total is?

Mr. TYDINGS. The total of the figures, exclusive of military losses, is $21,000,000,000 plus in 1938 dollars. If France suffered $21,000,000,000 of loss and damage, and is only one-sixteenth the size of the United States, to compare that loss with what it would mean in our great country, we would have to multiply $21,000,000,000 by 16. If we did that, we would have about $340,000,000,000 of war damage in the United States, or equal to almost the entire cost of the war, which was $400,000,000,000 as of D-day. I should like to put more figures into the RECORD, but those I have given illustrate the point.

We will not get all the military help from the countries of western Europe which we desire and expect to get within 5 years after they have been through such punishment as is indicated by the figures I have read. It takes time. Look at the South after the Civil War. All they had were the horses the Confederate soldiers took home for spring plowing, a wonderful and unconquered spirit, a ruined economy, property destroyed, slaves free, their trade gone, and a new economic outlook—"Hereafter we are not a low-tariff country, but a high-tariff country."

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I shall be glad to yield in a moment. Consider the time it took the South, vigilant and strong as the people of the South were, to rebuild on the ashes. Then consider what the last World War in its far-reaching effect, with the modern weapons which were employed. To expect these countries, with their burdens, in 5 years to play the part in any defense scheme that we want them to play is idle. I now yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me say to the Senator from Maryland, with reference to what happened to the Confederate soldiers at the end of the War Between the States, that my father was a soldier in the war, but that he never owned a slave, and he was not fighting for slavery.

Mr. TYDINGS. Certainly not.

Mr. CONNALLY. He came out of the war with his farm completely in ruin. He went back and with his own hands dug a subsistence out of the earth. But it took him years, of course, to build back to where it would have been except for the ravages and horrors of that war. So the Senator's description and comparison of what has happened are most striking, and I congratulate him for keeping those things within the view of our people.

Mr. WHERRY rose.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am going to yield to the Senator from Nebraska, but I wish to make an observation before I do.

Mr. President, it is very difficult for conditions in Europe to be realized by the people of America, whose great cities still stand, whose towns and villages have never been bombed, whose great sweep of farm land, with the grain rippling in this June weather, has never been marched over by armies going back and forth, whose rivers have never been patrolled by planes, whose harbors have never been blocked by sunken ships, whose people have never gone to bed in terror of what might happen to them during the night. As the citizens of this remnant of democracy on the western shores of the Atlantic who stand here with their traditions, with their freedom of speech, with their freedom of the press, with their freedom to worship God as they see fit, with their free enterprise system, the right of trial by jury, the right to be confronted with the witnesses who appear against them, the right to be dignified human beings, and not be degraded by totalitarian systems, we sometimes cannot appreciate the price the citizens of foreign lands are paying to stand by our side and keep moving the system we have here.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. TYDINGS. I promised to yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the distinguished Senator, because I have been trying to get him to yield. I appreciate his observations. He is the chairman of the Committee on Armed Services, and has had wide experience in Europe, and the facts he has given are most interesting.

No one wants to have his country bombarded as France was. I have been in France, along with the Senator from Maryland, and have seen the damage that was done. The pending bill is a military-assistance measure, and the Senator is well informed upon that subject. Granting that all the aid we are giving the foreign countries should be given, I ask the Senator whether there is any provision in the bill for air-force protection of the ground forces. I think that is a very pertinent question, because it is my feeling, as it was a year ago, that what we want is a dollar's worth of defense for every dollar we spend. I ask the distinguished Senator, who is an authority, whether there is any provision at all in the bill for air defense, to protect the very equipment the distinguished Senator so eloquently has argued for here during the brief moments he has been speaking on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. TYDINGS. Does the Senator mean ground air defense?

Mr. WHERRY. I mean air defense—bombers, fighters, everything that goes with air defense. The Senator well knows that ground forces are practically useless in the warfare of today unless there is over above them fighter defense, and also offense—planes which might bomb countries into submission, just as happened to France when the demolition was so great there. I ask the distinguished Senator whether there is anything in the bill of that kind. I have examined it, and I, at least, cannot find anything of the kind. Perhaps the Senator can tell me what there is of that kind in the bill. I am asking the question in all sincerity, because what we want is a dollar's worth of defense for every dollar we spend.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator has asked a very proper question, and I think I can answer it, but first let me qualify my answer by telling him that most of the time testimony on that subject was being given in the committee I had to be in another committee, with which the Senator is familiar. With that explanation, I shall try now to answer the Senator's question.

The Senator will recall that not long ago an aircraft carrier belonging to France came to Newport News and loaded 60 fighter planes, and took them to France, as a part of the program we are discussing. I mention that item only because while it is true we have to keep many of these matters confidential, some things got into the newspapers and were published, but I believe our military authorities would prefer not to have the categories too widely discussed in public debate. But I shall answer the Senator in the affirmative; yes.

Mr. WHERRY. Can the Senator give the approximate amount in dollars?

Mr. TYDINGS. For the air force?

Mr. WHERRY. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. No; I cannot.

Mr. WHERRY. I am a member of the Committee on Appropriations, and while the bill before us is an authorization measure, in the Committee on Appropriations I have been asking question after question in an effort to ascertain just what constitutes the equipment we are to furnish, and I cannot get an answer as to the amount of air equipment. I know about the incident to which the Senator has referred, but certainly the Senator would not say to me that that small amount of air equipment, most of which becomes obsolete very fast, would be the kind of an air force we need to build up in western Europe in order to provide protection for the equipment which those countries themselves are supposed to furnish, along with the aid we are giving them.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator is absolutely correct. I would say that the amount of equipment we will furnish, of itself, is not going to accomplish the purpose we have in mind, and I would be the last one to mislead the Senate in that respect. I believe, however, that if we were talking off the record, I could give the Senator some information which I have learned abroad which would answer him more cogently than I can now, but I will say to him that there is a part of the general idea and plan for the defense of the area we are considering which is gradually taking shape, just as we would build a brick wall, putting different bricks into it from time to time, and what we are discussing now is a very substantial load of bricks.

So far as the Air Force is concerned, there are aircraft, aircraft spare parts, aeronautical equipment and supplies, bombs, rockets, miscellaneous ammunition, quartermaster equipment and supplies, and this has been declassified, I am advised, and I am at liberty to read this into the RECORD. If the Senator will bear with me, I may have something to offer in answer to the question he asked.

Mr. WHERRY. I hope the Senator can present something, because it has been impossible for me, in the Appropriations Committee, to ascertain the amount of money or the number of aircraft which is to be provided under this military-assistance program.

The Senator knows that Germany and a corridor there nearly 700 miles long are exposed to the Russians, in the event attack comes on that side. How is the equipment furnished to be protected in that corridor without air power?

Mr. TYDINGS. I am sure the Senator can get the answers to the questions in the Committee on Appropriations in executive session, but I am not able to give them, and I am not going to say that I have them.

Mr. WHERRY. The committee has held executive sessions; I have been in attendance, and I have done my level best to get the answers. I believe the Senator will recall that a year ago I made a fight for defense, just as he did.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. I think the strongest defense we can provide for the countries we are assisting is similar to the defense we need for our own country, namely, air power.

I do not desire to bring up any political question, but does the Senator know whether the military authorities feel that in the interest of the defense of this community of nations there should be any military appropriations assigned to Spain under the military-assistance program, or otherwise?

Mr. TYDINGS. Personally, I would have to answer the question rather carefully. I would say to the Senator that I think Spain is one of the great key countries in the bastion of civilization and democracy. I would prefer that the Senator ask me that question off the floor, and if there is anything I can tell him about Spain, I should like to inform him.

My point is that I doubt whether it is wise, even though I am a very poor military expert, for me to say things in public which might be of some value to those whom neither the Senator nor I desire to assist. If I am overcautious, I know the Senator will agree that I should be.

Mr. WHERRY. I do not want the Senator to say anything on the floor of the Senate which would in any way injure or hurt our cause. That illustrates our difficulty, however. We try to find out these things, and we ask those who know, but we do not get the answers. I am not criticizing, because if there is any information which is of a secret nature, or which would be an advantage to countries which which we are not in sympathy, I do not want the Senator to disclose it, but I have been seeking information for a year. We must start and choose where we are to spend our money and get a dollar's worth of national defense for every dollar we spend, and I have always believed that the air power, fighter defense, is No. 1 on the list.

Mr. TYDINGS. I have an answer for the Senator's question now.

Mr. WHERRY. I would go as far as our country could stand to go to get the defense that is necessary, but it seems to me to be absolutely foolish to throw a billion dollars into the foreign countries, without an adequate air force to defend the ground troops, and to leave exposed a corridor over 700 miles in length subject to attack from the east. I say that in all sincerity. I have been there.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me give the Senator the answer to his question.

Mr. WHERRY. Is this about Spain?

Mr. TYDINGS. No. I was just advised that as a part of the program, the amount which goes to the air force of the European countries is, in total, $309,533,133. In other words, about one-quarter of the total appropriation is devoted to the air force of the countries we are assisting.

Now I will answer the question the Senator wishes to ask, but I hope he will not make a speech.

Mr. WHERRY. I have tried not to, Mr. President.

Mr. TYDINGS. I say that not in criticism.

Mr. WHERRY. I wish to ask one question. In attempting to decide where the dollars shall be spent, it is difficult for me to get away from the proposition I stated a year ago, that the one thing we needed for the defense of the country is air power. The Senator speaks of houses and other buildings which were bombed in France. I am firmly of the belief that we should put our money into fighter planes for resistance, and into bombers that can do the kind of work the Senator described, because if war should come I feel that target No. 1 will be the United States, and we do not want such destruction as the Senator described, to come to the United States.

Mr. TYDINGS. I agree.

Mr. WHERRY. It seems to me we should make a concentrated effort to give the United States the maximum defense we need, and at the same time, in connection with the program we are discussing, secure a dollar's worth of defense for the United States of America.

Mr. TYDINGS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to ask one more question in all sincerity, to clarify the record. I do not wish in any way to injure the appropriations for MAP. I wish to read from a press report which clarifies the point I had in mind in the question I asked a moment ago. If the Senator does not mind I should like to read two short paragraphs, as follows:

The informant said Britain for the moment is trying to confine her participation in the Korean situation to a noncombatant role. The use of British warships for humanitarian work around Korea, it was explained, would release American naval units for other operations.

The source said the British feel direct involvement in the Korean fighting might lead to a break with Communist China, whose government they offered to recognize early this year.

Of course, that is only a newspaper article, and as the distinguished Senator said, possibly in 24 hours the situation with respect to the fighting might change, or some statement might be made which would alter the situation.

I wanted to say a word in view of the observations so eloquently made by the distinguished Senator from Maryland. It is true we are tied to certain countries. Under the North Atlantic Pact we are tied to them and our responsibility exists with respect to them, I suppose, whether they fulfill all their responsibilities or not. But as I, as a Member of the Senate, am asked to appropriate billions of dollars for other countries, I should like to know what is going to happen to that money, and whether we should spend the money over there, or here, whether for air bases or for other purposes, whenever the spending of the money will do the most good.

The Senator from Maryland has traveled a great deal, and has talked to the officials of many countries. We are tied to certain countries, but are they tied to us? Is what I have just read going to be the position of Great Britain? Is she going to fight or is she simply going to go along and appease the Red Communists in China, finally recognizing them, and not resisting the expansion of communism?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, if the full fury, which God forbid, of world war III breaks out, with modern weapons perfected by the experts of science and discovery, I will thank God from the moment it starts, and if I live, until it concludes, that my position, at least so far as I can see, will be taken largely upon the basis of the defense of the soil of the United States of America.

I shall have a heavy heart, and I shall have a great deal of compassion, and I shall have a great deal of understanding for people in Norway, Denmark, Holland, Belgium, Luxemburg, Germany, France, Italy, Britain, who will feel the first violent, cruel, devastating, decisive impact of a foe which is at hand, not 3,000 miles away, which can attack not only from the skies, but over the land and over the seas.

We over here at least will be looking only in one direction for the approach of our enemies. They will have to look down and straight ahead and up and all around at the same time. Since they are small in comparison to the potential enemy and to ourselves, since they have come out of a devastating war in which all of them, with the exception of Britain—and Britain also to a considerable extent—were battlefields, since they have lost world position, and their economic stability, and do not have the economic resources to recover and rehabilitate, I shall look over there, if this dark and dire day ever comes, with a feeling of satisfaction that in the hours that were accorded to me and my country while we were bound by ties of a security treaty to stand or fall together, I did what I could to the best of my ability, to make them able to resist this potential foe. If it does not pay all the dividends I hope for, I know that every bit of ground they hold for another minute, every life they take from an enemy, every plane they shoot down, every bridge they destroy, every bit of delay they can cause to the invading foe, means an easier task for America, less squandering of its resources, less exploitation of its youth, less rivers of blood to run, and fewer recurring problems for this and other Congresses, even if we win the war, as I know we shall in the end.

Therefore if there is a gamble—and I want to be the first to admit there is a gamble—I desire to gamble on the side of having done all I could, without being sorry, rather than to look at it from a smaller area encompassed and regret that while I had the time I did not strengthen the ramparts of morality and religion and democracy and liberty while time was still available in our democratic hands.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Of course, I could have made the same sort of speech with respect to the position I have taken in connection with the question I asked the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am not saying this by way of any criticism of the Senator.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to ask the Senator, as chairman of the Armed Services Committee, a question. Is it not likely that the first place the enemy will strike and will bomb is the United States of America?

Mr. TYDINGS. I have my doubts. I do not know. If I were running their show I would not put all my eggs in one basket. I would grab what I could grab quickly, and at the same time take the long-range point of view, too. But I would want to take the countries over there as quickly as I could so that the United States would not have any beachhead. When we speak of beachheads we must think of time; we must think of supplies, of ships, of transportation, of men, of ammunition, of oil, of railroads, of improvised bridges, of landing fields, of tanks. We must think of all those things. If the land is not held by the enemy we have time, and God knows we know what the landing of troops means.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEHMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I do not disagree with the Senator when he says that in order to conquer the enemy it is necessary to possess the land from which to operate. That is not the point of the argument. My question is: Where are we going to choose our place of defense? I ask the Senator once again, if the things he has mentioned are to be prevented, are they not to be prevented at home as well as overseas? Is that not correct?

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. The answers from the military which I receive to my questions convince me that the enemy might strike here as the No. 1 target.

Mr. TYDINGS. I will answer the Senator in one statement. In the North Atlantic Security Alliance, and almost in the whole world, defense is indivisible. There is no such thing as defending one place and winning eventually. It is necessary to fight wherever we can fight. We have to hold whatever we can hold. We have to take from the enemy everything we can take from him, because war knows no limitations. Nowadays it respects neither men, women nor children, the home, the church, the universities, or what not; it respects nothing, I regret to say, which human beings now can count on as being untouched and regarded as sacred, when it is in the pathway of modern war.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Agreeing again with the eloquent observations just made by the distinguished Senator from Maryland, I say to him—and he is chairman of the Armed Services Committee and is a member of the Foreign Relations Committee, and he probably has as much information as does any other Member of the Senate—that the most valuable spot on the entire continent is Germany; and unless Germany is protected, it is questionable to me whether this plan is the best plan for defense.

Furthermore, if there is one place in Europe which should be granted military assistance, it is the country of Spain. I have gotten that testimony directly from the military; and I tell the Senator that the State Department should hold out no longer, but should acquiesce to the demands of the military that we equip Spain, to prevent the very thing about which the Senator from Maryland is talking.

Mr. TYDINGS. I say to the Senator from Nebraska that I am in accord with the observation he has made more latterly.

Mr. President, I undertook to make only a few remarks, but I find that I have already talked at considerable length. I shall not undertake, therefore, to put into the RECORD all the data I have before me.

Some time ago, in talking to a group on this subject, I compiled a summary of general devastation caused in France in the recent war. Of course, France is the largest of the countries allied with us on the Continent. I also prepared a smaller summary of the devastation caused in Holland, which is one of the smaller countries allied with us on the Continent. At this time I should like to read the summary in regard to Holland, in order to show the experience through which that country went:

The number of houses entirely destroyed, 100,000.

The number of houses heavily damaged, 50,000.

The number of houses damaged by direct acts of war, by demolition, and so forth, 300,000.

Those who have been in Holland and, particularly, in The Hague since the end of the war will recall that at one place the enemy devastated an area straight through the entire city, to a width of two blocks. That line of devastation, two blocks wide, extended completely through the city, so that if opposing forces landed on the beaches, those who then occupied the city would have an open field of fire two full squares or blocks wide, and extending completely across the city. In short, every house in that area two blocks wide, and extending completely from one end of The Hague to the other, was blown down and leveled, so that there would be a good field of fire in case of attack.

So in little Holland, 450,000 homes were either totally destroyed, heavily damaged, or damaged by direct acts of war, by demolition, and so forth—and Holland is not a large country. It is a very thrifty, hard-working country, and the Dutch are a great people; but they do not have a rich country, in the sense of natural resources.

In terms of 1938 dollars, the value of the homes destroyed in Holland was $385,000,000, plus an additional amount of $66,000,000 chargeable to deterioration due to occupation by the enemy.

The total number of persons in Holland—a small country, I repeat—who died in combat during the war was 244,000. Think of it, Mr. President. That little country was overrun in the mere matter of days, and yet 244,000 persons—a quarter of a million—out of a total population of, I believe, eight or nine million, made the supreme sacrifice. In fact, I notice that the summary I hold in my hand contains the notation that the population of Holland as of January 1, 1944, is estimated at 9,000,000. So, 244,000 of the people of Holland, or approximately one-thirty-sixth of its population, or one out of every 36 men, women, and children in Holland, died in combat during the recent war.

Mr. President, Holland is approximately the size of Maryland and Delaware combined—my own State, plus little Delaware. With 9,000,000 persons living in Holland, a country of that size, just think of the destruction of homes and of life which occurred during the war. Obviously, it is unreasonable to expect these countries in 5 years' time to be in a state of adequate defense. It cannot be done.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD, following my remarks, the two summaries I hold in my hand, one in regard to France and the other in regard to Holland.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibits A and B.)

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, permit me to state to the Senate, in conclusion, that if world war III comes, there is no safety on the face of the earth today for any person. There is no such thing as a sure defense against attack by a potential enemy. There is no certainty as to how long the sands of culture will continue to drop through the hourglass of civilization, if we have another world war. There is no seer who can look ahead and say whether the victor, let alone the vanquished, will be able, on the ashes of desolation which will follow that struggle, to gather together enough of the vestiges of civilization and liberty to be able to build anything like the civilization we have struggled 2,000 years to attain.

Mr. President, while we have time, we must not tire of the task of defending the things we love. While there still remain hours and minutes and seconds and while liberty still exists on a large part of this planet, we had better make the sacrifices, we had better bear the burdens, we had better discharge the tasks, rather than to take the easier, temporary road, but eventually lose everything—because, like the republics which have gone down to the dust before ours, there finally comes a time in the greatness of every nation when some temporary comfort, some temporary expediency, seals the entire future of a nation and sends it into oblivion. We must do the best we can while the hours still are available.

Mr. President, on that premise I ask my colleagues, in this dark hour in the civilization of mankind, when war clouds gather on the horizon, to be of strong heart, to be worthy of our history, to be worthy of our traditions, to be worthy of those who have made this country and who met adversity, rather than run away from it. I ask my colleagues to strengthen those who are allied with us in this great battle for the preservation of the dignity of the common man. I ask my colleagues to pass this bill and, in an hour, extend the selective service system, and let the whole world know that the blood of the American patriots of old still courses through the veins of those in the Congress who represent the people of the United States.

EXHIBIT A

FRANCE

Dwellings

Dwellings completely destroyed	291,000
Dwellings partially destroyed	938,000
Total	1,229,000

Farm buildings

Farm buildings completely destroyed	78,000

Civilians executed in France	40,000
Civilians impressed for labor and taken to Germany, where they died	300,000
Total	620,000

Wounded

Wounded in the armed services	410,000
Impressed for labor in Germany (of which 300,000 never returned)	700,000

Damage to industrial plants

Industrial and commercial buildings:
Completely destroyed	66,000
Partly destroyed	180,000
Total	246,000

Replacement value of the destroyed plants and equipment, in 1938 dollar values, $1,252,000,000.

Bridges

Railroad bridges destroyed	2,603
Road and highway bridges destroyed	4,197
Total	6,800

Replacement value of these bridges, in 1938 dollar values, $471,428,571.

DESTRUCTION OF SHIPS

Forty-five percent of all the liners and passenger cargo vessels destroyed.

Eighty-seven percent of the general freight vessels destroyed.

Thirty percent of the coal-carrying vessels destroyed.

Twenty-five percent of tankers destroyed.

On the inland waterways 87 percent of the ordinary canal barges destroyed, 85 percent of the tankers destroyed and 75 percent of the tugs destroyed.

Replacement value of these ships, in 1938 dollar values, $213,000,000.

DAMAGE TO HARBORS

In 1938 dollar values, $472,000,000.

Railroad rolling stock

Number of engines destroyed	251
Number of freight cars destroyed	15,538
Number of passenger cars destroyed	1,805
Miles of track destroyed	3,542

Replacement value of railroads and rolling stock, in 1938 dollar values, $2,068,714,282.

MILITARY EQUIPMENT LOST OR DESTROYED IN BATTLE OR SEIZED BY THE ENEMY

The entire French military equipment was lost when France was conquered. It is estimated that the value of this lost and damaged matériel in 1938 dollar values was $2,000,000,000.

INDUSTRIAL MACHINERY, MACHINES, AND EQUIPMENT

Destroyed or dismantled and taken from France by the enemy, 6,900 plants, 9,975 pieces of equipment, together with the raw materials and manufactured stocks.

Losses in terms of 1938 dollar values, $2,612,142,000.

The over-all total of direct losses of capital equipment in France, including agriculture, industry and commerce, transportation and communication, war matériel, real estate and personalty, cash, securities, etc., in 1938 dollar values was $21,126,000,000.

This was the figure given to the United States mission by the French authorities in May 1946.

EXHIBIT B

Number of houses entirely destroyed	100,000
Number of houses heavily damaged	50,000
Number of houses damaged by direct acts of war, by demolition, etc	300,000
Total	450,000

Value in 1938 dollar values, $385,000,000.

Plus additional for deterioration, due to occupation by the enemy, $66,000,000.

DEATHS

Total number of persons who died during the war in combat, 244,000.

Population (estimated January 1, 1944), 9,000,000.

Holland is about the size of Maryland and Delaware combined.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. A moment ago I asked the distinguished Senator about the money authorized by this bill which will constitute military assistance to other nations. I wonder whether the distinguished Senator will give me a memorandum—if he does not care to discuss the matter on the floor of the Senate—in regard to just how such funds are to be integrated into the air defense of the community of nations.

Mr. TYDINGS. Does the Senator mean on the basis of country to country?

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct. I ask that question of the Senator, because I have not been able to find that information. Perhaps the Senator knows it. For instance, does the Senator know what contribution France is making in that respect to the family of nations?

Mr. TYDINGS. I think I do.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to obtain that information, because I have not been able to do so. Of course, the $300,000,000 is not enough; it must be integrated into the whole air defense. I think we should have that information.

Mr. TYDINGS. The way the Senator from Nebraska can obtain that information—and in saying this, I have no desire at all to put off his question—is at some time, when he is able to do so, to go to France and confer with the Defense Ministry, under aegis of our own Armed Services Establishment, so that he will receive the most cooperative reception, and with them go over the situation. In that way he will obtain a proper view of the entire picture. Mere figures regarding numbers of airplanes are not sufficiently informative, for not only must there be sufficient numbers of planes, but there must also be sufficient in the way of maintenance, repairs, airfields, depots, gasoline dumps, and so forth. So the ramifications go on and on. To give the naked figures of numbers of planes, without following up that information with the necessary additional information, would give a false impression.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I appreciate the fact that the Senator advises that I go to France. I do not have time to go to France. Certainly there is an integrated plan. I want the facts. I agree wholeheartedly with the purposes expressed by the distinguished Senator. He has made an argument regarding the ground forces, and by the same token the argument is made that, without an Air Force the ground forces simply cannot exist. That is all there is to it. I happen to be air-minded, I guess.

Mr. TYDINGS. So am I.

Mr. WHERRY. I certainly believe in the necessity of having a strong Air Force. This is the first time I have been able to ascertain from anyone how much of the assistance is for Air Force, and the distinguished Senator says about one-fourth of it. Of course, that fourth would have to go to all the western European countries, unless there is an integration within those countries of a complete air defense.

Mr. TYDINGS. Of course, the Senator would not want me, with what little I know about it, to stand on the floor of the Senate and describe it.

Mr. WHERRY. What is wrong about that? There has been published in the United States News everything that I know about the Air Corps of the United States. It portrayed in bright colors what we have in the way of fighters and everything else.

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes, but that is not quite the picture abroad. I may say to the Senator that if he will talk to me afterward, and I can help him get any information from my committee, I shall be delighted to do so. I am going to ask the Senator to excuse me now, because I must attend a committee meeting at 2 o'clock, and I have 18 minutes in which to eat my lunch. I hope the Senator will let me go.

Mr. WHERRY. I will certainly let the Senator go. I have not had my lunch, but I will stay here 18 minutes. I know the Senator has important work, but I may say to him it is certainly difficult for one who is trying to make up his mind on MAP to obtain the facts. Senators ought to be in a position to vote intelligently on defense appropriations.

ENDING THE COLD WAR—II

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, the attack made through North Korea upon the Republic of Korea south of the thirty-eighth parallel represents a serious rise of temperature of what has hitherto been the cold war. In spite of optimistic assurances from the administration which, it is true, have alternated with threats of military weakness and disaster, it has seemed to me for many months that our handling of this cold war would bring about such a situation as now faces us. There was no question of "whether." The question was when and how the resort to arms would take place.

As a practical reaction to an existing situation, the statement made by the President yesterday should have the hearty support of the Congress. It is in many ways admirable. The military support and action called for is purely defensive against an invasion already under way. It should be kept defensive. In deciding to prevent any attack on Formosa, the point is made that no military action will be permitted, either from the mainland against Formosa or from Formosa against the mainland. Especially wise is the statement, "The determination of the future status of Formosa must await the restoration of security in the Pacific, a peace settlement with Japan, or consideration by the United Nations."

Finally, it is refreshing to find at long last a statement of policy relating to the cold war which brings in the United Nations as a prime factor in our policy, and proposes to refer the problem to the judgment of one of the constituent bodies of that neglected institution. The resolution introduced by Ambassador Austin gives effect to this purpose. I am therefore speaking in support of the proposals made by the President in his statement of June 27.

Yet, Mr. President, there are in the policies announced in that statement a number of things which make one pause for thought. One of these pauses must come when we wonder whether we have here a declaration of war without the consent of Congress. One of the things we must think about when this question is raised is the nature of our commitments and responsibilities in South Korea. We agreed with Great Britain, Russia, and China to form a trusteeship and establish an all-Korean provisional government which looked forward to that nation's becoming a free and independent country. As a purely military decision in achieving Japanese surrender we cleaned out the hostile forces south of the thirty-eighth parallel while Russia did the same for the territory north. That is all there was to the division of the peninsula so far as we knew when the division was made.

Russia has never carried out its trusteeship obligations, having kept the northern area in its possession and withheld all participation in elections and the formation of a government. The United Nations Temporary Commission on Korea and the United Nations Interim Committee decided that elections should be held for as much of Korea as was possible. In consequence, free elections were held and a government formed which began to operate in August of 1948. It would seem from the history of the situation that we hold certain responsibilities of military protection against military invasion in view of the history of South Korea. It would seem as though, in all logic, that obligation would be recognized by the United Nations Council and Assembly in view of their action in authorizing the establishment of a native government and in view of the failure of the United Nations to date to organize any police force of its own.

So, Mr. President, it seems to me that this is in no sense a declaration of war but the carrying out of an existing obligation. While I do not wish to labor the point and perhaps lack the skill to do so, I would feel that any invasion of the territory north of the thirty-eighth parallel, whether in pursuit of fleeing forces, in retaliation, or for any other purpose, would constitute action of a very different sort and should be undertaken only as an act of war legally authorized by the Congress of the United States.

But let us now come to the point which should give us the greatest concern. It is this. We are still on the defensive. Because we have relied so strongly on military force, the crisis is taking the military turn. Why should it not? We have neglected or only half-heartedly pursued the positive actions which might have led to other events than those we now face. It is true that we have taken positive action, though on too small a scale, with the Voice of America and other means of spreading the truth as to our purposes and policies behind the iron curtain. The possibilities of disintegrating the Russian conspiracy against the peace of the world and against, indeed, the peace and prosperity of its own people, remains evident. We should have been pressing the attack. That we have not done so with all the vigor that positive action requires is a joint responsibility of the Congress and the Department of State. Neither has seen the possibilities clearly. Perhaps the major fault lies with the administrative branch since the initiation of policy comes from there. There should have resulted a race between internal disintegration of the Politburo structure and the ability to inaugurate military offensives, such as that we are now witnessing. That race has not taken place because our efforts remain practically unformulated, unauthorized, and unfinanced.

The other positive undertaking was the Marshall plan which has a notable record of success to its credit. That is limited in time and limited in the area of its effectiveness. Within those limits it has been a great success.

Except for these two policy areas we have fallen far behind our opponents in fighting for the world's peace and prosperity on the battlefield which our opponents have chosen—the hearts and minds of men. It is no wonder that they have decided to move into the field of armed conflict seeing how definitely we have fumbled the psychological and spiritual job.

I am not going to detail all the various suggestions I have made on this floor in the past few months. They are to be found in the RECORD. I do wish, however, to refer to one of them; namely, the proposal for the calling of a special session of the Assembly of the United Nations before whom can be laid the problem of the conflict between the western powers and the Politburo. This latest action, which can only have been undertaken by the initiative of the Russian Government, gives a broader basis and greater urgency to those relations and, in fact, shapes it up more definitely to a fundamental; namely, the relations between the Russian Government and the United Nations.

As we all know, the United Nations organization was born in the hope and firm expectation that its members, and particularly the four great powers, had the desire and the determination to maintain peaceful relations with each other and among the nations of the world. What should happen when that hope seems proved to be lost? Should we gloss it over? Should we conceal it like a skeleton behind layers of hoop skirts in the closet? The time has come, Mr. President, when the problem must be faced.

On this floor, on June 8, I made the earnest suggestion that such an Assembly be called. The occasion which made that seem necessary at that time was that Russia was winning the war of propaganda. Our concentration on arms, armament, and armed alliances was furnishing the viscous gum by means of which the label "warmongers" was staying stuck. It was my suggestion at that time that it would not be wise for us to take the position of standing up and accusing the Politburo, for they were likewise in a position to accuse us, owing to our fatuous obsession with military means. I suggested that we make a statement of the world as we saw it, explain the necessity for our actions and policies as we saw them, and ask the judgment of the world.

Now we have a more specific crisis. We have an armed invasion for which Russia alone can be held responsible. That one of her immediate purposes is to blackmail us into the recognition of Communist China is, after all, only incidental. The real assault is being made against the purposes and integrity of the United Nations. The time has passed for glossing it over. The time has passed for hushing it up. The necessity has come for the nations of the world together to talk frankly, seriously, earnestly, and without that heat of passion which beclouds good judgment.

The League of Nations arrived at the point where vital matters were glossed over and hushed up. Too much depends on the United Nations to permit it to die of asphyxiation in the skeleton's closet.

Mr. President, it comes down to this: Since we are still on the defensive, Russia still calls the tune and we still dance to her playing. Everywhere she makes her crisis and we scurry to meet it. It is our good fortune that we can meet this one with full moral as well as military strength. But when are we going to make the crisis? That is the question I am raising, Mr. President, and I am suggesting that the immediate initiative that we should take is in arranging for an assembly of the United Nations to discuss its own fate, in view of the determination to scuttle it, evidenced by one of its founding powers.

TEMPORARY APPROPRIATIONS, 1951

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, from the Committee on Appropriations, I report favorably, with an amendment, the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 492) making temporary appropriations for the fiscal year 1951, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 1922) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations, with an amendment, on page 2, after line 20, to insert "Mutual Defense Assistance."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 492) was read the third time and passed.

EXTENSION OF SELECTIVE SERVICE ACT OF 1948—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. President, as a member of the conference committee that reported the pending bill, I have not asked for time to speak on this subject. I do, however, ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at a suitable place preceding the vote on the conference report a speech delivered by me May 19, 1950, over radio station WHAS, Louisville, Ky., advocating extension of the Selective Service Act.

There being no objection, the speech was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Scores of times since Armistice Day, 1918, I have expressed the conviction that there ought to be inscribed on the wall of every schoolroom, emblazoned on the facade of every public building, and engraved on the desk of every Member of both Houses of the American Congress, the sage counsel of George Washington, who adjured the citizens of the Republic of which he was the father to maintain themselves in a "respectably defensive posture," and in the first annual address to the First Congress on the State of the Union, forcefully declared: "To be prepared for war is one of the most effectual means of preserving peace. A free people ought not only to be armed, but disciplined; to which end a uniform and well-digested plan is requisite." That doctrine, true then, is truer now, and, reluctant though we are to profit by lessons learned in the rugged school of experience, I have faith that, after two devastating World Wars in the life of one generation of Americans, we will have the wisdom and the courage to maintain not only adequate but ample national defense as the surest bulwark against another global holocaust that might destroy organized society throughout the world.

If Kaiser Wilhelm and the unspeakable Hitler had known that the United States both could and would move into a war for the preservation of civilization with all of this country's might, neither of them would have begun the march of aggression. If we are prepared, no enemy will strike. If he does strike, we will be ready.

Methods of warfare are becoming progressively more destructive every day. With supersonic speeds, guided missiles, atomic weapons, improved proximity fuzes, and long-range submarines, if another war ever comes, there will be no intrepid French Army to fight with its back to the sea while we get ready; there will be no Russia to hold at bay the enemy until we can prepare to destroy that enemy. Another war would come like a flash of lightning and a blast of thunder in an azure sky.

Almost as dangerous as the pacifist, who would afflict this red-blooded Republic with the pernicious anemia of pacifism, is the optimist who thinks we could protect our country by waging push-button war without millions of well-trained, well-equipped, well-armed men. In World War I no American-made airplane ever flew over a German trench and less than 400 American-made field guns ever reached a line of battle, while little Switzerland, than which there is no freer country, placed in the field in 4 days, 300,000 well-trained, well-equipped citizen soldiers, and preserved inviolate her neutrality through 4 years of blood and fire. Switzerland's system of universal civilian military training is a model for all free people to heed.

I can never forget the drama and near tragedy of that day in the autumn of 1941, when, almost in the shadow of Pearl Harbor, the House of Representatives, by a majority of only one vote, extended selective service. Out of experience, knowledge, wisdom, and patriotism, comes the voice of one of the greatest soldiers in the martial annals of America, Gen. Omar Bradley, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, who says, in favor of extending selective service:

"It is not enough that we plan only to win wars after they start—we must prevent them before they begin if the results of our plans are to be more than palliatives for a disease already contracted." General Bradley continued: "May I point out again that the international situation has not improved in the last 8 months. We have an opportunity here to buy ourselves from 4 to 6 months of essential time. This security bargain is only offered for sale once. Let's not pass it up." I am sure that the Congress and the American people will not ignore the wise counsel of General Bradley, as former generations ignored the wise counsel of George Washington. That 4 to 6 months' period might mean the difference between the preservation and the destruction of our country and its freedom. The cost of this extension of selective service, the maintenance of the necessary machinery for quick mobilization of America's indomitable manpower, would be less than one-tenth of 1 percent of our expenditures for national defense, but the extension is a vital and essential factor in the readiness and effectiveness of our preparedness, which is our best insurance against war and our sole means of emerging victorious if war is forced upon us.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, if there are no other speakers, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Anderson	Hill	Millikin
Benton	Hoey	Morse
Bricker	Holland	Mundt
Bridges	Humphrey	Murray
Butler	Hunt	Neely
Byrd	Ives	O'Mahoney
Cain	Jenner	Robertson
Capehart	Johnson, Tex.	Russell
Chapman	Kefauver	Saltonstall
Connally	Kem	Schoeppel
Cordon	Knowland	Smith, Maine
Darby	Langer	Smith, N. J.
Donnell	Leahy	Sparkman
Douglas	Lehman	Stennis
Ecton	Lodge	Taft
Ellender	Lucas	Thomas, Utah
Ferguson	McCarran	Thye

Gillette	McKellar	Wherry
Green	McMahon	Wiley
Gurney	Magnuson	Williams
Hayden	Malone	Withers
Hendrickson	Martin
Hickenlooper	Maybank

The VICE PRESIDENT. A quorum is present. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, under the unanimous-consent agreement entered into, the question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. LUCAS and Mr. LODGE requested the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HOEY (when Mr. GRAHAM's name was called). My colleague, the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. GRAHAM] is unavoidably absent. If present he would vote "yea."

Mr. MAYBANK (when Mr. JOHNSTON's named was called). My colleague, the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON] is absent by leave of the Senate. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. NEELY (when Mr. KILGORE's name was called). The senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE] is absent because of illness. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. ELLENDER (when Mr. LONG's name was called). My colleague, the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] is absent by leave of the Senate. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. TYDINGS (when Mr. O'CONOR's name was called). My colleague, the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR] is out of the country on official business for the Government. If he were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. HOLLAND (when Mr. PEPPER's name was called). My colleague, the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] is absent because of the critical illness of his close friend, Judge Curtis L. Waller. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, I desire to announce that my colleague, the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] is unavoidably detained by illness. If present, he would vote "yea." The senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR] is absent by leave of the Senate. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], who is absent because of illness, would vote "yea," if present.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] is absent by leave of the Senate, and if present would vote "yea."

The Senators from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR and Mr. THOMAS], who are absent by leave of the Senate, would vote "yea," if present.

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS], who is absent because of illness in his family, would vote "yea," if present.

Mr. STENNIS. My colleague, the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND] is absent on public business. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. RUSSELL. My colleague, the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] is absent by leave of the Senate. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I announce that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] are absent by leave of the Senate. If present the Senator from Vermont would vote "yea."

The Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] is necessarily absent, and if present would vote "yea."

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. DWORSHAK] is absent by leave of the Senate on official business, and if present would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 76, nays 0, as follows:

YEAS—76

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Maurer, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 1672. An act for the relief of Efrosini Abad; and

H. R. 6826. An act to extend the Selective Service Act of 1948, as amended, for a period of 1 year, and for other purposes.

EXTENSION OF RENT CONTROL IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. KEFAUVER. I submit a conference report on the bill (S. 3776) to amend and extend the provisions of the District of Columbia Emergency Rent Act, as amended, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, may we have order? We can scarcely hear what the Senator is requesting.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator is submitting the conference report on the District of Columbia rent bill. The conference report will be read for the information of the Senate.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3776) to amend and extend the provisions of the District of Columbia Emergency Rent Act, as amended, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following: "That section 1 (b) of the District of Columbia Emergency Rent Act, as amended (D. C. Code, 1940 edition, sec. 45–1601 (b)), is hereby amended by striking out 'June 30, 1950' and inserting in lieu thereof 'January 31, 1951, unless the Congress shall by joint resolution insert a later date'.

"SEC. 2. Section 2 of such Act is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"'(5) (a) After June 30, 1950, the provisions of this Act shall not apply to, and no maximum rent ceiling or minimum service standards shall be prescribed for, any furnished nonhousekeeping housing accommodations which are rented as rooms without kitchen privileges or facilities for cooking (but not in a suite of two or more rooms), and when and for such period as any of the housing accommodations in any building used as a rooming house are decontrolled under this paragraph (a) the provisions of this Act shall not apply to, and no maximum rent ceilings or minimum service standards shall be prescribed for, such building.

"'(b) After June 30, 1950, self-contained family units (as defined by regulations issued by the Administrator) located in hotels shall continue to be housing accommodations subject to maximum rent ceilings and minimum service standards unless the Administrator issues an order decontrolling them, or any of them, which he shall issue if he finds that such hotel is primarily engaged in furnishing accommodations for transients.'

"SEC. 3. Subsection (b) of section 4 of such Act is hereby amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof a colon and the following: 'Provided further, That the Administrator may by order adjust the maximum rent ceiling or minimum service standard hereunder although the landlord fails to produce evidence of facts occurring in the period from January 1, 1941, to December 31, 1945, if the landlord proves circumstances which in the opinion of the Administrator excuse the failure to produce evidence of such facts'."

And the House agree to the same.

ESTES KEFAUVER,
EDWARD L. LEAHY,
MARGARET CHASE SMITH,
Managers on the Part of the Senate.

JOHN L. MCMILLAN,
T. G. ABERNETHY,
JOS. P. O'HARA,
Managers on the Part of the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report. Without objection, the report is agreed to.

Mr. TAFT obtained the floor.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. CAIN. I believe it was the understanding of the Senator from Tennessee and most other Senators that there would be some discussion concerning the conference report on the District of Columbia rent-control bill. It was my understanding and agreement with the Senator from Tennessee, reached informally a few minutes ago, that he would present the conference report on the District rent-control question, and that the Senator from Washington, and presumably and possibly other Senators, would speak to that question. So the Senator from Washington was not conscious of the fact that action was being taken on the question of agreeing to the conference report on the District of Columbia rent-control bill, and he would ask that the vote be reconsidered in order that the Senator from Tennessee may proceed to tell us what the report does and does not include.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The conference report was a privileged matter. The Chair asked if there was any objection to the consideration of the report, and the Chair heard none. Then the Chair announced, as usual, that, without objection, the conference report was agreed to. No Senator rose and addressed the Chair, therefore the Chair put the question.

The Senator from Washington asks unanimous consent that vote by which the conference report was agreed to be reconsidered. Is there objection?

Mr. CAIN. The Senator from Washington makes that request.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, if I have the floor, I ask unanimous consent that I do not lose the floor, and that I may have the floor again at the end of the consideration of this measure. Otherwise I shall object.

Mr. NEELY. A parliamentary inquiry. What is the question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Washington that the vote be reconsidered?

Mr. NEELY. I object.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, there was some confusion in the Chamber, and I tried to get order. I asked what the question was, as it was difficult even to hear the Senator from Tennessee. I agree that the distinguished occupant of the chair asked if there was any objection, and no Senator rose. I am quite satisfied that the present occupant of the chair is within his rights, and did as a presiding officer should have done. But it is unusual, when a Senator rises and asks to present an argument on a conference report, especially when there was so much confusion, that he be denied the right at least to make a few observations. I hope there will be no objection, and that we will reconsider the vote, so that the distinguished Senator from Washington can tell us of the informal agreement he had with the Senator from Tennessee, and make the observations he desired to make prior to the time the conference report was agreed to. That is only fair.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Will the Senator from Ohio yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. KEFAUVER. I do think that under the circumstances the request of the Senator from Washington should be agreed to.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Louder!

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Tennessee raise his voice so that he can be heard?

Mr. KEFAUVER. I do think that under the circumstances the request of the Senator from Washington should be agreed to. The question was asked as to whether there was objection to the adoption of the conference report. Of course I had no objection. I stated to the Senator from Washington that it would take me about 3 minutes to make an explanation of it, and he said he wanted to make some observations in connection with the report. So I think that under the circumstances he should have that opportunity, and I hope the Senator from West Virginia will withdraw his objection.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. I will not withdraw my objection without some assurance that the Senator from Washington will not filibuster more than an hour against the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield to me?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair would like to observe that the Chair has no knowledge of any informal agreements made among Senators on the floor, which are not communicated to him, about any Senator wishing to discuss a conference report or anything else.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may be allowed to yield the floor for 10 minutes for statements on the subject being discussed, and resume the floor at the end of 10 minutes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will recognize the Senator.

Mr. TAFT. That may have the effect of a limitation on the time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Ohio? The Chair hears none.

Does the Senator from West Virginia object to reconsideration of the vote by which the conference report was agreed to?

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Chair please repeat the question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio asked that he might yield 10 minutes while the Senator from Tennessee and the Senator from Washington discussed the conference report.

Mr. NEELY. Does that mean that the Senator from Washington will consume only 10 minutes in opposing the adoption of the conference report?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair, of course, would feel that if the request were agreed to, the Senator from Ohio would be entitled to the floor at the end of 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. NEELY. I object, unless I have some assurance on the point I have raised.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Ohio at the end of 10 minutes, no matter what happens. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, there were two principal points in dispute in the conference between the Senate and the House. One was that the House adopted an amendment, the so-called Westchester amendment, which provided that, as to an apartment where the rent was above $85, the owners did not have to secure consent of 65 percent of the occupants of the apartment in order to turn it into a cooperative. The Senate conferees opposed the amendment, and the House receded.

The Senate bill provided for a continuation of rent control, as provided in the bill, until December 31, 1950, and that thereafter it might be continued for 6 months upon the adoption of a resolution by the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia. The House bill provided for continuation of rent control until January 31, 1951, and for the continuation of rent control after that time for 5 months upon the passage of a joint resolution by the Congress.

The Senate conferees agreed to the House provision in that respect. The reasons were that the conferees felt that, after all, the Congress of the United States acts as city council for the District of Columbia, and that it was Congress rather than the Board of Commissioners which should extend rent control. Moreover, if it were extended by the Commissioners, or if provision were made for it to be extended by the Commissioners, the Rent Control Administrator for the District, Mr. Cogswell, would be faced with a lawsuit as to his authority or jurisdiction to act. Furthermore, it was felt that the appropriation would probably provide money for rent control operations only up to December 31, and that if it were extended by order of the Board of Commissioners there would likely be no money for the Rent Administrator to operate and carry on his functions. The reason, of course, that it has to be on a 7-months basis if Congress is going to have the option of extending rent control for another 5 months, is that that gives us during the month of January to decide whether a joint resolution should be passed.

Those were the two principal matters in dispute, and the conference was unanimous in the conclusion it reached.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington some several days ago served notice on the floor of the Senate that he would request the yeas and nays if and when a District of Columbia rent control conference report was returned to the floor of the Senate. The Senator from Washington has reason to believe that the Senator from West Virginia, who has had available to him the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, has availed himself of an opportunity to read the English language.

Mr. President, the Senator from Washington feels that every Senator on both sides of the aisle believes in and understands fair play and simple justice. If the attitude taken several minutes ago by the Senator from West Virginia prevails, it will mean that a good many thousands of citizens living in this disenfranchised place called the Capital City of America, and in fact the capital of the world, will have no one to speak for them.

The Senator from Washington is a citizen living within the confines of what he thinks is one of the great cities on the face of the earth, and what he had expected and expects to say in opposition to the conference report he will say not alone because he believes in what he intends to say, but because he wishes to present the views of thousands of Americans who have no single opportunity to speak for themselves.

Mr. President, in view of that position, the Senator from Washington wants to find out what Senators think about fair play and simple justice, and he moves, sir, that the action by which the Senate recently, several minutes ago, adopted the conference report be reconsidered.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. After the Chair had asked if there was objection to the reconsideration of the vote by which the conference report was adopted, subject to the limitation fixed by the Senator from Ohio in yielding, the Chair announced that there was no objection. Therefore, the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was reconsidered.

Mr. CAIN. If the Senator from Washington understands correctly, the business then presently pending before the Senate is the conference report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is correct. But at the end of the 10 minutes yielded by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] the Chair will have to recognize the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. CAIN. Indeed, sir. But if at the end of those 10 minutes the question has not been determined, then, after the Senator from Ohio has finished, or at some later time, either this afternoon or tomorrow or some other time, action will be taken on the conference report?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The action of the Senate will have to be taken over again in order to adopt the conference report.

Mr. CAIN. Yes.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Will it not be possible to vote on the adoption of the conference report at the end of 10 minutes, or whatever the time limitation is, if the Senator from Ohio agrees that that may be done?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Of course, this whole thing is a little unusual. While the conference report is a privileged matter, no Senator has a right to take a Senator from the floor who has the floor to consider it. The Senator from Ohio had the floor and he yielded 10 minutes for the purpose of considering the conference report.

Mr. CAIN. May I say, sir, I am slightly surprised by the observation just offered by my friend, the Senator from Tennessee, because it was a little while before the last quorum call that he inquired of me how long the Senator from Washington intended to speak on this subject? The Senator from Washington, as the Senator from Tennessee knows——

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CAIN. Yes, I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. KEFAUVER. I want to say to the Senator from Washington that I want him to have all reasonable time he may desire to discuss the matter. I want him to have a yea-and-nay vote on the adoption of the conference report. I should have spoken up before the Vice President asked if there was objection to the adoption of the conference report. Of course, the Senator from Washington, for that matter, should also have made some move to be recognized.

Mr. CAIN. We both should have done so.

Mr. KEFAUVER. The report was acted upon before we got around to look into the matter and asked for recognition. So I want to do anything that is within my power to see to it that the Senator from Washington can secure reasonable time in which to discuss the conference report, and that then, at the conclusion of the Senator's presentation, we have a yea-and-nay vote, if that is what the Senator from Washington wants, on the question of the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. CAIN. Because the conference report has not had final action taken upon it, the Senator from Washington would only like to say that as rapidly as he can gain the floor, after the Senator from Ohio has concluded his remarks, he will speak to the question for not to exceed a reasonable length of time, and thereafter, if it be the wish of the Senate, a vote may be taken on the report.

Mr. KEFAUVER. I wonder if the Senator from Washington would not find it agreeable to have the vote taken after he finishes speaking at this time, if that is possible under the ruling by the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of 10 minutes during which the Senator from Ohio yielded the floor, has expired.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. TAFT. I yield to the Senator from West Virginia for that purpose.

Mr. NEELY. Has the motion of the Senator from Washington to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to been acted upon?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair held that the motion was unnecessary because when the Chair asked, prior thereto, whether there was any objection to the reconsideration of the vote, subject to the limitation of the Senator from Ohio yielding, the Chair heard none, and it was so announced; so the vote was reconsidered. The conference report is now before the Senate.

THE KOREAN WAR SITUATION

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I desire to speak with reference to the Korean crisis, and at a later time to ask permission to put into the RECORD a number of documents which deal with the basic consideration of that crisis.

Early on Sunday morning, June 25, the Communist-dominated Republic of North Korea launched an unprovoked aggressive military attack on the Republic of Korea, recognized as an independent nation by the United Nations. On the same day the Security Council of the United Nations adopted a resolution noting with grave concern the armed attack upon the Republic of Korea from forces from North Korea, and determining that this action constituted a breach of the peace. The resolution called for the immediate cessation of hostilities, for the withdrawal of the armed forces of North Korea to the thirty-eighth parallel, and for the United Nations Commission on Korea to make informational reports; and called "upon all members to render every assistance to the United Nations in the execution of this resolution and to refrain from giving assistance to the North Korean authorities." This resolution was adopted by a vote of nine members, Russia being absent, and Yugoslavia abstaining.

The attack did not cease, and on Tuesday, June 27, the President issued a statement announcing that he had "ordered United States air and sea forces to give the Korean Government troops cover and support." He also announced that he had ordered the Seventh Fleet to prevent any attack on Formosa, and that he had directed that United States forces in the Philippines be strengthened, and that military assistance to the Philippine Government and the forces of France and the associated states in Indochina be accelerated.

On the same day, last night, the United Nations adopted another resolution definitely recommending "that the members of the United Nations furnish such assistance to the Republic of Korea as may be necessary to repel the armed attack and restore international peace and security in the area." This vote was adopted by seven members of the Security Council; I am informed, I am not absolutely certain, Yugoslavia voting "no," and India and Egypt refraining from voting, Russia still being absent. American air and sea forces have moved into Korea and are partaking in the war against the northern Korea Communists.

No one can deny that a serious crisis exists. The attack was as much a surprise to the public as the attack at Pearl Harbor, although, apparently, the possibility was foreseen by all our intelligence forces, and should have been foreseen by the administration. We are now actually engaged in a de facto war with the northern Korean Communists. That in itself is serious, but nothing compared to the possibility that it might lead to war with Soviet Russia. It is entirely possible that Soviet Russia might move in to help the North Koreans and that the present limited field of conflict might cover the entire civilized world. Without question, the attack of the North Koreans is an outrageous act of aggression against a friendly independent nation, recognized by the United Nations, and which we were instrumental in setting up. The attack in all probability was instigated by Soviet Russia. We can only hope that the leaders of that country have sufficient judgment to know that a world war will result in their own destruction, and will therefore refrain from such acts as might bring about such a tragic conflict.

Mr. President, Korea itself is not vitally important to the United States. It is hard to defend. We have another instance of communism picking out a soft spot where the Communists feel that they can make a substantial advance and can obtain a moral victory without risking war. From the past philosophy and declarations of our leaders, it was not unreasonable for the North Koreans to suppose that they could get away with it and that we would do nothing about it.

The President's statement of policy represents a complete change in the programs and policies heretofore proclaimed by the administration. I have heretofore urged a much more determined attitude against communism in the Far East, and the President's new policy moves in that direction. It seems to me that the time had to come, sooner or later, when we would give definite notice to the Communists that a move beyond a declared line would result in war. That has been the policy which we have adopted in Europe. Whether the President has chosen the right time or the right place to declare this policy may be open to question. He has information which I do not have.

It seems to me that the new policy is adopted at an unfortunate time, and involves the attempt to defend Korea, which is a very difficult military operation indeed. I sincerely hope that our Armed Forces may be successful in Korea. I sincerely hope that the policy thus adopted will not lead to war with Russia. In any event, I believe the general principle of the policy is right, and I see no choice except to back up wholeheartedly and with every available resource the men in our Armed Forces who have been moved into Korea.

If we are going to defend Korea, it seems to me that we should have retained our Armed Forces there and should have given, a year ago, the notice which the President has given today. With such a policy, there never would have been such an attack by the North Koreans. In short, this entirely unfortunate crisis has been produced first, by the outrageous, aggressive attitude of Soviet Russia, and second, by the bungling and inconsistent foreign policy of the administration.

I think it is important to point out, Mr. President, that there has been no pretense of any bipartisan foreign policy about this action. The leaders of the Republican Party in Congress have never been consulted on the Chinese policy or Formosa or Korea or Indochina. Republican members of the Foreign Relations Committee and of the Armed Forces Committee were called to the White House at 10:30 a. m. on June 27, and were informed with regard to the President's statement, but, of course, they had no opportunity to change it or to consult Republican policy committees in either the House of Representatives or the Senate.

I hope at a later time to put into the RECORD a historical statement of the position of various Republican leaders on the general question of China policy, showing that it is very different, indeed, from what the President has heretofore advocated, and that, in general, it is more in accord with what he is now proposing.

Furthermore, it should be noted that there has been no pretense of consulting the Congress. No resolution has ever been introduced asking for the approval of Congress for the use of American forces in Korea. I shall discuss later the question of whether the President is usurping his powers as Commander in Chief. My own opinion is that he is doing so; that there is no legal authority for what he has done. But I may say that if a joint resolution were introduced asking for approval of the use of our Armed Forces already sent to Korea and full support of them in their present venture, I would vote in favor of it.

I have said that the present crisis is produced by the bungling and inconsistent policies of the administration.

First, at Yalta and at Potsdam we agreed to the division of Korea along the thirty-eighth parallel, giving the Russians the northern half of the country, with most of the power and a good deal of the industry, and leaving a southern half which could not support itself, except on an agricultural basis. This was in line with a very foolish policy which paid for Russian assistance against Japan, which we did not need, by presenting Russia with the Kurile Islands, half of Sakhalin Island, the control of Manchuria, and the control of northern Korea. Apparently someone at Yalta saw the thirty-eighth parallel drawn on the map and did not take the trouble to suggest a more sensible line, if Korea had to be divided at all. The agreement was a part of the sympathetic acceptance of communism as a peace-loving philosophy, which has made Russia a threat to the very existence of the world.

Second, the Chinese policy of the administration give basic encouragement to the North Korean aggression. If the United States was not prepared to use its troops and give military assistance to Nationalist China against Chinese Communists, why should it use its troops to defend Nationalist Korea against Korean Communists? That certainly must have seemed a fairly logical conclusion to those who have inaugurated this aggression. The Communists undoubtedly considered that Korea was very much less important than China to the United States, and that they could get away with their grab of Korea, as the Chinese Communists got away with theirs in China. The general policy of doing nothing in China was reaffirmed by Secretary Acheson in a speech before the National Press Club as recently as January 12 of this year.

I shall read now from the New York Herald Tribune's account of that speech:

> Secretary of State Dean Acheson accused the Soviet Union today of planning dismemberment of China. He said the United States could exploit the eventual resentment of Asian peoples over this aggression only by avoiding foolish adventures such as intervention on Formosa.

I might suggest that intervention in Korea from a military standpoint is a good deal more foolish an adventure than intervention on Formosa.

According to the New York Herald Tribune account, Secretary Acheson also said:

> Soviet Russia, using new methods, new skills, and new concepts to cloak imperialist aggression, already had swallowed Outer Mongolia and has nearly completed the absorption of Manchuria, Secretary Acheson said. He charged Moscow with similar designs on the areas of Inner Mongolia and Sinkiang.
> In a major policy speech before the National Press Club, Secretary Acheson said the United States was helpless to prevent this dismemberment. He made it clear that the State Department's future plans for checking the spread of Soviet influence through Asia would depend mainly on the righteous wrath and anger of Chinese and other Asiatics over Russian encroachments.

No doubt the North Korean Communists were quite prepared to take a chance on that "righteous wrath and anger" of the Chinese and perhaps of other Koreans, which might perhaps develop some 10 years from today.

According to the account in the New York Herald Tribune, Secretary Acheson also said:

> For its own security the United States must and shall maintain armed forces in Japan, the Ryukyu Islands (Okinawa) and the Philippines. But no such line of containment could be drawn in southern and southeast Asia, where the United States had no direct responsibilities and only limited opportunities for action.
> He said we would fight if Japan, Okinawa, or the Philippines were attacked.
>
> But we could give no such guaranty to southern and southeast Asia.

In other places he made it equally clear that neither Formosa nor Korea was included behind the line upon which the United States would stand.

Just for my own satisfaction, I read:

He jabbed sarcastically at Senator ROBERT A. TAFT, Republican, of Ohio, who charged in the Senate yesterday that President Truman and Secretary Acheson had forsaken the policy of containing communism by their refusal to save Formosa.

This is quoting Secretary Acheson.

To say that the main motive of American foreign policy was to halt the spread of communism was putting the cart before the horse. The United States was interested in stopping communism chiefly because it had become a subtle instrument of Soviet imperialism.

There is nothing, apparently, against communism.

American intervention on Formosa would obscure the issue * * *. At his White House press conference, President Truman also took a slap at Senator TAFT. Observing that Senator TAFT was entitled to his opinion, President Truman added: "I didn't know he was a military expert, though."

Secretary Acheson made about the same statement to the Foreign Relations Committee at about the same time. To the Foreign Relations Committee he said the United States would have an impregnable defense line in the Far East, without Formosa.

Secretary Acheson was quoted as making the suggestion to the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations yesterday. According to the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], the Secretary said Japan, Okinawa, and the Philippines were the American line of security in the western Pacific, and that with bases on this line the position would be impregnable. He said he would not speak for the Joint Chiefs of Staff, although he gave the impression that he knew something of their views. He strongly reaffirmed President Truman's stand against sending military forces or military advice to the Chinese Nationalists on Formosa, and he said that he alone was responsible for the State Department's confidential guidance message of December 23, telling its officials abroad to prepare for the loss of Formosa to the Communists.

Acheson said that several important problems had come to a head since Congress adjourned 3 months ago. One of them was possible American recognition of Communist China. On this point he reminded Senators that the Communists now control all of China except a few isolated areas, which the Administration saw no need for haste in recognizing. He said American recognition would depend on future events, including assurances that Chinese Communists would protect the safety of American citizens and obey international law. He distinctly stated that beyond the line laid down the United States could not assure the rest of the Far East against attack.

With such a reaffirmation of our Far Eastern policy, is it any wonder that the Korean Communists took us at the word given by the Secretary of State? If we were contemplating the recognition of Communist China, as the Secretary clearly indicated, then certainly they could well think that if they could once occupy Korea, they could look forward to recognition by the United States of a Communist Korea.

Mr. President, our action in Korea itself invited attack. Under the third policy, the policy with regard to Korea, we withdrew our troops from Korea, because it was said that it was impossible to defend Korea on a military basis. We did, however, declare that we would give armed assistance to Korea. The Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949 authorized the President "to furnish military assistance to the Republic of Korea," and, in the second supplemental appropriation act passed October 28, 1949, $10,500,000 was set aside to carry out the provisions of the authorization.

Assistant Secretary Webb testified specifically, both before the House and Senate, that the appropriation was sought for the purpose of helping Koreans to deter external aggression.

As a matter of fact, however, apparently no part of this appropriation, other than $200, has ever been spent to give military assistance to the Republic of Korea. I talked today with an American Army officer who has been in an important position in Korea for 3 years. He told me that we had never kept our promises to the Koreans, either as to economic assistance or as to military assistance, and that, as a matter of fact, except for the arms left behind, we have sent no military assistance to the Koreans.

Furthermore, the policy has been adopted——

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. I noticed that the Senator from Ohio has said that $10,500,000 was allotted for this specific purpose. Is it not true also that the entire $27,600,000 that was allotted to the Philippines, Iran, and Korea could all have been used, together with the $73,000,000 which had been allotted to territory in the vicinity of China; so that all that sum could have been used for this specific purpose?

Mr. TAFT. That is true. There was practically an unlimited amount of money available, and no direct aid for that purpose has been given.

Furthermore, that has been the policy of the administration, contrary to the grounds on which they sought the money, through Secretary Webb's testimony and the request for appropriation. They have actually adopted the policy of only giving aid for internal security. The President's own statement makes that clear. The President's statement says, as will be noted:

In Korea the Government forces, which were armed to prevent border raids and to preserve internal security—

He did not follow the policy which was authorized by Congress. He did not use the money which was given him for the purpose of opposing external aggression.

The policy has been—and it was so testified yesterday before one of the Senate committees by the generals in charge—simply to give them the money to maintain internal security.

Certainly the fact of our policy toward the arming of South Korea was well known to the North Koreans, and certainly it was a policy which invited the attack which has occurred.

Furthermore, our general position about Korea I think was reasonably expressed by the distinguished Senator from Texas in an interview appearing in the May 5 report of the United States News. The Senator was asked:

Question. Do you think the suggestion that we abandon South Korea is going to be seriously considered?

Answer. I am afraid it is going to be seriously considered because I'm afraid it's going to happen, whether we want it or not. I'm for Korea. We're trying to help her—we're appropriating money now to help her. But South Korea is cut right across by this line—north of it are the Communists, with access to the mainland—and Russia is over there on the mainland. So that whenever she takes a notion she can overrun Korea just like she probably will overrun Formosa when she gets ready to do it. I hope not, of course.

Question. But isn't Korea an essential part of the defense strategy?

Answer. No. Of course, any position like that is of some strategic importance. But I don't think it is very greatly important. It has been testified before us that Japan, Okinawa, and the Philippines make the chain of defense which is absolutely necessary. And, of course, any additional territory along in that area would be that much more, but it's not absolutely essential.

So we have the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate of the United States announcing to North Koreans that we are not going to bother with South Korea, they can go ahead, and that we have no policy which in any way involves an effort to prevent their occupation of South Korea.

Mr. President, the attitude of the administration with regard to the defense of Formosa emphasized clearly the policy of nonintervention in Asia beyond the line laid by Secretary Acheson.

The President made that clear in the statement which he isued on January 5. We would do nothing whatever about Formosa. He said:

Similarly, the United States Government will not provide military aid or advice even to Chinese forces on Formosa.

And Secretary Acheson made that doubly clear when he appeared before the committee. I have referred to the fact that he left Formosa outside the line which was defined, with the Philippines, Okinawa, and Japan. Acheson took responsibility for a State Department directive sent to its representatives in the Far East, which directive contained interesting statements of policy. The documents said that false impressions of the island's military value should be countered. This was an instruction to our representatives in the Far East. It says that "Formosa has no special military significance," that it is strictly a Chinese affair. I read:

In areas of insistent demand for United States action, particularly in the United States itself, we (the members of the State Department) should occasionally make clear that seeking United States bases on Formosa, sending troops, supplying arms, dispatching naval units or taking any similar action would (A) Accomplish no material good for China or its Nationalist regime; (B) involve the United States in a long-term venture, producing at best a new area of bristling and stalemate and at worst possible involvement in open warfare.

Loss of the island is widely anticipated and the manner in which civil and military conditions there have deteriorated under the Nationalists adds weight to the expectation.

Mr. Acheson indicated, further, that America might recognize Communist China, but that American recognition would depend on future events, including assurances that the Chinese Communists would protect the safety of American citizens and obey international law. If the administration was contemplating recognition of Communist China after they had seized China, why not hope for recognition of Korean Communists after they had seized Korea?

In his Press Club speech he attacked those of us who suggested that the United States at least ought to prevent Communist attacks on Formosa. I read from the Cleveland Plain Dealer of January 12:

To say that the main motive of American foreign policy was to halt the spread of communism was putting the cart before the horse. The United States was interested in stopping communism chiefly because it had become a subtle instrument of Soviet imperialism.

It is fairly obvious that it is far easier to defend Formosa without becoming involved in war than it is to defend Korea or Indochina without becoming involved in war.

The distinguished chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee [Mr. CONNALLY] also violently attacked my suggestion that we defend Formosa, on the ground that it might result in war, and I think his words on January 9 are well worth reading. He said this:

The Senator from New Jersey did not say a word about defending Korea in his statement in the press. He sided with the Senator from Ohio and former President Mr. Hoover, in wanting to send the Navy. For what purpose? Our Navy has guns, it has airplanes, it has all the armament that goes to make up a great battle machine. Why does the Senator want to send it over there? Is it to play ping-pong? No; he wants to send it over there to fight somebody, he wants to send it over there to kill somebody, he wants to send the Navy over there to fight Communists, and thereby run the risk of plunging this Nation into world war III—world war III, with all its horrors, with all its misery, and all the wreck and ruin which would come to our people if they were provoked in any way to plunge the United States again into a world war.

Certainly the Korean Communists could well think that if that be the attitude of the Chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee of this body, we would not go to war in Korea, which is a far more difficult job and requires a much more strenuous and dangerous operation than would the defense of Formosa.

The distinguished Senator from Texas went on to say:

No, Mr. President, I shall not favor sending a single American boy with a gun in his hand to Formosa to settle a civil war six or seven thousand miles away from his home, in order to appease the political ambitions and the oratorical frothings of Senators in the United States Senate. I am not going to favor that, and I know the American people do not want us to do it.

Certainly, Mr. President, the Senator from Texas has changed his mind, because what we are now doing in Korea, which he approves thoroughly, apparently, is far more dangerous to American lives than would be the mere protection of Formosa by the United States Navy.

I read further:

Mr. President, it is my belief that if we did what certain Senators propose, if we should go into Formosa and occupy it, we would have a liability on our hands instead of an asset. * * *

Mr. President, I want the Senators who are so violent in their views, who are so prolific in their statements, who are so verbose in their oratory about Formosa, to tell us what they would do, what they ask the United States Government to do, what they ask the people to do. I want them to tell us what American boys they want to send to Formosa. I want them to tell the parents of those boys how many American boys they would sent to Formosa to bleed and to die and to be buried in the jungle soil 7,000 miles away.

Mr. President, those were, indeed, eloquent words, but the Senator aparently is now prepared to send American boys in any number to Korea, where we have a far more difficult task than we would have in Formosa.

The Senator from Texas went on to say:

Mr. President, I am not for sending them. I shall fight such a proposal, and I know that the American people will fight it. Therefore I shall propound to every Senator who speaks on this question hereafter the question whether he favors that sort of a policy or whether he does not.

The Senator from Texas has a hard time following the vagaries of the present administration's foreign policies, but he is always faithful to the administration and continues to support any action which the Secretary of State suggests to the President, whatever that action may be.

Mr. President, in my opinion, we should long ago have declared a definite policy. In certain areas we may have to undertake an actual defense with American troops. In other areas we can perhaps undertake only to furnish arms without any agreement on our part to go to war. Everyone agrees that our ultimate aim is the peace of the world. The most dangerous threat to that peace is the kind of wavering foreign policy which this country has maintained.

I welcome the indication of a more definite policy, and I strongly hope that having adopted it the President may maintain it intact.

In the President's statement there is a direct repudiation of the policies of Secretary Acheson declared in January of this year. The use of United States air and sea forces in Korea overrules the policy of American withdrawal and the defense of the Okinawa-Japanese line. The statement that "the occupation of Formosa by Communist forces would be a direct threat to the security of the Pacific area and the United States forces performing their lawful and necessary functions in that area," is directly contrary to the statement of Secretary Acheson that Formosa has no military value and that "we are not going to get involved militarily in any way on the Island of Formosa."

The President now says that the determination of the future status of Formosa must await the restoration of security in the Pacific, a peace settlement with Japan, or consideration by the United Nations. This is a direct overruling of Secretary Acheson's position on January 5 to the effect that it was wholly unnecessary to wait for a treaty with Japan because Formosa's position had been definitely settled by the Cairo and Potsdam agreements.

The furnishing of military assistance to Indochina contradicts Secretary Acheson's statement that all the United States could do in Southeast Asia was to provide advice and assistance when asked, and that the responsibility was not ours.

Mr. President, since I approve of the changes now made in our foreign policy, I approve of the general policies outlined in the President's statement. I feel that we must back up our troops, where they have been sent by the President, with unstinted support. Whether the President chose the right time for his new policy, or the right place, can be discussed in the future. I suggest, however, that any Secretary of State who has been so reversed by his superiors and whose policies have precipitated the danger of war, had better resign and let someone else administer the program to which he was, and perhaps still is, so violently opposed.

[Applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GILLETTE in the chair). The rules of the Senate forbid any demonstration of approval or of disapproval.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, the sad part of it is the fact that it was Senators who were violating the rule.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I have only a few words to say on the legal right of the President's act.

Although I should be willing to vote to approve the President's new policy as a policy, and give support to our forces in Korea, I think it is proper and essential that we discuss at this time the right and power of the President to do what he has done. I hope others will discuss it, because I have not thoroughly investigated the question of the right and the power of the President to do what he has done.

His action unquestionably has brought about a de facto war with the Government of northern Korea. He has brought that war about without consulting Congress and without congressional approval. We have a situation in which in a far distant part of the world one nation has attacked another, and if the President can intervene in Korea without congressional approval, he can go to war in Malaya or Indonesia or Iran or South America. Presidents have at times intervened with American forces to protect American lives or interests, but I do not think it has been claimed that, apart from the United Nations Charter or other treaty obligations, the President has any right to precipitate any open warfare.

It is claimed that the Korean situation is changed by the obligations into which we have entered under the Charter of the United Nations. I think this is true, but I do not think it justifies the President's present action without approval by Congress. I stated when we were discussing the bill to implement the United Nations Charter that I felt that once the American representative on the Security Council voted in favor of using armed forces then the President was entitled to go ahead and use those forces without further action by Congress. I objected to the bill because it gave the President unlimited power to tell our representative on the Security Council how he must vote so that he could commit the country to the use of armed forces without congressional authority. I felt that giving the President the right to tell our representative on the Security Council how he should or should not vote, in effect gave him the right to put the United States into war, provided the other sections of the bill were complied with.

Section 6, however, dealt particularly with the time in which armed forces may be used to support the United Nations. What it says is this:

> The President is authorized to negotiate a special agreement or agreements with the Security Council which shall be subject to the approval of the Congress by appropriate act or joint resolution, providing for the numbers and types of armed forces, their degree of readiness and general location, and the nature of facilities and assistance, including rights of passage, to be made available to the Security Council on its call for the purpose of maintaining international peace and security in accordance with article 43 of said Charter. The President shall not be deemed to require the authorization of the Congress to make available to the Security Council on its call in order to take action under article 42 of said Charter and pursuant to such special agreement or agreements the armed forces, facilities, or assistance provided for therein: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as an authorization to the President by the Congress to make available to the Security Council for such purpose armed forces, facilities, or assistance in addition to the forces, facilities, and assistance provided for in such special agreement or agreements.

So, we have enacted the circumstances under which the President may use armed forces in support of a resolution of the Security Council of the United Nations. The first requisite is that we negotiate an agreement to determine what forces shall be used, and in what quantity, and that the agreement be approved by Congress. No agreement has ever been negotiated, of course, and no agreement has ever been presented to Congress. So far as I can see, and so far as I have studied the matter, I would say that there is no authority to use armed forces in support of the United Nations in the absence of some previous action by Congress dealing with the subject and outlining the general circumstances and the amount of the forces that can be used.

Other questions arise out of the United Nations Charter which I think should be explored. At least, they should be debated by this body.

Article 27 provides that decisions of the Security Council on all matters shall be made by an affirmative vote of seven members, including the concurring votes of the permanent members. The word "veto" was never used in the United Nations Charter. It simply provides that there must be the concurring votes of the five permanent members. In this case Soviet Russia has not voted. They never even appeared at the meeting. It is suggested, I understand, that gradually, under the practice adopted, a veto must be expressed by a negative vote; even though that seems directly contrary to the language of article 27. I am not a student of that subject. I merely suggest that the question, and the fact that Korea is not a member of the United Nations, ought to be explored and debated very fully by the Senate. I do not think there is any immediate rush about it. I merely do not like to have this action go by with the approval of the Senate, if it is what it seems to me, namely, a complete usurpation by the President of authority to use the Armed Forces of this country. If the incident is permitted to go by without protest, at least from this body, we would have finally terminated for all time the right of Congress to declare war, which is granted to Congress alone by the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent that I may have printed in the RECORD at this point the statement the President made yesterday; the statement of the President with regard to Formosa made on January 5, 1950; the statement of the Secretary of State regarding Formosa, released on January 5, 1950; an article from the New York Herald Tribune describing the Secretary of State's speech before the National Press Club; an article from the Washington Post setting out the Secretary of State's opinions expressed before the Foreign Relations Committee as reported by the chairman of the committee; a statement which I made on the subject of Formosa, and one or two other articles.

There being no objection, the statements and articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY THE PRESIDENT, JUNE 27, 1950

In Korea the Government forces, which were armed to prevent border raids and to preserve internal security, were attacked by invading forces from north Korea. The Security Council of the United Nations called upon the invading troops to cease hostilities and to withdraw to the thirty-eighth parallel. This they have not done, but on the contrary have pressed the attack. The Security Council called upon all members of the United Nations to render every assistance to the United Nations in the execution of this resolution. In these circumstances I have ordered United States air and sea forces to give the Korean Government troops cover and support.

The attack upon Korea makes it plain beyond all doubt that communism has passed beyond the use of subversion to conquer independent nations and will now use armed invasion and war. It has defied the orders of the Security Council of the United Nations issued to preserve international peace and security. In these circumstances the occupation of Formosa by Communist forces would be a direct threat to the security of the Pacific area and to United States forces performing their lawful and necessary functions in that area.

Accordingly I have ordered the Seventh Fleet to prevent any attack on Formosa. As a corollary of this action I am calling upon the Chinese Government on Formosa to cease all air and sea operations against the mainland. The Seventh Fleet will see that this is done. The determination of the future status of Formosa must await the restoration of security in the Pacific, a peace settlement with Japan, or consideration by the United Nations.

I have also directed that United States forces in the Philippines be strengthened and that military assistance to the Philippine Government be accelerated.

I have similarly directed acceleration in the furnishing of military assistance to the forces of France and the associated states in Indochina and the dispatch of a military mission to provide close working relations with those forces.

I know that all members of the United Nations will consider carefully the consequences of this latest aggression in Korea in defiance of the Charter of the United Nations. A return to the rule of force in international affairs would have far-reaching effects. The United States will continue to uphold the rule of law.

I have instructed Ambassador Austin, as the representative of the United States to the Security Council, to report these steps to the Council.

STATEMENT BY THE PRESIDENT, JANUARY 5, 1950

The United States Government has always stood for good faith in international relations. Traditional United States policy toward China, as exemplified in the open-door policy, called for international respect for the territorial integrity of China. This principle was recently reaffirmed in the UN General Assembly resolution of December 8, 1949, which, in part, calls on all states—

"To refrain from (a) seeking to acquire spheres of influence or to create foreign controlled regimes within the territory of China; (b) seeking to obtain special rights or privileges within the territory of China."

A specific application of the foregoing principles is seen in the present situation with respect to Formosa. In the Joint Declaration at Cairo on December 1, 1943, the President of the United States, the British Prime Minister and the President of China stated that it was their purpose that territories Japan had stolen from China, such as Formosa, should be restored to the Republic of China. The United States was a signatory to the Potsdam Declaration of July 26, 1945, which declared that the terms of the Cairo Declaration should be carried out. The provisions of this declaration were accepted by Japan at the time of its surrender. In keeping with these declarations, Formosa was surrendered to Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek and for the past 4 years the United States and other Allied Powers have accepted the exercise of Chinese authority over the island.

The United States has no predatory designs on Formosa or on any other Chinese territory. The United States has no desire to obtain special rights or privileges or to establish military bases on Formosa at this time. Nor does it have any intention of utilizing its Armed Forces to interfere in the present situation. The United States Government will not pursue a course which will lead to involvement in the civil conflict in China.

Similarly, the United States Government will not provide military aid or advice to Chinese forces on Formosa. In the view of the United States Government, the resources on Formosa are adequate to enable them to obtain the items which they might consider necessary for the defense of the island. The United States Government proposes to continue under existing legislative authority the present ECA program of economic assistance.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, JANUARY 5, 1950, UNITED STATES POLICY WITH RESPECT TO FORMOSA

(At his press conference today, the Honorable Dean Acheson, Secretary of State, made the following extemporaneous remarks regarding the statement of the President concerning United States policy with respect to Formosa:)

I am having this conference this afternoon at the request and at the direction of the President for the purpose of going into the background of the statement which he made this morning on the subject of Formosa.

I should like to make a few remarks on this subject for the purpose of trying to put it in its setting for you and then we will get down into such details as you want to get into.

Why was the statement made at this particular time? That is a question that arises in all of your minds and I want to recall to you that I have said very often in these meetings that the foreign policy of the United States is determined not merely by what the State Department says, or not even by what the President says and not even by what the Congress says but reflects the sum total of the activities, thoughts and speech of the American people. For the past week or 10 days, this subject of Formosa has become one of the foremost subjects of discussion throughout the country.

The ordinary processes of life in this town of Washington have made their contribution. We have had leak and counterleak, gossip and countergossip. We have had the contributions of distinguished statesmen in the debate. We have had a great deal of talk in the press and on the radio. Much of that is good and much of that is desirable and all of it has to go on to make the United States the democracy that it is. But we slide very easily from discussion to the statement of fact. I have here a distinguished foreign newspaper dated February last (December 30) which announces as a fact that President Truman has decided, et cetera, and et cetera, giving something which President Truman had not decided and had not intended to decide. Therefore, what has occurred is that we have gotten a great deal of confusion in the minds of our own people. We have gotten a great deal of confusion in the minds of foreign people. We have stirred up a good deal of speculation, all of which, if allowed to continue, would be highly prejudicial to the interests of the United States of America. And therefore, it was the President's desire to clarify the situation. He was not primarily concerned in stating anything new and you will find very little which is new in the statement. What he was interested in doing was bringing clarity out of confusion.

That, I think, gives you the background as to why it was necessary to make the statement at the present time. It would have been desirable from our point of view if the whole question of the Far East, and all of the parts of the Far East and of Formosa, which after all is a small part of the great question of the Far East, could have been discussed very fully with members of both parties on the Hill before any statement was made. But one has to choose in this life and it was more important to clarify thinking than it was to go on and have the most desirable of all possible things which is consultation.

Now, getting down to this statement, let's be clear about one or two things. There has been a great deal of amateur military strategy indulged in in regard to this matter of Formosa. The underlying factors in the decision are not in that area. They have to do with the fundamental integrity of the United States and with maintaining in the world the belief that when the United States takes a position it sticks to that position and does not change it by reason of transitory expediency or advantage on its part. If we are going to maintain the free nations of the world as a great unit opposed to the encroachment of communism and other sorts of totalitarian aggression, the world must believe that we stand for principle and that we are honorable and decent people and that we do not put forward words, as propagandists do in other countries, to serve their advantage only to throw them overboard when some change in events makes the position difficult for us.

We believe in integrity in our foreign relations. We believe also in respect of the integrity of other countries. That is a view not held by some other countries. That is a view not held by some other countries with respect to China.

It is important that our position in regard to China should never be subject to the slightest doubt or the slightest question.

Now, what has that position been? In the middle of the war, the President of the United States, the Prime Minister of Great Britain, and the President of China agreed at Cairo that among the areas stolen from China by Japan was Formosa and Formosa should go back to China.

As the President pointed out this morning that statement was incorporated in the Declaration at Potsdam and that Declaration at Potsdam was conveyed to the Japanese as one of the terms of their surrender and was accepted by them and the surrender was made on that basis.

Shortly after that the island of Formosa was turned over to the Chinese in accordance with the declarations made and with the conditions of the surrender.

The Chinese have administered Formosa for 4 years. Neither the United States nor any other ally ever questioned the authority and that occupation. When Formosa was made a province of China nobody raised any lawyers' doubts about that. That was regarded as in accordance with the commitments.

Now, in the opinion of some, the situation is changed. They believe that the forces now in control of the mainland of China, the forces which undoubtedly will soon be recognized by some other countries, are not friendly to us, and, therefore, they want to say, "Well, we have to wait for a treaty." We did not wait for a treaty on Korea. We did not wait for a treaty on the Kuriles. We did not wait for a treaty on the islands over which we have trusteeship.

Whatever may be the legal situation, the United States of America, Mr. Truman said this morning, is not going to quibble on any lawyers' words about the integrity of its position. That is where we stand.

Therefore, the President says, we are not going to use our forces in connection with the present situation in Formosa. We are not going to attempt to seize the island. We are not going to get involved militarily in any way on the island of Formosa. So far as I know, no responsible person in the Government, no military man, has ever believed that we should involve our forces in the island.

I do not believe that is new policy. It would be new policy if we decided to do that. The President is affirming what so far as I know has been the view of his administration and the unquestioned view ever since I have known about it.

The President goes on to say that we do not intend to give military assistance or advice—that is, matériel and military people—to the forces on Formosa, and he says why. He says that there are resources on that island which are adequate to enable those on the island to obtain whatever necessary military supplies they believe they have to have. That is against a background of very considerable gifts on our part at a time when the Government on Formosa was recognized by everybody as the Government of China and was in control of a very large part of China. We gave vast amounts of military equipment to that Government after the war up until 1948. In 1948 another act of Congress was passed, and $125,000,000 of military equipment was turned over.

That is not where the difficulty lies in maintaining the island by the forces on it. It is not that they lack rifles or ammunition or that, if they do have any deficiencies in any of those, they cannot purchase what they need. That is not the trouble. The trouble lies elsewhere, and it is not the function of the United States nor will it or can it attempt to furnish a will to resist and a purpose for resistance to those who must provide for themselves.

That is the background of this statement. The President goes on to say that in regard to economic assistance which we have been furnishing, we will furnish it for as long as the legislation that Congress has passed permits us to. Whether that legislation will be extended or not, I don't wish to prejudice this afternoon. That is a matter for discussion with the leaders and for action by the Congress.

We have been, through the ECA, conducting programs one of which has resulted in all the fertilizer necessary for the spring crop on the island of Formosa. Others have been the purchase of necessary oil for refining on the island and for running the power plants and other things on the island. Other programs have had to do with keeping their power plants and other factories in repair and in operation. Those are going forward.

Now those are the main statements of background which I wish to make. I am informed by Mr. McDermott that some of you wish me to say what, if any, significance is to be attached to the sentence in the next-to-last paragraph of the statement, which says: "The United States has no desire to obtain special rights or privileges or to establish military bases on Formosa at this time." The question is, what does that phrase "at this time" mean. That phrase does not qualify or modify or weaken the fundamental policies stated in this declaration by the President in any respect. It is a recognition of the fact that in the unlikely and unhappy event that our forces might be attacked in the Far East the United States must be completely free to take whatever action in whatever area is necessary for its own security.

BARS ANY FORMOSA VENTURE AS "FOOLISH"—SAYS UNITED STATES WOULD FIGHT TO DEFEND PHILIPPINES OR JAPAN—RETORTS TO TAFT

(By Homer Bigart)

WASHINGTON, January 12.—Secretary of State Dean Acheson accused the Soviet Union today of planning dismemberment of China. He said the United States could exploit the eventual resentment of Asian peoples over this aggression only by avoiding "foolish adventures" such as intervention on Formosa.

Soviet Russia, using new methods, new skills and new concepts to cloak imperialist aggression, already has swallowed Outer Mongolia and has nearly completed the absorption of Manchuria, Secretary Acheson said. He charged Moscow with similar designs on the areas of Inner Mongolia and Sinkiang.

In a major policy speech before the National Press Club Secretary Acheson said the United States was helpless to prevent this dismemberment. He made it clear that the State Department's future plans for checking the spread of Soviet influence through Asia would depend mainly on "the righteous wrath and anger" of Chinese and other Asiatics over Russian encroachments.

MUST DEFEND JAPAN

For its own security the United States must and shall maintain armed forces in Japan, the Ryukyu Islands (Okinawa) and the Philippines, he emphasized. But no such line of containment could be drawn in southern and southeast Asia, where, he said, the United States had no direct responsibilities and only limited opportunities for action.

He said we would fight if Japan, Okinawa, or the Philippines were attacked.

But we could give no such guaranty to southern and southeast Asia, he insisted. There were limits to effective United States assistance and a military guaranty to those areas was "hardly sensible or necessary." Those areas, he said, would have to rely on the United Nations Charter for protection against aggression.

EXPLAINS MOTIVES

The peoples of southern and southeast Asia "are on their own," he said. The United States could not provide these peoples with the will to fight communism nor give them a sense of loyalty toward their present governments; the United States could provide only "the missing components"—economic aid and advice—where such help was requested and where it appeared to have a fighting chance of success, he said.

He gave a Wilsonian explanation of the high moral motives which he said activated American policy and made impossible our intervention in Formosa. He declared: "We must keep our purposes perfectly straight, perfectly pure, and perfectly aboveboard."

He jabbed sarcastically at Senator ROBERT A. TAFT, Republican, of Ohio, who charged in the Senate yesterday that President Truman and Secretary Acheson had forsaken the policy of containing communism by their refusal to save Formosa.

To say that the main motive of American foreign policy was to halt the spread of communism was putting the cart before the horse, Secretary Acheson said. The United States was interested in stopping communism chiefly because it had become a subtle instrument of Soviet imperialism. American intervention on Formosa would obscure the issue and deprive this Nation of a valuable propaganda springboard, he said.

He ridiculed Senator TAFT's assertion that he had "not the slightest doubt that the proper kind of sincere aid to the Nationalist government could have stopped communism in China." He said he had been in the foreign-relations business too long to believe anyone could be so sure of results.

At his White House press conference, President Truman also took a slap at Senator TAFT. Observing that Senator TAFT was entitled to his opinion, President Truman added: "I didn't know he was a military expert, though."

TAFT DECLINES COMMENT

Senator TAFT declined to comment. "I've made my statement and I don't see why I should say any more," he said.

PACIFIC DEFENSE SAFE, ACHESON SAYS—LINE CALLED IMPREGNABLE, FORMOSA NOT NEEDED—SECRETARY DETAILS WORLD POLICIES AT CLOSED SESSION WITH SENATE COMMITTEE

(By Ferdinand Kuhn)

The United States will have an impregnable defense line in the Far East without Formosa, Secretary of State Acheson was quoted as having told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee yesterday.

The Secretary spent more than 4 hours with the committee, vigorously defending administration foreign policy and reviewing current problems in Europe and Asia.

The morning and afternoon meetings took place behind closed doors, but afterward Chairman TOM CONNALLY (Democrat, Texas) gave reporters a point-by-point account of what the Secretary had said, including the confident remark about Pacific defenses.

SILENT ON JOINT CHIEFS' VIEW

According to CONNALLY, the Secretary said Japan, Okinawa, and the Philippines were the American line of security in the western Pacific, and that with bases on this line the position would be impregnable.

But the Secretary firmly resisted every attempt to get him to say what the Joint Chiefs of Staff or Gen. Douglas MacArthur thought of Pacific defenses in general or of Formosa in particular.

He said he would not speak for the Joint Chiefs, although he gave the impression that he knew something of their views. He strongly reaffirmed President Truman's stand against sending military forces or military advice to the Chinese Nationalists on Formosa.

And he said he alone was responsible for the State Department's confidential guidance message of December 23 telling its officials abroad to prepare for the loss of Formosa to the Communists.

KNOWLAND NOT SATISFIED

Five Republicans not on the committee—FERGUSON (Michigan), KNOWLAND (California), SALTONSTALL (Massachusetts), THYE (Minnesota), and TOBEY (New Hampshire)—were present as guest observers without the right to question Acheson or to speak. TOBEY said afterward that the meeting had given him "the most interesting day since I came to Washington."

KNOWLAND, the most persistent critic of the President's policy toward Formosa, said he was still not satisfied, and announced that he would try to have the Joint Chiefs called to testify before the Armed Services Committee, of which he is a member.

But Chairman MILLARD E. TYDINGS (Democrat, Maryland) promptly told reporters he would not call the Joint Chiefs, and if anyone did it, it would have to be the Foreign Relations Committee.

Judging from CONNALLY and other Senators who heard him, Acheson said little that was new, although he did sound the committee for the first time on several important problems that had come to a head since the Congress adjourned 3 months ago.

One of them was possible American recognition of Communist China. On this he reminded the Senators that the Communists now controlled all of China except a few isolated areas, but that the administration saw no need for haste in recognizing them.

DEPENDS ON FUTURE EVENTS

He said American recognition would depend on future events, including assurances that the Chinese Communists would protect the safety of American citizens and obey international law.

STATEMENT BY SENATOR TAFT ON FORMOSA

(Speech in the Senate of the United States, January 11, 1950)

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, shortly before the first of the year, I expressed the opinion in an interview in Ohio that we should hang on to Formosa and prevent Communist occupation of Formosa, even though it involved the use of our Navy. I did not suggest the occupation of Formosa, nor the sending of any army, or even the sending of any Navy. Our Navy is there already, with bases within a short distance, and its ships are between Formosa and China, as anyone knows who read this morning's newspapers. Formosa is a hundred miles from the mainland and there can be no crossing if our Navy makes it clear that ships carrying troops will not be allowed to cross. In fact, probably there would be no such attempt at all if the State Department made it perfectly clear that we do not intend to permit Communist occupation of Formosa.

The basis of our foreign policy in the last 3 or 4 years, if there has been any consistent foreign policy, is to contain communism where it is and prevent any single step of advance, because success in any such step is certain, considering the character of communism, to lead to another step. We, therefore, sent our military aid and our officers into Greece, although it might easily have involved us in war. We have given military aid to Turkey and to Iran. We have stood firm against Communist advance in Korea and provided the Koreans with large amounts of military aid and American advice. In undertaking the airlift in Germany, we certainly risked war with Russia in order to maintain unimpaired our position in Berlin. We are asked to appropriate billions of dollars to arm western Europe, although there is no evidence that at the present time the Russians contemplate any military attack in that area. We have given notice to Russia, by the adoption of the Atlantic Pact, that if its troops advance across the boundaries of Italy or the American or British zones of Austria or Germany or Denmark or Norway, it will find itself at war with us. In our policy of laying down the law, "this far you shall go and no further" we have not hesitated to risk war. There is not the slightest evidence that Russia will go to war with us because we interfere with a crossing to Formosa. It is hardly possible to see how the Chinese Communists by themselves can begin a war against the United States, or why they should do so.

In China for some reason, the State Department has pursued a different policy from that followed throughout the rest of the world. There is not the slightest doubt in my mind that the proper kind of sincere aid to the Nationalist Government a few years ago could have stopped communism in China. But the State Department has been guided by a left-wing group who obviously have wanted to get rid of Chiang, and were willing at least to turn China over to the Communists for that purpose. They have, in effect, defied the general policy in China laid down by Congress. In recent months it has, of course, been very doubtful whether aid to the Nationalist Government could be effective, and no one desires to waste American efforts. But Formosa is a place where a small amount of aid and at very small cost, can prevent the further spread of communism. Such action does not commit us to backing that Nationalist Government in any prolonged war against the Chinese Communists. We can determine later whether we ever wish to recognize the Chinese Communists and what the ultimate disposition of Formosa shall be.

As I understand, the people of Formosa if permitted to vote would probably vote to set up an independent republic of Formosa.

The status of Formosa, therefore, should certainly be kept free for determination until the peace treaty has been written with Japan. Formosa must be legally a part of Japan, for it is difficult to see how the mere declaration of the President at Cairo or Potsdam can change that status without a treaty. One thing is certain, if the Communists take over Formosa, we will have just as much chance of setting up an independent republic of Formosa as we have of returning the western German provinces from Poland to Germany. We know that the Communists will give up nothing which they have occupied. Certainly, we do not desire or intend to undertake an aggressive war to recover land the Communists have occupied. On the other hand if, at the peace conference, it is decided that Formosa should be set up as an independent republic, we certainly have the means to force the Nationalist's surrender of Formosa.

The President's statement on January 5 follows the usual course of setting up a straw man and then proceeding to knock him over. He said:

"The United States has no predatory designs on Formosa or on any other Chinese territory."

No one has suggested that it has.

"The United States has no desire to obtain special rights or privileges or to establish military bases on Formosa at this time."

No one has suggested that it has such a desire.

"The United States Government will not pursue a course which will lead to involvement in the civil conflict in China."

The course suggested will not lead to any such involvement, although, of course, we have involved ourselves in the civil conflict in Greece, in Korea, and elsewhere. When the President, however, says, "Similarly, the United States Government will not provide military aid or advice to Chinese forces on Formosa," he is departing from the policy pursued by us in every other part of the world where the question is whether communism shall be checked. While he states that we will continue the present ECA program of economic assistance, it is quite clear from the past course of the State Department that they have not the slightest intention of giving such assistance in any effective way in such a manner as to assist the occupants of Formosa and defeating a Communist attack.

Those who argue against any action in Formosa are curiously inconsistent. The distinguished Senator from Texas shudders at the possibility of war, although the chance we are taking is 1 in 10 compared to that we are taking in Europe today.

One columnist fears that any action in Formosa different from exactly the action of the State Department would antagonize the leaders of India and Indonesia. His theory seems to be that the way to stop communism in India is to permit it to move into Formosa. That is an exact reproduction of the argument used in support of the policy of Munich. Strange to say, the same columnist is all for extending aid to Burma and Indochina against Communist attack, although it is infinitely less practical and more expensive and difficult than the maintenance of an independent Formosa.

Another columnist argues that if we do not immediately extinguish the Nationalist Government, Red China will not be able to demobilize to carry out economic reconstruction. Therefore, he argues, we should recognize the Communist Government. Whatever may be the arguments for such recognition, it is quite certain that it will in no way tend to reduce the armies of the Chinese Communists. Russia has continued to maintain a huge army, although it is faced with no threat of invasion whatever. I think it is safe to predict that it will be many years before the Chinese Communists reduce their armies by one soldier, because only by those armies can they possibly hope to control China.

The question of the containment of communism is largely a practical one. The only only reason so much heat has been engendered about the Formosan situation is the bitter resentment of the State Department and its pro-Communist allies against any interference with its policy of liquidating the Nationalist Government.

No two men are more familiar with the Far East than General MacArthur and former President Hoover, and both of them are able to see the obvious military and political facts of the situation. Here is a small area of the world where, with no difficulty or expense, we could prevent the spread of communism to an island which might be of great strategic value and whose people desire to be independent.

FALL OF FORMOSA EXPECTED, SAYS UNITED STATES—STATE DEPARTMENT DIRECTIVE CAUTIONS AGAINST FALSE IMPRESSIONS OF ISLAND

TOKYO, Wednesday, January 4.—The United States Department has issued a directive saying that the fall of Formosa is widely anticipated, it was learned today.

The document said false impressions of the island's military value should be countered.

The directive was prepared by the State Department's public affairs policy advisory staff. It was dated December 23.

Addressed to State Department personnel and made available also to officials of some other Government departments, the directive said:

"1. There are pro-Chinese Nationalists, chiefly in the United States, who consider Formosa a redoubt in which the Chinese Nationalist Government could survive, and who tend to create an impression that the United States is delinquent if it fails to save Formosa. This is due largely to a mistaken popular conception of its strategic importance to United States defense in the Pacific.

"2. There has been an insistent demand from a few sources for military action by the United States but it has not assumed significant proportions.

"3. The loss of Formosa would threaten loss of United States prestige to the extent to which we have become committed in the public mind to hold it. The loss also would threaten to damage the morale of other countries which fear the further advance of communism.

"4. Formosa has no special military significance. It is a strictly Chinese affair.

"5. In areas of insistent demand for United States action, particularly in the United States itself, we should occasionally make clear that seeking United States bases on Formosa, sending troops, supplying arms, dispatching naval units or taking any similar action would (A) Accomplish no material good for China or its Nationalist regime; (B) Involve the United States in a long-term venture, producing at best a new area of bristling stalemate and at worst possible involvement in open warfare."

TALK OF UNITED STATES-JAPAN PACT

This document reached here at a time when it had become known that Gen. Douglas MacArthur believed that Formosa should be held and at a moment when he was speeding up the job of making Okinawa, northeast of Formosa, a real United States defense bastion.

It came at a time, too, when there was increasing talk of a Japanese-United States alliance under which the United States would pledge to defend these islands against attack.

"Loss of the island is widely anticipated and the manner in which civil and military conditions there have deteriorated under the Nationalists adds weight to the expectation," the State Department document said.

Formosa is politically, geographically and strategically part of China, the document says, adding that the final status of the island has not been settled but it has been earmarked for China.

COUNTER FALSE IMPRESSIONS

All available material should be used, the document continues, to counter false impressions that retention of the island would save the Nationalist Government and that its loss would seriously damage the interests of either the United States or of other countries opposing communism.

"Formosa has no special military significance," the document says, adding that it is only about 100 miles off the China coast, that other potential objects of Communist aggression are closer, and that "China has never been a sea power and the island is of no special strategic advantage to the Chinese Communist armed forces."

Those receiving the document were cautioned to avoid speculation that would show undue concern with whether the Nationalists can hold the island, references which would indicate important strategic significance or that the island is a political entity and statements that Formosa's final status is still to be determined by the Japanese peace treaty.

UNITED STATES FAR EAST POLICY REVERSED BY TRUMAN'S ORDER FOR ACTION—STAND OF HERBERT HOOVER, MACARTHUR, TAFT, AND OTHER REPUBLICAN SENATORS SEEN AS UPHELD

(By Bert Andrews)

WASHINGTON, June 27.—President Truman's strong stand regarding Korea and Formosa marks an almost complete reversal of the position he and Secretary of State Dean Acheson held on these Far Eastern matters just 6 months ago.

It almost amounts to vindication of the attitude taken at that time by General of the Army Douglas MacArthur, former President Herbert Hoover and four Republican Senators, Robert A. Taft, of Ohio, H. Alexander Smith, of New Jersey; Homer Ferguson, of Michigan; and William F. Knowland, of California.

There was complete acceptance by Republicans today that the Communist-backed aggression against the Republic of Korea by the forces of northern Korea has forced the change in strategy and so there was no tendency to raise cries of, "We told you so."

Nevertheless, the record is there in official statements from the President, Secretary Acheson, Mr. Hoover and the Senators; in comments unquestionably inspired by General MacArthur, and in newspaper accounts.

SEE MACARTHUR PREVAILING

It is a record which shows that Secretary Acheson, who believed then that the holding of Formosa by Nationalist China was not vital to the defense of the United States, prevailed upon the President to accept his views over those who held to the contrary.

It is a record—and it is supplemented by quite recent developments—which shows that the opinions of the most contrary man of all, General MacArthur, have finally prevailed.

A capsule illustration of how great the reversal is—an illustration which will be followed by chronological details—is supplied by:

President Truman, on January 5, when Republicans were shouting for more help for Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek and Formosa: "The United States Government will not provide military aid or advice to Chinese forces on Formosa. The resources on Formosa are adequate to enable them—the Chinese forces—to obtain the items which they might consider necessary for the defense of the island."

Secretary Acheson, on January 5: "We are not going to get involved militarily in any way on the island of Formosa. So far as I know, no responsible person in the Government, no military man has ever believed that we should involve our forces in the island."

President Truman, in his statement today: "The occupation of Formosa by Communist forces would be a direct threat to the security of the Pacific area and to the United States forces performing their lawful and necessary functions in that area. Accordingly I have ordered the Seventh Fleet to prevent any attack on Formosa."

THE CHRONOLOGY

The complete chronology, bringing Messrs. Truman, Hoover, MacArthur, Acheson, Taft, Ferguson, Smith, and Knowland, follows:

December 1, 1949.—Senator Smith returned from a trip to the Orient. He had talked in Tokyo with General MacArthur. It's an open secret that the things he said after he came back were based on that talk. He said it was "unthinkable" that Formosa should be lost to the Chinese Communists. He said Communist drives made possible by a Formosa base might eventually push America's defense back to the Marianas, the Hawaiian Islands—and the Pacific coast.

December 1, 1949.—On the very same day, after reading Senator SMITH's views, "authoritative sources"—in this case State Department officials—told reporters the Department's view was that Formosa was of no strategic value to the United States and that the Department was prepared to see the island fall to the Communists.

December 1, 1949.—Secretary of Defense Louis Johnson sent two men out to see General MacArthur. They were Tracy S. Voorhees, Under Secretary of the Army, and Lt. Gen. Alfred M. Gruenther, Army Deputy Chief of Staff for Operations. They talked with General MacArthur and got an earful.

JOINT CHIEFS HEAR REPORTS

December 22, 1949.—An all-day meeting of the Joint Chiefs of Staff was held to hear the Voorhees-Gruenther information and other reports. They decided to send a military mission to Formosa.

December 23, 1949.—The State Department, although told of the Joint Chiefs' decision, notified its attachés that Formosa wasn't considered important strategically and that the attachés ought to begin to publicize that view so the United States wouldn't lose prestige if Formosa fell. (Secret notification.)

December 23, 1949.—On that very same day Chinese Ambassador V. K. Wellington Koo called at the State Department to make a formal request for military, political, and economic advisers for Formosa. (Kept secret, too.)

December 28, 1949.—President Truman and his top advisers began to worry lest Senator SMITH and other critics accuse them in the Congress about to reconvene of having "no policy" on Asia. So the National Security Council was ordered to meet so a positive policy could be prepared for presentation to Congress. The best information this reporter could get was that Secretary Johnson had heard that Secretary Acheson had already sold President Truman on his arguments and saw no reason to be present. Anyway, Secretary Johnson wasn't present. President Truman decided in favor of Secretary Acheson's views.

January 2.—Mr. Hoover, Senator Knowland and Senator Taft said the United States should use its Navy if necessary to protect Formosa and "raise a wall against communism in the Pacific."

TELLS "HANDS-OFF" POLICY

January 5.—President Truman announced the "hands-off" policy on Formosa, Secretary Acheson gave the details.

January 6.—Senator FERGUSON said, "The President and Mr. Acheson have kicked bipartisan foreign policy out the window."

January 11.—Senator TAFT repeated, in the Senate, his argument that the Navy ought to be sent to protect Formosa.

January 12.—President Truman said, "Senator TAFT is entitled to his opinion but I didn't know he was a military expert."

The Communist-backed invasion of the Republic of Korea has made a difference.

And Messrs. MacArthur, Hoover, Taft, Knowland, Ferguson, and Smith can have that we-told-you-so expression, even though they don't use the words.

AUSTIN'S SPEECH, RESOLUTION

That resolution is as follows:

The Security Council—

"Having determined that the armed attack upon the Republic of Korea by forces from North Korea constitutes a breach of the peace,

"Having called for an immediate cessation of hostilities, and

"Having called upon the authorities of North Korea to withdraw forthwith their armed forces to the thirty-eighth parallel, and

"Having noted from the report of the United Nations Commission for Korea that the authorities in North Korea have neither ceased hostilities nor withdrawn their armed forces to the thirty-eighth parallel, and that urgent military measures are requested to restore international peace and security, and

"Having noted the appeal from the Republic of Korea to the United Nations for immediate and effective steps to secure peace and security,

"Recommends that the members of the United Nations furnish such assistance to the Republic of Korea as may be necessary to repel the armed attack and restore international peace and security in the area."

This is the logical consequence of the resolution concerning the complaint of aggression upon the Republic of Korea adopted at the 473d meeting of the Security Council on June 25, 1950, and the subsequent events recited in the preamble of this resolution. That resolution of June 25 called upon all members to render every assistance to the United Nations in the execution of this resolution, and to refrain from giving assistance to the North Korean authorities. This new resolution is the logical next step. Its significance is affected by the violation of the former resolution, the continuation of aggression, and the urgent military measures required.

I wish now to read a statement which the President of the United States made today on this critical situation.

LAKE SUCCESS, June 25.—Following is the text of the resolution adopted today by the United Nations Security Council:

"THE SECURITY COUNCIL

"Recalling the finding of the General Assembly in its resolution of October 21, 1949, that the Government of the Republic of Korea is a lawfully established government 'having effective control and jurisdiction over that part of Korea where the United Nations Temporary Commission on Korea was able to observe and consult and in which the great majority of the people of Korea reside; and that this Government is based on elections which were a valid expression of the free will of the electorate of that part of Korea and which were observed by the Temporary Commission; and that this is the only such Government in Korea';

"Mindful of the concern expressed by the General Assembly in its resolutions of December 12, 1948, and October 21, 1949 of the consequences which might follow unless member states refrained from acts derogatory to the results sought to be achieved by the United Nations in bringing about the complete independence and unity of Korea; and the concern expressed that the situation described by the United Nations Commission on Korea in its report menaces the safety and well-being of the Republic of Korea and of the people of Korea and might lead to open military conflict there;

"Noting with grave concern the armed attack upon the Republic of Korea by forces from North Korea,

"Determines that this action constitutes a breach of the peace,

"1. Calls for the immediate cessation of hostilities and

"Calls upon the authorities of North Korea to withdraw forthwith their armed forces to the thirty-eighth parallel.

"2. Requests the United Nations Commission on Korea (a) to communicate its fully considered recommendations on the situation with the least possible delay; (b) to observe the withdrawal of the North Korean forces to the thirty-eighth parallel; and (c) to keep the Security Council informed on the execution of this resolution.

"3. Calls upon all members to render every assistance to the United Nations in the execution of this resolution and to refrain from giving assistance to the North Korean authorities."

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I had not expected to speak on this matter today. However, in view of the remarks made by the able Senator from Ohio, I am constrained to speak briefly in reply to some of the points made by the Senator.

Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio lays all of the responsibility for what is going on in Korea at the present time on the President of the United States. I am sure that the people of Russia will be very happy to learn of that fact when the Senator's statement is broadcast throughout Russia. The Senator from Ohio contends definitely that the President of the United States has no authority whatever for doing what he has done in connection with sending the Air Force and the Navy as a cover for the Korean troops in South Korea, or for sending the fleet to Formosa to protect our security and sovereignity in that section of the world.

Mr. President, some people really believe in the United Nations as an instrument of peace, as an instrumentality for the creation of peace in this world. There are other people who do not believe in the United Nations, and never have. I desire to repeat a part of the statement by the President of the United States which was read into the RECORD yesterday:

In Korea the Government forces, which were armed to prevent border raids and to preserve internal security, were attacked by invading forces from North Korea. The Security Council of the United Nations called upon the invading troops to cease hostilities and to withdraw to the thirty-eighth parallel. This they have not done, but on the contrary have pressed the attack. The Security Council called upon all members of the United Nations to render every assistance to the United Nations in the execution of this resolution.

I repeat what the Security Council said at Lake Success:

The Security Council called upon all members of the United Nations to render every assistance to the United Nations in the execution of this resolution.

Mr. President, apparently the members of the Security Council, meeting at Lake Success, who have a fair understanding, I take it, as to what the United Nations Charter means, believed that at least they had the power to pass a resolution calling upon the members of the United Nations to render every assistance to the United Nations in the execution of this resolution.

What does that mean? "The execution of this resolution" means to see to it that the troops which are now representing the Government of northern Korea be driven back to the thirty-eighth parallel, as is set forth in the statement of the President, and as was agreed upon when Korea was partitioned some time ago.

Mr. President, under the resolution and under the statement made by the members of the Security Council, in my humble opinion the President had the right to do what he has done. Such a resolution cannot be enforced unless some military action is taken.

Not only that, but even assuming that the President does not have any jurisdiction under the United Nations Charter to do what he did, as is contended by the Senator from Ohio, I should like to call the attention of the Senate and of the country to what our Nation has done in the past. Able and sincere Senators have argued, over the course of history, about how far the President of the United States can go as Commander in Chief of the military forces of this country. I call attention to the fact that those who discuss that matter, and those who follow the argument made by the Senator from Ohio today, apparently have forgotten the course this country pursued.

I read now from remarks I made in the Senate on November 4, 1941:

Those who make that argument apparently have forgotten the course this country has pursued when international pirates have destroyed American lives and property in the past. The Barbary wars yield an interesting instance in this respect. The ruler of Tripoli, having declared war against the United States on March 14, 1801, started attacking American vesels. A naval force dispatched to the Mediterranean in anticipation of the event had received orders to blockade Tripoli and destroy her shipping. There was no declaration of war on our part when that was done. This the Navy proceeded to do. The interesting feature in that case is that the nature of the fleet's task was limited by the belief of President Jefferson that in the absence of congressional authorization "measures of defense" only were in order. These measures of defense, to be undertaken without congressional authority and laid down by Jefferson at that time, went rather far. The instructions regarding them included the following—

This is what Thomas Jefferson as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, advised the Navy to do at that time—

You will then distribute your forces in such a manner as your judgment shall direct, so as to best protect our commerce and chastise their insolence by sinking, burning, or destroying their ships and vessels wherever you shall find them.

Mr. President, that was the order given by President Thomas Jefferson to our fleet in 1801, when Congress had not declared war. I read further:

That was the order given by Jefferson to the fleet which sailed across the ocean a long, long time ago to subdue the pirates around Tripoli. The expedition against Tripoli was only the first of many incidents in which United States forces were used, not only to protect American lives and citizens on the high seas, but also on foreign soil and in foreign territorial waters.

Mr. President, I undertake to say that with world conditions as they exist at this very moment, with communism creeping into every nook and corner where it can possibly go, with the unusual situation as it exists today, if the President of the United States believes, as I do, and as I think every other Senator believes, that the safety, the security, and the honor of this country are involved as a result of what is going on in the Orient, he had a right to move as he did with the powers he had under the Constitution as Commander in Chief of the military forces. I read further from my former remarks:

These steps were taken under the legal axiom that whoever ill-treats a citizen indirectly injures the state which must protect that citizen. In other words, the law of self-preservation applies to nations as well as to men, and that rule has been carried out on more than 100 occasions during the last 115 years. From the Aegean Islands to Manchuria, and from Mexico to the Falklands, our American forces have been sent to and landed on foreign soil for the protection of the lives and preservation of property of the American citizens. And while actually or potentially involving hostilities, these were not considered acts of war, were not authorized by Congress, and were undertaken by Executive authority alone. One of the most interesting examples of how far that Executive authority has gone in the past has to do with the Boxer rising in 1900.

The Chinese had a society known as the Righteous Harmonious Fists, commonly called the Boxers. After a series of their flagrant and lawless acts against foreign residents, covering a period of years, this Nation, along with others, sent soldiers to China.

The President at that time called out, altogether, 15,000 American troops, upon his own initiative, without any authorization of Congress at the time, and out of the 15,000 troops who were called out to be sent to China to subdue those who were attacking us and our property there, some 5,000 soldiers reached China, 2,500 of them participated in the Battle of Peking, several were killed, and many were wounded. That was in 1900, under a Republican President of the United States.

Notwithstanding this outstanding example of the Commander in Chief using his constitutional powers to protect American rights, we find those who have the audacity to seriously contend that President Truman is devoid of such powers.

It is bluntly declared here on the floor of the Senate that the President of the United States has no right to send troops to Korea if the security and safety of this country are threatened as a result of the illegal Communist thrust in that section of the world.

I read further:

After this Nation has for a hundred years upheld the actions of the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy in sending troops to protect Americans and their properties upon the high seas, or in these foreign lands, who can say that in this hour of peril we are not warranted, both from the standpoint of tradition and the facts before us, in enacting legislation that will protect the honor and dignity of this Republic?

Mr. President, I have been quoting from a speech the senior Senator from Illinois made on November 4, 1941, when the question of the modification of the Neutrality Act was before the Senate.

Every Senator who knows anything about history, every Senator who knows anything about the past, must realize, if he is honest with himself, that the act performed by the President of the United States was within his right, and within the traditions and precedents which have been established more than a hundred times in the history of this Republic.

For the Senator from Ohio to charge that the President of the United States is responsible for a de facto war does not reflect that sense of justice and fairness to which I have always thought the Senator was entitled.

Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio continually talks about the foreign policy of this country, and what should have been done. I agree with one thing the President of the United States did say, which the Senator from Ohio read a moment ago, namely, that the Senator from Ohio is no military expert. I emphatically agree with him about that.

Mr. President, notwithstanding the seriousness of the hour, irrespective of the crisis before us, we hear the Senator from Ohio tell the country and the world that the President of the United States is responsible for the start of this de facto war. What a travesty upon justice. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio grudgingly goes along with the general policy at the present time, but proceeds to charge bungling and inconsistency in the foreign policy, as though he had the remedy and panacea for everything. I am certain the country is sorely grieved because the Senator from Ohio has not been the chief architect of our foreign policy.

Oh, it is wonderful to have hindsight. It is wonderful to observe and comment on mistakes which have been made. I presume no one will deny that some mistakes have been made, as mistakes are made in every walk of life. No man is infallible. There is no Senator here who does not make mistakes occasionally. There is no government which does not make mistakes. But the Senator at this hour tells the country what has been wrong for the past few years as much as to say, "If you had just given me the opportunity, had I been in that spot, I would have done it differently." I would have produced the right answer. No one would have ever objected to my theory of foreign policy.

Senators continue to talk about Yalta. Senators continue to talk about Potsdam. Mr. President, they can talk about Yalta all they want to. Sometime they ought to ask the military authorities about Yalta. They ought to ask who was really responsible for the Yalta agreement, and why. Everyone knows that when we made the agreement at Yalta Russia agreed to enter the war against Japan. The agreement was made with the knowledge that our military advisers had said, "If we can get Russia into this Japanese war we will save 100,000 lives of American boys." That is what they said. That is the answer to those who constantly condemn the Yalta agreement. Yet, Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio would have the country believe that it was all wrong to do what we did. But military leaders—and I know whereof I speak—recommended the agreement in order to preserve and save the lives of American boys.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I will yield in a moment. I have not quite finished yet.

Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio complains about our withdrawal of troops from Korea. He said it was a great mistake to have withdrawn our troops at the time they were withdrawn; that if we had left them in Korea we would not have the situation which exists today. Another excellent statement of hindsight.

Mr. President, I refer to Senate document No. 123, under the caption "A Decade of American Foreign Policy." At page 678 I read paragraph 118, as follows:

United States position on withdrawal of occupation forces from Korea, September 20, 1948:

It has been the consistent view of this Government that the best interests of the Korean people would be served by the withdrawal of all occupying forces from Korea at the earliest practicable date. This same view was embodied in the United Nations General Assembly resolution of November 14, 1947, in which provision was made for such withdrawal as soon as practicable after the establishment of the Korean Government which it was the intention of that resolution to bring into being. Had the Soviet Union cooperated in carrying out the provisions of the resolution of November 14, 1947, the question of troop withdrawal from Korea would doubtless have been already resolved.

The United States Government regards the question of the withdrawal of occupying forces as but one facet of the entire question of the unity and independence of Korea. The General Assembly of the United Nations has taken cognizance of this larger question as evidenced by the resolution referred to above, and it may be expected to give further consideration to the matter at its forthcoming meeting.

In other words, the United Nations organization sincerely believed that it was in the interest of peace to do exactly what we did there. It was under the resolution which was adopted by UN that we gave the Korean people freedom and independence, and saw to it that free elections were held in the southern part of Korea.

Mr. President, this is a fateful hour in the history of the American Republic. Men may dig up all the presumed and supposed mistakes they want to dig up if they so desire. They can continue to do so at a time when there should be unity in this country, instead of attempt being made to divide the people of America. At this very moment, Mr. President, when our fleet is on its way to Formosa, when our troops are at this very time in Korea—at least the air and some of the ships near by are there—it seems to me that we ought to close ranks, and forget what happened at Potsdam and Yalta, because digging up those old sores will get nowhere so far as giving the American people the kind of unity they ought to have. The only thing such action does is to help Mr. Stalin. Obviously, it will lift the morale of troops in Northern Korea. Every time a speech of this kind is made under such extraordinary circumstances, Mr. President, I undertake to say that we are playing directly into the hands of the Communists, the very people we ought to be fighting tooth and nail, instead of fighting among ourselves.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. LUCAS subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to place at the close of my remarks earlier today the following statement:

NEW YORK.—Former President Hoover said today the United States must have "unity of purpose and action" in the Korean situation.

"When the United States draws the sword, there is only one course for our people," he said. "Like others, I have opposed many of our foreign policies, but now is not the time to argue origins, mistakes, responsibilities, or consequences. There is only one way out of such situations as this: That is to win. To win, we must have unity of purpose and action."

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey obtained the floor.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Jersey yield to me for a question?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. FLANDERS. When I came in, Mr. President, if I understood the Senator from Illinois correctly, he was making the plea that the President had a right to intervene with our armed forces in the situation in Korea, on the basis that the lives of Americans were involved. Is that the point the Senator made?

Mr. LUCAS. I made two points. I said the President had a right to intervene under the resolutions adopted by the Security Council of the United Nations, and I also said he had a right to intervene if he honestly believed that the spread of communism as the result of what was done in Northern Korea affected in any way the safety and the security of the United States or any of its possessions as well as the Philippines, which we are in duty bound to protect.

Mr. FLANDERS. That goes rather beyond what I had understood the Senator was saying. My lack of comprehension was due to the fact that I came into the Senate Chamber in the middle of his speech.

About 2 hours ago on this floor I expressed the conviction that the President was within his rights in intervening in Korea, but that he would not be within his rights in pursuing the Korean forces or attacking Korean positions in any way north of the thirty-eighth parallel, which for some reason or other divides Korea.

Mr. LUCAS. I agree with the Senator from Vermont. I wholeheartedly agree with him on that point. I undertake to say that in no circumstances can the United States of America be charged with being the aggressor so long as we stay within the boundaries the Senator from Vermont has just outlined.

Mr. FLANDERS. I am glad to have the Senator from Illinois say that. I agree with him completely.

Mr. CONNALLY addressed the Chair.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Does the Senator really contend——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] has the floor.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Jersey yield for a question?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I wish to quote from the resolution adopted by the Security Council yesterday, in addition to the one it adopted on Sunday. It is only a very brief paragraph:

The Security Council recommends that the members of the United Nations furnish such assistance to the Republic of Korea as may be necessary to repel the armed attack and to restore international peace and security in the area.

Of course, that is South Korea.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, I want to address myself to the unfinished business——

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a one-half-minute observation?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, I might say that I have been asked by a number of Senators to yield for various purposes, and I have been trying to secure the floor. I hesitate to show any preference. I would feel that other Senators who have asked me to yield should be yielded to, if I now yield for an observation. I shall be glad to yield for a question, but I shall not yield beyond that.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Then I will put it in the form of a question, although, perhaps, the Senator from New Jersey cannot answer it.

A great deal has been said here today about hindsight. I wonder whether the Senator recalls that prior to World War II, many of those who now are criticizing the administration's policy, at that time, when some of us were trying to fortify Guam and many other places in the Pacific, believed that the Japanese were our friends, and did not at all anticipate any attack at Pearl Harbor. Does the Senator recall that? Many of them are still in the Senate or in the House of Representatives.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Of course, I was not here at that time; but I have been told that there was considerable difference of opinion about Guam.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I wonder whether the Senator thinks that hindsight may depend upon the year in which events happened.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I suppose that is a generalization which may be true.

AMENDMENT OF MUTUAL DEFENSE ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1949

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3809) to amend the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, I address myself to the unfinished business, Senate bill 3809, to amend the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949.

I may say that before the Korean crisis arose, it was my intention to address myself to the subject of the military assistance pact and program, relating that program to our over-all foreign policy and its impact on the various parts of the world.

Since the Korean crisis has arisen, it has seemed to me more appropriate to relate the military assistance program to that crisis and to show the vital necessity of our passing promptly this important measure.

Mr. President, I may say that my position with regard to foreign policy in the Far East has been well known. It is well known that I have been in sharp disagreement with the administration's policy there. Therefore, there is no necessity for that subject to be reviewed. All I wish to say in that connection is that I welcome from the bottom of my heart the decision by the President and the State Department which the President announced yesterday, because it seems to me that it is in line with the thoughts entertained by many of us who had been to the Far East and who felt that decisive action was necessary. That is all I shall say at this moment in regard to that particular matter, because I wish to relate, if I can, the military assistance pact to the necessities in Korea.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Regardless of what has happened in the past and the Senator's divergence of views, let me ask the Senator whether he regards it as now being of the highest importance that the country stand behind the President in the position he has taken in the last few days.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Unquestionably my answer is "Yes."

Mr. CONNALLY. Does not the country want to know who is against the President and who is with the President—not the President personally, but as President of the United States?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. The position the President stated yesterday has my wholehearted support. I only hope and pray that the administration will follow through on the principles therein enunciated. I shall express myself further on that as I proceed.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does the Senator regard it as helpful to the country to have critics and carpists say that the President is wrong about this and about that and about the other thing, but then in a half-hearted way to say, "I am in favor of what the President has decided to do?"

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Let me say to the distinguished Senator that I do not propose to be put in the position of criticizing my distinguished colleague, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] for his speech, because many of the things the Senator from Ohio has said are sound.

But I say thank God the administration has changed its policy and has reached an aggressive policy regarding the Far East. That is my position, and I propose to show how that policy is related to the military-assistance bill.

Mr. CONNALLY. Very well.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me before he proceeds further with his remarks?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I am glad to do so.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to ask whether it is true that the Korean question and the entire Pacific question are one thing, whereas the pending bill—the MAP bill, which is a long-range military-assistance-program bill, primarily for Europe—is quite another thing.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I reply to the Senator that the entire world situation is so closely related that we have to deal with it as a whole; and we cannot have one policy in one corner of the world and another policy in another corner of the world. That is why I welcome having the President bring our entire policy into line by announcing his far-eastern policy in his statement of yesterday.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. The new policy of the President, which the Senator welcomes, is a complete repudiation, is it not, of the policy of the State Department in the Pacific?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. As I said a while ago, my position regarding the policy in the Pacific is well known. But I am glad to have the administration now adopt the policy I have advocated for several months.

Mr. WHERRY. Is not that policy entirely different from the policy of the State Department during the past several months? Is not that true?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Yes; I have understood that the State Department's policy has been entirely different from mine in that respect.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Yes, although perhaps I shall answer the questions in the course of my remarks.

Mr. WHERRY. I do not think so, because I have not been able to obtain an answer up to now, either from the State Department or from various discussions, including discussion this morning. I should like to ask this question about the European policy—going now from the Pacific to the Atlantic: Does not the Senator from New Jersey feel that it is absolutely necessary for the protection of the European countries and for our own defense that military assistance be granted to Germany and to Spain?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I say to the distinguished Senator that under the language of the pending bill, in case an emergency arises, certainly it might be possible to give military aid to Spain. The question of giving military aid to Germany would depend somewhat on the attitude of our allies in Europe and on whether the Germans can be brought into the western European group of nations. I think military aid could be given, and I think Germany could be incorporated into that group in case there were a crisis there. I have felt that way right along; I have always favored that.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to obtain, if I can, the opinion of the senior Senator from New Jersey about this matter. He is the next to the ranking Republican member of the Foreign Relations Committee, and he has been around the world and has the information. I submit to him that the one place to stop communism, if we are to stop the extension of communism, certainly is in the Ruhr, and certainly involves the German people.

Inasmuch as at long last the policy in the Pacific has been reversed, I ask the Senator whether it is time for us to reverse our policy with European nations and provide assistance to the German people and to the country of Spain.

I should like to obtain any reasonable answer to that question, because I feel that MAP, which is a military-assistance program, should provide the military assistance that we need to provide without any delay to Spain.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. It seems to me that under the language of the pending measure, in the case of a crisis developing in any place, the President could use the funds provided by this measure for that purpose. That was the purpose of section 408, and its language is broad.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. It does not mean that we have a policy of aiding those countries, but it means that they may be eligible.

Mr. President, a few days ago—last Friday, I believe—the distinguished Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] presented in detail the measure which is now before the Senate, and which we are supporting. He made a very fine presentation. Coupled with the committee report, it brings out very clearly the issues in this situation and what we are asking for by means of this measure.

Therefore, I wish to show that what we have in this measure is what we need in the event of a crisis, such as the one in Korea, or a crisis in any other spot in the world where a similar incident might occur. We need to bolster, in this case, the Korean defenses, their own defenses; and this bill provides for it. We need to strengthen defenses elsewhere—not only in Europe, but in other areas in the Far East, where other possible surprise attacks might be made; and this bill provides for it.

We need to pursue steadily, and with calmness, our long-range, strategic plans. We feel that this bill provides for that.

Let me indicate quickly and briefly the coverage of the bill. It is divided, as is well known, into titles, in which are treated the different areas of the world.

In the first place, there is title I, dealing with the North Atlantic Treaty countries.

Title II deals with the Middle East, with Greece, Turkey, and Iran.

Title III deals with the Far East, and provides funds for the Republic of Korea and the Republic of the Philippines, and in addition, a $75,000,000 flexible fund to take care of other countries in the area of China and in the Far East, which could include aid for Korea, Formosa, Indo-China, and Malaya, if we want to extend aid there, and also the Philippines. So we have here an over-all bill, and if we add to the specific areas that are defined in the bill, the wider provisions on section 408, which has some new amendments, we can cover European countries, to which the Senator from Nebraska has referred, where a crisis might arise and where we might find that our security or the security of the North Atlantic group of countries was in jeopardy.

Then, further, in the next section, we provide for selling arms on a cash-and-credit basis to other countries of the world. Under this section we can deal with any of the countries covered by the bill, countries in regional arrangements such as the Rio Pact; and, furthermore, other countries in other parts of the world where munitions might be sold for self-defense; but in no case for aggression.

So I feel, generally speaking, that the bill provides an over-all authority to take care of crises which might arise. To illustrate what I mean more specifically by that, I desire to refer to the Korean incident, to see whether, for example, in a case such as that, where a special crisis has arisen, this bill provides for it. As soon as the Korean incident arose, I raised the question whether the bill we are now supporting and whether past legislation provided sufficient authorizations for funds to meet this particular situation.

Last year, in the act which covered the fiscal year 1950, title III authorized an amount not to exceed $27,000,000-plus for Korea, Iran, and the Philippines. Of this amount it is estimated that some $20,000,000 will be obligated as of June 30 of this year, and the pending bill provides for carry-overs for those funds which were not spent under the authorizations of last year. So there is an amount roughly in the neighborhood of $7,000,000-plus still available for the Korean and Philippine areas.

But, in addition to that, title III of the pending bill, whose support I am now advocating, provides a special authorization for $16,000,000 for Korea and the Philippines. If we were to get into a very tight place and needed funds suddenly to help the Korean people, the $16,000,000 might be applied—all, if necessary—even though it might temporarily embarrass our Philippine position.

Beyond that, title III of the bill provides an authorization of $75,000,000 for a flexible fund to be used in the general area of China. While it was intended by the framers of the bill that this flexible fund should be used in China itself—that is, Formosa, which is left to China, and in other areas in southeast Asia—unquestionably under the language of the bill, the general area of China could be made to include Korea in case special funds not otherwise provided for were needed for that area. So it seems to me that from that standpoint we have access to those funds, and also to the funds which have not actually been expended for the year 1950.

In the next place, by section 408, to which I referred a while ago, the President is given leeway to transfer not to exceed 10 percent of the funds available under any of these titles, in case of emergencies, where there are not adequate funds available, to any other areas; and as the funds, all told, in this bill amount to some $1,250,000,000, we have at least a theoretical 10 percent of that amount which could be used if necessary in the Korean area.

But I want to point out that from my study of this matter, as to the needs of Korea, it is not a question now of the use of dollars, because the dollars are obviously available. Of course, there are certain practical limitations upon the amount of aid we could successfully use there at the present time. All I want to do is to assure my colleagues so far as I can, and the public, and for the record, that so far as our authorizations are concerned, if this measure is passed, and passed promptly, and the Appropriations Committee acts on the authorizations allowed by this bill, the financial need of Korea will be taken care of.

Mr. President, I desire to commend briefly—I have already done so—the President's action with regard to the Far East and Korea. Was the action required? It seems to me that it was very definitely required from the standpoint of the United States, because in a very special way we are committed, it seems to me, at least morally, to the welfare of this particular country. I wanted very much to satisfy myself that we had some moral obligation in this area entirely aside from the great interest we have in the free peoples all over the world, and I have therefore requested the Legislative Reference Service of the Library of Congress to give me a memorandum which could be used in the RECORD indicating what the background is that calls upon us to take a special interest in this area. This is entirely apart, at the moment, from the United Nations action, which I shall come to presently.

In the first place, our responsibility to Korea began—of course, we have had it for a great many years past, but I mean in the recent years—under the so-called agreement made at Cairo, or the understanding reached at Cairo between the United Kingdom, China, and ourselves, in which it was stated definitely that "in due course, Korea shall become free and independent." We committed ourselves to that moral obligation. I read it again:

> In due course, Korea shall become free and independent.

Then, later, when Japan surrendered and we got into difficulties with Russia in giving Korea her independence at that time and making her free, we occupied the lower two-thirds, up to the thirty-eighth parallel, because we took the surrender of the Japanese forces there, while the Russians took the northern part, above the thirty-eighth parallel, which they occupied. We made all sorts of attempts to bring about an adjustment of this difficulty and to give Korea her independence, in order to carry out the Cairo declaration.

Even in the Moscow agreement of December 27, 1945, the United States, the United Kingdom, the U. S. S. R., and, later, China agreed to form a trusteeship over Korea and establish an all-Korean provisional government. That gave us a further responsibility to try to work out a plan which would give the Koreans their independence. A wartime military administration, having in view the most expeditious means of achieving Japanese surrender, provided that the Japanese forces in Korea north of the 38th parallel should surrender to the Soviet Union, and the Japanese troops south of the 38th parallel should surrender to the United States forces. That is the decision I have just mentioned, whereby this unfortunate country was divided.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I am glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. McCARTHY. I understand that the Senator from Illinois, on the floor of the Senate, a short time ago, made the statement that we should find out who was responsible for the Yalta agreement. I wonder whether the Senator from New Jersey is aware of the fact that the actual drafting of the Yalta agreement was done by three men: First, Gromyko; second, Hiss; and third, an Englishman whose name I do not recall; that at that time Stettinius normally would have taken part in the drafting, but, he was new in his job and had not been indoctrinated with State Department policy.

President Roosevelt at that time was in very bad health. So, in answer to the question raised by the Senator from Illinois, I think the RECORD should show at this time that the agreement was drafted by Alger Hiss, who was named 6 years earlier as a Soviet agent. The Senator will recall that at that time—in 1939 when Hiss' espionage activities were first made known to Acheson, Acheson said to Berle, "Do not investigate him; I will vouch completely for him." The second who assisted Hiss in drafting the Yalta agreement was Gromyko, and the third was an Englishman whose name I do not recall at the moment.

I wonder if the Senator is aware of the fact that after the agreement was made available to the balance of the State Department, Mr. Arthur Bliss Lane, who was our Ambassador to Poland at that time, said, in commenting on the agreement:

> Upon reading the agreement I could hardly believe my eyes. Every line bespoke a complete surrender to Stalin.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. In answer to the Senator's question, I heard statements made that the agreement was drafted by the persons mentioned, and my own position is well known as to criticism of the Yalta agreement. I thing it was a most tragic mistake.

Mr. President, I want to continue with the Korean situation in which we find ourselves.

All efforts to establish either joint control or an over-all Korean Government failed because of the recalcitrance of the Soviet authorities. The United States carried the question to the United Nations General Assembly in September 1947.

As a result of an investigation by the United Nations Temporary Commission on Korea—a Commission which was established to study the whole question—and the resolution of February 26, 1948, by the United Nations Interim Committee, it was decided that if elections could not be held for all of Korea—and, of course, Russia was objecting to any elections in the area controlled by her—they should be held for as much of Korea as possible.

Thus, on May 10, 1948, under a proclamation of Lt. Gen. John R. Hodge, the United States commander in Korea, an election took place in South Korea under the observation of the United Nations. Under this election—and here is where the United Nations began to come into the picture, which has a bearing on the subject which we are discussing—under this election a new free government was established for South Korea and formal transfer of governmental authority from United States military authorities to the Korean civilian government began on August 16, 1948. On August 24, 1948, President Rhee of Korea and General Hodge signed an interim agreement providing for the transfer of jurisdiction over the security forces, the police, constabulary, coast guard, and so forth. Under this agreement the United States was to assist the new government in training and equipping the security forces of South Korea.

On August 26, 1948, President Truman announced that the Economic Cooperation Administration would take over the relief and rehabilitation responsibilities previously assumed by the Department of the Army. Aid agreements were negotiated and Korea became a major recipient of United States economic assistance. To date, between $450,000,000 and $500,000,000 of aid has been made available for South Korea.

The United States Army disclosed on July 1, 1949, that the withdrawal of American occupation forces was completed, leaving only a small contingent of some 500 officers and men for training Korean forces. Korea was included among the nations eligible to receive military aid under the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949.

Mr. President, I should like to say that last summer, when I took my trip to the Far East, among other places I visited at the strong recommendation of General MacArthur was Korea. I realized the progress which that little republic had made, but I felt concerned about her military situation, because she was at the end of a peninsula, in danger of attack from a great force from the north. It seemed to me that the South Koreans had a well-trained army and could make a successful defense against North Korea, but if South Korea were attacked by Moscow she could not possibly hold out. In that respect I think we are open to criticism for not giving South Korea more equipment with which to defend herself.

Our responsibilities in South Korea, of which we have been the chief sponsor, helper, and protector, devolve rather naturally from our efforts to strengthen the democratic world against Communist encroachment. We are rather heavily committed in this respect in Korea because of the pledge of independence to that country at Cairo and the promises and material aid which we have already given to the Koreans.

As recently as June 19, 1950, Mr. John Foster Dulles, special adviser to the Secretary of State, in a speech to the national assembly at Seoul, assured members of the assembly, "You will never be alone."

So, Mr. President, I feel that before we consider what the United Nations has done we can well consider that we had taken these steps. There had been established a republic in Korea, and we had prepared to go ahead and do all we could to keep that country free.

But it seems to me that beyond this moral responsibility of ours we have a profound interest in the actions of the United Nations. When the first reports came of the attack by North Korea, representatives of the State Department were good enough to confer with some members of the Foreign Relations Committee. The first step was to report the matter to the United Nations and see if prompt action could not be taken.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. I understand the Senator is referring to the conference between the President and the Members of the Senate on yesterday morning——

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. No; I was referring, if I may say so to the Senator from Missouri, to a conference on Sunday, when the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] and I were in conference with a member of the State Department representing the Far Eastern Division, with regard to the policy of taking the question up with the United Nations. We were advised that the United Nations was going to meet that day. I shall presently refer to the resolution adopted on Sunday. On Tuesday another resolution was adopted which laid the setting, from the standpoint of the United Nations, of our participation along the line of the President's statement of yesterday.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further inquiry?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I shall be very happy to yield.

Mr. DONNELL. I thank the Senator for correcting my understanding of the conference to which he referred. May I ask him, however, with regard to the conference on yesterday? There was a conference on yesterday morning between the President and certain Members of Congress, was there not?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I do not know whether it could be called a conference. A number of members of the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate, of the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House, of the Armed Services Committee, and, I think, of the Appropriations Committee, were called to the White House, where the Chiefs of Staff were present, and the statement which was issued yesterday was read to us before it was released to the press.

Mr. DONNELL. Am I correct in understanding that the President had made his decision before he presented the statement to you gentlemen?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Unquestionably.

Mr. DONNELL. And the statement was then read as being the statement which the President was going to give out; is that correct?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I am glad the Senator has raised that point. Not in any carping or critical spirit, I want to say that what happened was not, in my judgment, a bipartisan participation in policy. It was a bipartisan meeting, in the sense that members of both parties were present. When I arrived, I found that the decision was made. There might have been opportunity for criticism, but there was no criticism. The press was already waiting to have the release issued.

The Senator is right in his implication that that was a meeting simply to inform us that the administration had come to its conclusion as to the steps to be taken.

Mr. DONNELL. And the President advised those who were present that the conclusion was arrived at and that it was going to be given to the press?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. That is correct.

Mr. President, the Senator has brought out one thing as to which I criticized the administration in dealing with the bipartisan approach. The Secretary of State simply seems to feel that if he comes to us and says, "I have decided thus and so," we are in on it and have taken part in the decision. There have been a number of times when I disagreed with the Secretary of State as to the decision he made, but the decision was made just the same. But if I had been asked yesterday, "Have you any criticism to make? Do you vote 'yes' or 'no'?" I would have voted "yes" enthusiastically, because it seemed to me that it was a fine, statesmanlike exposition of our position, and that at last we were taking a strong position in the Far East. I do not think there was anyone present at the meeting who did not feel that he was enthusiastically behind everything that was presented, although our advice had not been asked on what was presented to us. Nevertheless, it was something that we were all wholeheartedly in favor of. I only hope and pray that the administration will follow through on the principles enunciated in that statement.

Mr. DONNELL. What I was getting at was whether or not the decision had been arrived at before the Senator and the other persons who were present at the conference were called in.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. That is correct. The decision had been arrived at previously.

Mr. DONNELL. The Senator and the others present at the conference were simply told what the decision was, and that it was going to be given to the press.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. That is correct. I did not know what the decision was. However, I was very much elated when I was advised that we were going to take a strong attitude on Korea, which I felt was an implementation of the United Nations' position, as set forth in its resolution, and that it was the responsibility of every member of the United Nations to back up the decisions and recommendations of the Security Council. I felt it was within our power to go ahead.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. Without in any way intending to criticize the President for exhibiting firmness, which I believe he should have shown a long time ago, I am wondering whether the Senator from New Jersey feels that the country is now being kept fully and accurately informed as to developments in the Korean situation.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I will say to the Senator from Vermont that I feel that if all of us are not informed, at least those of us on the Committee on Foreign Relations certainly should be called to account, because we have been given a telephone number which we can call at the State Department where all the bulletins will be available, and I suppose they would be made available also to every Member of the Senate. I do not think we have received very much beyond what has already been carried in the press.

Mr. AIKEN. I wonder if the Senator is able to clear up some confusion which I have on the matter by explaining how it came about that yesterday's reports from Korea were optimistic. They stated that the invading North Korean Army had been thrown back from the South Korean capital. Listening to the radio at 5 o'clock yesterday, I was amazed to hear that the North Koreans had taken the capital city of Seoul and evidently had progressed some distance beyond the capital.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I do not think they had progressed beyond the capital.

Mr. AIKEN. At any rate, we got optimistic reports, and only a few hours later we had reports of the fall of Seoul, which was first reported by the North Koreans and later confirmed by our own agency.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I do not know how the difference can be explained.

Mr. AIKEN. Certainly, there was a difference in the reports within just a few hours.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Yesterday I received a United Press report, and in transmitting it to me they said:

> We have good news for you. It looks as though the South Koreans had organized and pushed the North Koreans back.

Later reports showed that the North Koreans had taken the north half of the city of Seoul. Of course, that was before the President's order had gone into effect and before we went into action. I do not know what the reports show now. I do not know whether we have stopped that move, or whether we have been able to demolish any of the tanks in the attacking forces.

Mr. AIKEN. I do not know of anyone who does not desire to back up the President to the fullest in the stand which he has taken. However, it seems to me that in return we should have full and accurate reports made available to us as to all developments.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I am assured that nothing will be kept from us.

Mr. AIKEN. Certainly, there was conflict in the reports which came over within only a few hours of each other.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I do not know whether they were official reports. There was a long period of time during which we could not make any contact, even with the Korean Ambassador. I think our best reports will come from General MacArthur's headquarters. I think that will be our best source of information.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLAND in the chair). Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I yield.

Mr. CAIN. While the distinguished Senator from New Jersey was offering his interesting statement I was translating some of his observations to the map of Europe and the Middle East which hangs on the wall immediately behind the Senator from New Jersey. If—I mention this by way of argument, and for no other reason—war were to break out anywhere in western Europe, I wonder if the Senator from New Jersey could advise us what arrangements have been made with the Spanish Government which would permit the passage of Portuguese troops through Spain, because in the absence of such willingness on the part of the Spanish Government such Portuguese troops would find it extremely awkward and difficult to enter the fray.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I am unable to answer the question of the Senator from Washington. I do not know what arrangements, if any, have been made.

Mr. CAIN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Probably I should say that a good many arrangements should be made in a great many areas which have not been made. This may be of interest to the Senator. At the present time the 12 North Atlantic countries are Britain, France, Holland, Belgium, Luxemburg, Portugal, Canada, Iceland, Denmark, Norway, Italy, and the United States. This year we have enlarged the program because we realize that there are other danger spots in Europe which require attention, such as Spain, for instance, which may need some aid. So we have given a 10-percent leeway for other countries to take advantage of. Those countries would be Sweden, Spain, Switzerland, Austria, Yugoslavia—if we were prepared to help her—and Finland, perhaps. Certainly none of the satellites would be included. Of course, we have already covered Greece and Turkey by existing legislation.

Mr. CAIN. May I inquire of the Senator whether he means that the available 10 percent could be spent in its entirety on any single one of the countries which the Senator has mentioned, or would it be shared among all those countries?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. The discretion in that respect is left with the President. Where an emergency arose, the concentration could be made.

Mr. CAIN. I would appreciate the Senator's answering one more question. I ask the question by referring again to the map, which I know most Senators are studying very seriously these days. What is the military status or establishment of Iceland today, if the Senator knows?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I do not know. I do not think Iceland has any army at all. It has no army, my aide tells me. Iceland has not asked for any aid. Of course, it is an important link in the chain, from our experience in the last war.

Mr. CAIN. Iceland, which is a member of the Atlantic Pact, has in these critical days—and presumably it is for good cause—no army, navy, or air corps. Yet if Iceland were occupied by an enemy nation, if my understanding of the Atlantic Pact is correct, 11 other nations would presumably go to war to relieve her of the aggressor.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. We would consider an attack on Iceland an attack on all, under the language of the Atlantic Pact.

Mr. CAIN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I desire to emphasize at this point in my remarks one very important fact, and that is that the Security Council of the United Nations having acted—and many people seem to be confused on this point—in my judgment there was a very definite responsibility on the members of the United Nations to back up the Security Council in its recommendation. If we had not acted after that resolution had been adopted telling the North Koreans to stop firing and to move back to the thirty-eighth parallel, then, in my humble judgment, the United Nations would have been through. We had to face the issue of whether we were going to see through this action for the security of the world against an aggressor. Otherwise we had to face the possibility of the United Nations going to pieces.

Mr. President, at this stage in my remarks, I think it is important for the RECORD to show two things. I ask unanimous consent that there be inserted in the RECORD at this point the Security Council's resolution of Sunday, June 25, 1950. I should like to have the resolution printed in full, and then I should like to make some comments on it.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SECURITY COUNCIL RESOLUTION, SUNDAY, JUNE 25, 1950

The Security Council—

Recalling the finding of the General Assembly in its resolution of October 21, 1949, that the Government of the Republic of Korea is a lawfully established government "having effective control and jurisdiction over that part of Korea where the United Nations Temporary Commission on Korea was able to observe and consult and in which the great majority of the people of Korea reside; and that this Government is based on elections which were a valid expression of the free will of the electorate of that part of Korea and which were observed by the temporary commission; and that this is the only such government in Korea";

Mindful of the concern expressed by the General Assembly in its resolutions of December 12, 1948, and October 21, 1949, of the consequences which might follow unless member states refrained from acts derogatory to the results sought to be achieved by the United Nations in bringing about the complete independence and unity of Korea; and the concern expressed that the situation described by the United Nations Commission on Korea in its report menaces the safety and well-being of the Republic of Korea and of the people of Korea and might lead to open military conflict there;

Noting with grave concern the armed invasion of the Republic of Korea by armed forces from North Korea,

Determines that this action constitutes a breach of the peace;

1. Calls for the immediate cessation of hostilities and calls upon the authorities in North Korea to withdraw forthwith their armed forces to the thirty-eighth parallel.

2. Requests the United Nations Commission on Korea (a) to communicate its fully considered recommendations on the situation with the least possible delay; (b) to observe the withdrawal of the North Korean forces to the thirty-eighth parallel; and (c) to keep the Security Council informed on the execution of this resolution.

3. Calls upon all members to render every assistance to the United Nations in the execution of this resolution and to refrain from giving assistance to the North Korean authorities.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. The resolution—

1. Calls for the immediate cessation of hostilities; and calls upon the authorities in North Korea to withdraw forthwith their armed forces to the thirty-eighth parallel.

2. Requests the United Nations Commission on Korea (a) to communicate its fully considered recommendations on the situation with the least possible delay; (b) to observe the withdrawal of the North Korean forces to the thirty-eighth parallel; and (c) to keep the Security Council informed on the execution of this resolution.

3. Calls upon all members to render every assistance of the United Nations in the execution of this resolution and to refrain from giving assistance to the North Korean authorities.

Mr. President, it is important to note that that does not say anything about repelling any armed attack. That resolution, adopted last Sunday, was the first one, and it was absolutely ignored, as we know, by the North Koreans. Then it became necessary for the next action to be taken.

On Tuesday, yesterday, not quite simultaneously with the President's statement, but almost simultaneously—and I think after contact with our representative, Ambassador Austin, we had pretty good information as to what action would be taken by the United Nations—they adopted the next resolution, which I also ask to have inserted in the RECORD in full at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SECURITY COUNCIL RESOLUTION, TUESDAY, JUNE 27, 1950

The Security Council—

Having determined that the armed attack upon the Republic of Korea by forces from North Korea constitutes a breach of the peace,

Having called for an immediate cessation of hostilities, and

Having called upon the authorities of North Korea to withdraw forthwith their armed forces to the thirty-eighth parallel, and

Having noted from the report of the United Nations Commission for Korea that the authorities in North Korea have neither ceased hostilities nor withdrawn their armed forces to the thirty-eighth parallel, and that urgent military measures are required to restore international peace and security, and

Having noted the appeal from the Republic of Korea to the United Nations for immediate and effective steps to secure peace and security,

Recommends that the members of the United Nations furnish such assistance to the Republic of Korea as may be necessary to repel the armed attack and to restore international peace and security in the area.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, at the end there appears a recommendation on which, it seems to me, hangs our whole philosophy in acting to implement the United Nations recommendation. I quote:

Recommends that the members of the United Nations furnish such assistance to the Republic of Korea as may be necessary to repel the armed attack and to restore international peace and security in the area.

The question has arisen, of course—the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] raised it today, and it was discussed by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS]—whether the President had authority to direct General MacArthur, who is in charge of our country's interests in the area in question, to use our armed forces actually to repel the attack.

The point was brought out very ably by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS] in my opinion, that the President's action did not mean we should carry on a war with North Korea and go over the border, but that we should tell the North Koreans to get out of South Korea and go north of the thirty-eighth parallel. We were acting under the authority of the United Nations, and the order of the President to see that the resolution was carried out and that they were pushed out. The minute they got back of the thirty-eighth parallel we would not have any authority, so far as the United Nations was concerned, in trying to restore peace in the area. I think that when that is understood, there will be less tendency to say that we are declaring war on a country with which we have been at peace.

Mr. President, the question of participation by other countries has been raised, and I have been asked by a number of persons who have called me, and by members of the press who have interviewed me, as to whether we are going to act alone. Of course, we all know that the ultimate ability to make the order of the Security Council really effective rests largely with us, but the call was made to all the members of the United Nations, and at the present time, I am advised, there has been a very substantial response, on the part of Great Britain, France, and some other countries. I have not all the names before me.

The point I desire to make, which is important, is that this is not unilateral action by the United States. The United States, as one of many members of the United Nations, is accepting its responsibility to see that the recommendation, the order, practically, of the Security Council, is carried out. If we are not prepared to do that, if we are not prepared to take any initiative to get these countries, so far as they will, even if only as a token, to help us in this matter, the authority of the United Nations will be done for. It is a challenge as to whether we are going to keep the United Nations effective in the world.

Mr. President, as I have said, the action taken is not unilateral action by the United States. But we have to face the fact that we are the most powerful Nation in the world today, able to accept the responsibility and the challenge thrown at us by the terrible crisis which has been presented. I repeat my enthusiastic support of the prompt action, the decisive action, taken by the President in his statement of yesterday.

Mr. President, we have, therefore, two matters for consideration, first, stopping the aggressor, and second, preventing the conflict from spreading more widely, and it seems to me we have acted with speed, firmness, and wisdom. When I am asked if this means war, I reply, "This is the only step I can see which could possibly have averted world war III." If we had permitted Korea to fall, Formosa would inevitably have been next, because we would not have made a stand there if we had not made it in Korea; Indochina would have been next; the Philippines would have been threatened, and we would have been forced to withdraw entirely from the Pacific area, or be involved in a third world war, under conditions much less favorable than the conditions today, when, in my judgment, the firm action we have taken will prevent world war III. While there is always danger that a world war may break out, the firmness of the action just taken is what the world needed to answer the question whether the United States was going to follow through in its oft-repeated statement that it was profoundly interested in the small nations of the world, nations which are trying to find freedom and release from despotic control.

Here was a clear-cut case of a country, which, as I have tried to show, is in a way a ward of ours, under our trusteeship, as it were, which we had brought into the United Nations, being suddenly and ruthlessly attacked. When the United Nations was willing to act, and we were called upon to follow through, we did follow through, and I rejoice that we did.

In Congress we have a great responsibility. We have a long-range responsibility, not only in the military field, about which we are speaking today, but in the economic and moral fields, for a foreign policy worthy of our heritage as free men. We are dealing today with one very serious part, but only one part, of the whole picture.

I for one am not content merely with the fact that we have announced we are going to take military measures. I will not be happy until we think through a larger, over-all reach of the various contacts in the world that we need, and the various interpretations we need to make to the world in order to show our leadership, which is so sorely needed, especially by oppressed peoples.

Mr. President, it is my purpose later to speak on that subject. I expected to bring it up today in dealing with the pending bill, but it is a much larger subject. The crisis present in Korea seems to me to be a way to emphasize the great importance of this program for military assistance which is designed to implement the military security of the United States and the free world. That is why I hope we can dispose of the pending bill. Those of us on the committee will be prepared to answer all questions asked us in regard to it. I hope the Senate will pass the bill by an overwhelming vote.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, I support wholeheartedly the military-aid program bill. I feel strongly that the Senate must not delay the approval of this vital measure.

In Asia we are hearing today the echoes of military conflict. From the land of Korea the clash of arms echoes throughout the civilized world. That clash of arms should serve as warning to us here that we must proceed immediately to approve this legislation and to implement it.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me for a question?

Mr. LEHMAN. Of course.

Mr. CAIN. The Senator has just made an observation which is of prime importance to all of us. Will the Senator tell us what there is in the MAP bill which, if the bill were passed, by way of argument, this afternoon, would immediately be of assistance to Korea?

Mr. LEHMAN. I think I will develop that as I go along, if the Senator will be patient.

Mr. CAIN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. LEHMAN. Unless we act, and act swiftly, Europe may be the next theater for such operations as we witness today in Korea. One way—one means of preventing this from happening—is to speed arms to our friends in Europe and to strengthen the physical sinews which bind the Atlantic Pact nations together.

On June 2, only 3 weeks ago, President Truman, in a message to the Congress urging the mutual defense assistance program, said:

> The United States and other free nations must be strong if they are to remain free. Communist imperialism has shown itself ready to exploit weakness and to seize nations which do not have the strength to resist.

Those are prophetic words, Mr. President. They forecast the pattern of the present invasion of Korea. Let us be sure that they do not forecast a pattern for Europe or for any other country to whose aid we are pledged.

I do not feel that the military-aid program is the sole answer to the question of peace or war in Europe and in the world. But it is a part of the answer and a vital part of the answer under today's conditions.

The bill before us is a very brief bill. It expands, amplifies, and implements the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949. It gives the President certain additional authority and it restricts his authority in some respects. An aggregate of a billion and a quarter dollars of new funds is authorized to be appropriated. This would be a cheap investment in peace. Neither this amount nor any comparable amount will secure the peace if we do not succeed in making these people not only secure, but determined to defend their liberties and their way of life.

I hope and pray that none of our friends and allies in Europe shall be the next Korea. To further that hope, this bill must be immediately approved.

Mr. President, on Monday last I spoke in this Chamber and made an appeal for nonpartisanship, an appeal to avoid all political thinking, all political considerations. I renew that appeal today. I want to quote briefly a few paragraphs from the remarks which I made last Monday as follows:

> Mr. President, there are times for greatness. This is such a time.
> I do not refer to individuals. I refer to all of us, collectively. I refer to all our people. I refer to our country. I refer to all countries.
>
> The news of the past 48 hours has shocked us. We cannot doubt that the occurrence in Korea, the armed attack by prepared forces, is part of a pattern. It is a move, whose motive we can only guess. We cannot doubt that it was planned, or at least acquiesced in by the Kremlin.
>
> I shall not discuss the strategic dangers to which we would be exposed if Korea fell to the Communists. This is not a time for amateur strategists. Our trust, today, must rest in those officials charged with the calculation of strategic factors.
>
> Nor shall I look backward and speculate on where the fault lies, that today's happenings should have occurred. It is easy to simplify history and to rewrite it according to one's political tastes or prejudicies. That is not called for today.
> What we in the Senate are called upon to do today is to show the world our attitude and our reaction to the terrible events rushing upon us. Are we to be stricken by panic and confused by recrimination? Are we to think of what advantage this political party or that political party may take of the current situation?
> No; this is not the course for the United States Senate. The role of the Senate today is to reflect for the people of the world what the American people are thinking of today. Our function is to be deliberative and to take counsel on what our general purposes are, and what principles this Nation shall be guided by in the hard days ahead.

I concluded my statement with these words:

> We must show strength, firmness, and courage. But let us, in this hour of danger, show that greatness to which destiny has called us. Let us avoid partisanship as evil itself. In this hour, and on this question, let all Americans stand firm for justice but strive with all our hearts and all our souls to save mankind from the catastrophe of another world war.

Mr. President, the paramount duty of this body is to support and advance all measures needed to assure the security of this Nation and of the world.

I listened to the debate earlier today, and without reference to the distinguished and able speaker who has just preceded me, I want to take this opportunity of warning again, Mr. President, that we of the Senate will fail in the stern duty which is imposed upon us—our paramount duty—if we permit ourselves to play politics in this tense and critical situation.

Mr. MALONE obtained the floor.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nevada yield so I may ask one question of the Senator from New York?

Mr. MALONE. I am happy to yield to the Senator from Washington for that purpose.

Mr. CAIN. I listened with interest to the remarks of the distinguished Senator from New York. During his observation he urged prompt passage by the Senate of the United States of the MAP proposal, and stated that it was his judgment that immediate passage of the bill would be of material assistance to Korea, that is, to southern Korea, in its hour of need. Would the Senator please satisfy my quest for information by telling me what there is in the pending bill which, if passed this afternoon, would be of any material assistance to southern Korea.

Mr. LEHMAN. I will very gladly answer the question. I do not believe that I confined my plea for the immediate passage of the military-aid bill to the situation in Korea.

Mr. CAIN. By no means.

Mr. LEHMAN. I pointed out that the prompt passage of the bill would very definitely assist in supporting the peace and security of the world. I believe the peace and security of the world depend on this country and on our friends and allies in western Europe, and those friends whom we have left in Asia.

Mr. President, I spoke yesterday on this floor in support of the prompt passage of the selective-service bill. I felt it was dangerous to delay the passage of that bill by even so much as 1 hour. I have just as much respect for proper parliamentary procedure as anyone in this Chamber, but in these critical times I do not think a point of order, unless it addresses itself to something of the utmost importance, is seemly. I pointed out that we of the Senate had told the world yesterday that we had confidence in the President, that we pledged our support to his present course of action. Nothing we could have done would have been so clear a sign and a promise to the people of the world and of this country that we meant what we said, as the prompt and immediate passage of the draft law.

I say the same thing about the bill now before us. I think we must show the people of the world that we mean what we say, that we are deeply interested in the preservation of the democracy, the freedom and the liberties of people who want freedom and liberties today. I think anything that delays action weakens us in the eyes of the world, and weakens our own security.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington raised this question only because he, like every other Senator, is looking for a tangible way in which to be of assistance to southern Korea. I want to say to my friend from New York, because it is a fact, that there is nothing in the pending bill which would provide any material assistance of any kind, character, or description to Korea for weeks and weeks and weeks after the bill is passed.

There is another reason I have for raising the question, and I should like to draw it to the attention of the distinguished Senator from New York. The pending bill came up on the floor of the Senate last Friday. War broke out in Korea the next day. There is no more similarity between the Korean situation this afternoon and that of last Friday afternoon than there is between day and night. Yet those who presented the pending bill last Friday are still talking only of passing it in the United States Senate, and no one has yet, to my knowledge, said "Circumstances have changed, and we need to make changes in the bill." I think logic will tell anyone that what was proper last Friday to be done no longer is proper to do in any way which was recommended last Friday in view of the outbreak of war which has taken place since that time.

Mr. LEHMAN. I may point out to the distinguished Senator from Washington, whom I thank for his remarks, for they gave me the opportunity to say some things I wanted to say on the floor of the Senate, that I again wish to emphasize as I did a few moments ago, that there might be other Koreas, not only in Asia, but in other parts of the world. Such other Koreas might prove much more perilous to our immediate security than the distant peninsula in Asia; of course, I want to help protect the Korean people and at the same time to protect the security of our country and of the world.

Mr. CAIN. Both the Senators now in colloquy certainly have the same single ambition to help their country and the world. I feel strongly, and I believe that no one will deny it to be a fact, that we are where we have come to be today largely because of mistakes we have made in the past. In reference to the pending measure or any other matter concerning the welfare and health of the world in the future, we ought to make up our minds conclusively as to what we are doing, before we do it.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MALONE. I am glad to yield.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, for some time I have sought to obtain recognition by the Presiding Officer; but having failed to do so, and also having a meeting at 4:30 of the crime investigation subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee, and inasmuch as it is now past 4:30, I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD a statement, of which I shall read simply the headlines, although I had intended to read the entire statement into the RECORD.

The headlines are as follows:

1. Senator WILEY suggests peace propaganda counteroffensive against Russia.
2. Basic peace outlook still bright.
3. Strong action is less of a risk than appeasement.
4. We must be wary of diversionary tactics.
5. Russia would have blitzed us had she intended war.
6. We are incredibly unprepared.

Mr. President, on the last point, I ask the indulgence of the Senator who has yielded to me, in order that I may read one paragraph of my statement, as follows:

Speaking of alertness, I ask the Navy if it is on guard against a Pearl Harbor-like attack in which Russian snorkel submarines could hit our concentrated far-eastern fleet. I ask the Department of the Army if it is prepared in the Near East to prevent a sudden push by Russia for the oil wells. I ask if it is ready for a sudden push by the Russians to take over Berlin and western Germany.

Mr. President, alertness in 1950 cannot consist merely of 1945-like alertness—that is to say, being vigilant for the dangers existing as of the end of the Second World War. On the contrary, we must be alert to the dangers existing as of the present atomic age, with all its challenge.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that my entire statement may be printed at this point in the body of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR WILEY

SENATOR WILEY SUGGESTS PEACE PROPAGANDA COUNTEROFFENSIVE AGAINST RUSSIA

America must launch a peace propaganda counteroffensive against Russia. It is essential that we accompany our Korean military counteroffensive with a peace blitz that will acquaint the Russian people with the real reasons for the actions by United States forces. The uniformed people of Russia have been told no doubt that it is imperialist America which is attacking northern Korea and which is supposedly planning to attack the Soviet Union itself. We must "hit 'em where they ain't," hit the Russian people with facts to end their ignorance of Soviet aggression.

We should put the Voice of America program therefore on a semiwar footing by bombarding the Russian airwaves with the actual facts of the situation. We should set agents to work throughout the iron curtain to spread the truth. The State Department moreover should exercise twentieth century imagination in immediately considering every other possible device by which we can reach the Russian and satellite peoples, whether it be leaflet-carrying balloons or any other new technique of psychological warfare.

The man in the street in Russia fears and hates war as much as does the man in the street in America. It is up to us to point out conclusively to the average Ivan that America does not want war, that the United States has taken strong steps in Korea so as to prevent all-out war, and that it is the Kremlins' leaders who have deliberately brought about the present critical situation. If 10,000,000 Russians knew the real facts about the Red-inspired civil war, Stalin and company would be that much more deterred from making a fatal blunder leading to war.

Of course in our over-all actions we must be careful to take no steps which would leave the Kremlin no other alternative but all-out war. On the contrary, we must leave an out for them so that they can withdraw from their limb without precipitating a third global conflict.

BASIC PEACE OUTLOOK STILL BRIGHT

I have every faith that this crisis in Korea will not degenerate into a third world war.

I believe and pray Russia will back down.

I believe and pray the United Nations will have been strengthened rather than weakened by its vigorous action against aggression.

STRONG ACTION IS LESS OF A RISK THAN APPEASEMENT

There is no turning back. We are gambling; we are taking a calculated risk. But appeasement and retreat is a far worse gamble. Appeasement has failed every time. Strength may and I believe will succeed this time.

WE MUST BE WARY OF DIVERSIONARY TACTICS

It should not be forgotten that the entire Korean crisis may be a demonstration of Russian diversionary tactics—a strategy which the Politburo has used repeatedly and successfully in the past. Therefore, while we must concentrate on meeting the Korean problem we must not forget that the Russians are playing chess with the entire world and that the Kremlin is undoubtedly hoping we will turn our backs to other critical danger spots elsewhere in the globe.

RUSSIA WOULD HAVE BLITZED US HAD SHE INTENDED WAR

As for Korea itself, I believe basically that it is a testing ground. It was not designed by Russia as a Sarajevo for world war III, paralelling the assassination of the Austria-Hungarian duke which was used as a pretext for the first world conflict.

Had Russia intended a real show-down, the first notice we would have received would not have been the crossing of the Korean border, but the blackening of America's own skies with Russian bombers and guided missiles bringing destruction to our own cities. Russia recognizes that the greatest single weapon she would have to win a war with us is the element of surprise. If she is denied that element and if America is alerted as she is now, then the two adversaries are on more even terms.

I know that every American mother and father feels a deep sense of concern lest this situation develop into war. The Russians are, however, the most cold-blooded and realistic chess players in the world and a good chess player always anticipates not only his next move, but his and his adversary's distant moves many steps ahead. The Russians have no doubt anticipated actions we would take, and it appears unlikely that they would bring about a general war in such an indirect fashion, completely losing the advantage of a blitz attack.

WE ARE INCREDIBLY UNPREPARED

One thing we have learned and that is in a crisis such as the present, we find ourselves incredibly weak from the standpoint of having our civil defenses adequately prepared, let alone our military defenses. The plans for governmental decentralization which I have so long urged and which have never gotten out of the drafting blueprint stage, should long ago have been implemented by orderly, systematic dispersal starting with priority Federal agencies.

I ask the National Security Resources Board: "Has it the complete mobilization plans which it has been hinting about and predicting for so long?"

And speaking of alertnes—I ask the Navy if it is on guard against a Pearl Harbor-like attack in which Russian snorkel submarines could hit our concentrated Far Eastern fleet. I ask the Department of the Army if it is prepared in the Near East to prevent a sudden push by Russia for the oil wells? I ask if it is ready for a sudden push by the Russians to take over Berlin and western Germany?

Alertness in 1950 cannot consist merely of 1945-like alertness, that is being vigilant for dangers as of the end of the Second World War. On the contrary we must be alert to dangers existing as of the present atomic age.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MALONE. I yield.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, in the present crisis, it seems to me it is very important that we use whatever means or methods are available to us to clarify our thinking. To that end, I offer as a contribution, for the RECORD, an article from today's New York Herald-Tribune. The article is by David Lawrence, and is entitled "Truman's Stand on Korea Reverses United States Policy to Write Off Reds' Far East Conquest."

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TRUMAN'S STAND ON KOREA REVERSES UNITED STATES POLICY TO WRITE OFF REDS' FAR EAST CONQUEST

(By David Lawrence)

WASHINGTON, June 27.—The world has just witnessed an episode that may help to prevent world war III. It is an episode reminiscent of something that was not done in November, 1936, when Hitler marched into the Rhineland, the British and French Governments procrastinated and did nothing, and the League of Nations—without America as a member—failed to halt the aggression.

Today the United States, acting in behalf of the United Nations, takes its stand firmly, orders its military forces into action and is prepared to take the consequences in an effort to halt an aggressor in his tracks.

The United States, though regarding the outbreak as technically between two groups of Koreans, has sent a note to Moscow making it unmistakably clear that America understands the motivation of the North Korean action to be Russian.

What all this may lead to in world affairs is too early to appraise, but there is such a sign of relief throughout Washington today that it's like a breath of fresh air in a stuffy room. The Republicans and the Democrats are once again united on an unpartisan foreign policy. There is no more partisan politics now, as both parties get behind the President in a remarkable demonstration of unity before all the world.

REVERSAL OF POLICY

The new policy in the Far East is, to be sure, a reversal. For months it had been decided to write off the Far East-Communist conquests in China were just too bad, Formosa couldn't be defended, Korea might have to be abandoned. But the recent trip of Secretary of Defense Johnson and General Bradley to confer with General MacArthur and the visit of John Foster Dulles to Korea all seemed to synchronize with American sentiment, namely, that a manifestation of weakness in the Far East would be a blow to America's prestige throughout Asia as well as in Europe. If America were indifferent to the fate of Korea, then no small nation could expect help from either the United States or the United Nations. A stand had to be taken in the Far East to show that America was ready to fight to defend freedom anywhere. It was an opportunity for a military demonstration—so often made as a means of preventing a big war.

Also the main defect in the Truman-Acheson policy which has led to such severe attacks from Senators KNOWLAND, of California, and ALEXANDER SMITH of New Jersey, and Representative JUDD of Minnesota—all Republicans—has been corrected at last. It was this trio which wanted Formosa saved somehow, but to this the Administration had cried out that they were flirting with war.

Fortunately for everybody concerned, the Russians blundered in time. They suddenly gave the administration a way out of the whole dilemma. For President Truman promptly pointed to Communist aggression in Korea as a justification for protecting Formosa against Communist attack. True enough, the administration doesn't necessarily get behind Chiang Kai-shek and the Nationalists now but keeps the Communists out of Formosa just the same. The Chinese people may interpret the action as they please—and the Communists in China will get small comfort out of it.

As for the shooting, it will be brief. The Russians are not likely to provoke a war, though their capacity for harassment should by no means be underestimated as they might bring in Communist troops from China to help the North Koreans and start a chapter in history not unlike that which developed in the Spanish civil war as prelude to World War II.

KREMLIN MAY BACK DOWN

It could happen, of course, that the Russian people may grow restive and begin to ask if the Kremlin is involving them in war. It could happen that the Moscow government will back track and, while disavowing any responsibility for the behavior of the North Korean forces, nevertheless keep the latter from continuing their aggression.

Most important of all considerations in reversing American policy was the possible effect on the Japanese people of the reported abandonment of Korea and Formosa. If that had happened, Communist infiltration in Japan would have become bolder and more effective. The new policy, like the "drawing of a line in Greece and Turkey, has awakened real support on every side as a logical development of America's global leadership.

Russia tried to test out America and found a firm, hard, unrelenting policy in Asia as in Europe. That's the biggest single development thus far of the postwar period and could conceivably prevent any attempts at aggression by the Communists in Europe or elsewhere.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, I also ask consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD an article entitled "United States Far East Policy Reversed by Truman's Order for Action," by Bert Andrews, also published in the New York Herald Tribune.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES FAR EAST POLICY REVERSED BY TRUMAN'S ORDER FOR ACTION—STAND OF HERBERT HOOVER, MACARTHUR, TAFT, AND OTHER REPUBLICAN SENATORS SEEN AS UPHELD

(By Bert Andrews)

WASHINGTON, June 27.—President Truman's strong stand regarding Korea and Formosa marks an almost complete reversal of the position he and Secretary of State Dean Acheson held on these far eastern matters just 6 months ago.

It almost amounts to vindication of the attitude taken at that time by General of the Army Douglas MacArthur, former President Herbert Hoover, and four Republican Senators, Robert A. Taft, of Ohio; H. Alexander Smith, of New Jersey; Homer Ferguson, of Michigan; and William F. Knowland, of California.

There was complete acceptance by Republicans today that the Communist-backed aggression against the Republic of Korea by the forces of Northern Korea has forced the change in strategy and so there was no tendency to raise cries of "We told you so."

Nevertheless, the record is there in official statements from the President, Secretary Acheson, Mr. Hoover, and the Senators; in comments unquestionably inspired by General MacArthur, and in newspaper accounts.

SEES MAC ARTHUR PREVAILING

It is a record which shows that Secretary Acheson, who believed then that the holding of Formosa by Nationalist China was not vital to the defense of the United States, prevailed upon the President to accept his views over those who held to the contrary.

It is a record—and it is supplemented by quite recent developments—which shows that the opinions of the most contrary man of all, General MacArthur, have finally prevailed.

A capsule illustration of how great the reversal is—an illustration which will be followed by chronological details—is supplied by:

President Truman, on January 5, when Republicans were shouting for more help for Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek and Formosa: "The United States Government will not provide military aid or advice to Chinese forces on Formosa. The resources on Formosa are adequate to enable them (the Chinese forces) to obtain the items which they might consider necessary for the defense of the island."

Secretary Acheson, on January 5: "We are not going to get involved militarily in any way on the island of Formosa. So far as I know, no responsible person in the Government, no military man has ever believed that we should involve our forces in the island."

President Truman, in his statement today: "The occupation of Formosa by Communist forces would be a direct threat to the security of the Pacific area and to the United States forces performing their lawful and necessary functions in that area. Accordingly, I have ordered the Seventh Fleet to prevent any attack on Formosa."

THE CHRONOLOGY

The complete chronology, bringing Messrs. Truman, Hoover, MacArthur, Acheson, Taft, Ferguson, Smith, and Knowland, follows:

December 1, 1949: Senator SMITH returned from a trip to the Orient. He had talked in Tokyo with General MacArthur. It's an open secret that the things he said after he came back were based on that talk. He said it was unthinkable that Formosa should be lost to the Chinese Communists. He said Communist drives made possible by a Formosa base might eventually push America's defense back to the Marianas, the Hawaiian Islands, and the Pacific coast.

December 1, 1949: On the very same day, after reading Senator SMITH's views, "authoritative sources"—in this case, State Department officials—told reporters the Department's view was that Formosa was of no strategic value to the United States and that the Department was prepared to see the island fall to the Communists.

December 1, 1949: Secretary of Defense Louis Johnson sent two men out to see General MacArthur. They were Tracy S. Voorhees, Under Secretary of the Army, and Lt. Gen. Alfred M. Gruenther, Army Deputy Chief of Staff for Operations. They talked with General MacArthur and got an earful.

JOINT CHIEFS HEAR REPORTS

December 22, 1949: An all-day meeting of the Joint Chiefs of Staff was held to hear the Voorhees-Gruenther information and other reports. They decided to send a military mission to Formosa.

December 23, 1949: The State Department, although told of the Joint Chiefs' decision, notified its attachés that Formosa wasn't considered important strategically and that the attachés ought to begin to publicize that view so the United States wouldn't lose prestige if Formosa fell (secret notification).

December 23, 1949: On that very same day Chinese Ambassador V. K. Wellington Koo called at the State Department to make a formal request for military, political, and economic advisers for Formosa. (Kept secret, too.)

December 28, 1949: President Truman and his top advisers began to worry lest Senator SMITH and other critics accuse them in the Congress about to reconvene of having "no policy" on Asia. So the National Security Council was ordered to meet so a "positive" policy could be prepared for presentation to Congress. The best information this reporter could get was that Secretary Johnson had heard that Secretary Acheson had already sold President Truman on his arguments and saw no reason to be present. Anyway, Secretary Johnson wasn't present. President Truman decided in favor of Secretary Acheson's views.

January 2, 1950: Mr. Hoover, Senator Knowland, and Senator Taft said the United States should use its Navy if necessary to protect Formosa and "raise a wall against communism in the Pacific."

TELLS HANDS-OFF POLICY

January 5, 1950: President Truman announced the hands-off policy on Formosa. Secretary Acheson gave the details.

January 6: Senator FERGUSON said: "The President and Mr. Acheson have kicked bipartisan foreign policy out the window."

January 11: Senator Taft repeated, in the Senate, his argument that the Navy ought to be sent to protect Formosa.

January 12: President Truman said—Senator TAFT is entitled to his opinion but I didn't know he was a military expert.

The Communist-backed invasion of the Republic of Korea has made a difference.

And Messrs. MacArthur, Hoover, Taft, Knowland, Ferguson, and Smith can have that we-told-you-so expression, even though they don't use the words.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, I also ask consent to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled "New Spirit Felt in Capital in Wake of United States Decision." The article is by James Reston, and appears in the New York Times for today.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW SPIRIT FELT IN CAPITAL IN WAKE OF UNITED STATES DECISION—DIFFERENCES VANISH IN FEELING THAT PERILS OF INACTION OUTWEIGH THOSE OF ACTION

(By James Reston)

WASHINGTON, June 27.—The decision to meet the Communist challenge in Korea has produced a transformation in the spirit of the United States Government.

There have been some differences in the last 72 hours here over how to react to the Communist invasion, but in the night and day discussions since Sunday these differences have apparently been swept away by the general conviction that the dangers of inaction were greater than the dangers of the bold action taken by the President.

Some of the differences between the State and Defense Departments over United States policy in Japan and Formosa had already been minimized as a result of the recent visits of Secretary of Defense Louis Johnson, Gen. Omar Bradley and John Foster Dulles to Japan.

Before they visited Gen. Douglas MacArthur, the United States commander in Japan had been quoted as having various contradictory views about what should be done about Japan and Formosa. However, General MacArthur stated in writing that it was a vital interest of the United States that both Formosa and Japan should be denied to the Communists.

ISSUE OF FORMOSA POLICY

This paper was brought back here by Secretary Johnson, and the whole issue of reversing United States policy in Formosa would have been raised with the President again even if the Communists had not attacked South Korea.

That attack, however, convinced Secretary of State Dean Acheson, who had opposed United States military or naval action in defense of Formosa, that the Formosan policy should be reversed, and he so stated in the Blair House meeting Sunday night.

Thus, one major source of difficulty between the two major departments concerned with the conduct of foreign policy has been removed, and this decision has simultaneously regained the support of influential Senators such as Senators H. ALEXANDER SMITH, of New Jersey, and WILLIAM F. KNOWLAND, of California, who had broken with the bipartisan foreign policy over Formosa.

Secretaries Johnson and Acheson, long reported at odds with each other on various matters, have come closer together in the crisis of the last 72 hours than at any time since they have served in the Cabinet together.

GREATER COOPERATION EVIDENT

Mr. Acheson, from the moment of the attack on South Korea, argued that the whole moral basis of American foreign policy, and the confidence of the world in the United States, in the United Nations, and in the whole collective security system was at stake. Some of the soldiers naturally hesitated to disperse United States forces too much. General Bradley, in particular, has been warning that we must keep our eye on the central target, which, in his judgment, still lies in Europe.

In the end, however, the international political considerations, mainly the preservation of faith in the United States and the United Nations prevailed, and there is in Washington tonight a spirit of far greater cooperation than at any time in the last few years.

Moreover, the somber spectacle of American planes engaged against a Communist aggressor 7,000 miles away from home, long before the United States is ready for a major war, has finally overwhelmed the atmosphere of McCarthyism that has pervaded this city for months.

Tonight Capitol Hill seemed willing at last to lift its sights a little higher and turn its attention to the battle overseas.

ACTION HELD ESSENTIAL

In short, as one official who has been in on the Blair House talks this week put it: "The President's decision has untied a thousand knots." Nobody contends that the administration has chosen a prudent policy, or that it has at its command the forces to wage a protracted major war if the Russians choose to advance south of the thirty-eighth parallel.

In the end, however, there was general agreement here that the only real deterrent to aggression was the willingness of law-abiding nations to take action against the aggressor, even if they were not ready for a major war.

Mr. Truman in effect based his decision on the words used by former Secretary of State Henry L. Stimson after what he called "the tragedy of timidity" in the far eastern crisis of the early thirties.

"I broke out and said," wrote Mr. Stimson, "that I was living in a world where all my troubles came from the same thing * * * where we are constantly shut in by the timidity of governments. * * * I said that the time had come when somebody has got to show some guts."

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, last but not least, I ask consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD an editorial entitled "A Calculated Risk for Peace," published in today's New York Herald Tribune.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A CALCULATED RISK FOR PEACE

By his bold and prompt action in ordering the United States air and sea forces "to give cover and support of the Republic of Korea forces," President Truman has taken aggressive action to preserve this world's uneasy peace. The move made by the American Government carries heavy risks, including this risk of a new world war. This risk, however, was first taken by the North Korean Communists last Sunday when they launched their attack on the Republic of Korea.

Backed and guided by Moscow, the North Koreans, and the men in the Kremlin who gave the orders, decided to risk the igniting of a world war by defying the United Nations and opening Korea's civil war. To have remained silent, or, indeed, to have been merely vocal while withholding effective aid, would, once more, have indicated to the world that the democracies are impotent to act, that ruthless brute force, cannily used, can nibble away safely at the free territories of the world.

The risk of war in the action taken by the American Government yesterday may perhaps be compared to the risk that the British and French would have run had they stood together in 1936 in opposition to Adolf Hitler's occupation of the Rhineland. We believe the greater risk was incurred in letting Hitler successfully carry off his occupation of the Rhineland.

The western world does not want war. We are reluctant to believe that the Russians want war, at least today. Under the existing circumstances, the action taken by President Truman seems to us definitely a move aimed in the long run to preserve the peace. In calling upon the Chinese Nationalist Government in Formosa to cease all sea and air operations against the mainland held by the Chinese Communists, the President indicates the eagerness of the American Government to work out a formula for an orderly and peaceful settlement of the problems of the Far East. But the President's ordering of the Seventh Fleet to prevent any attack on Formosa and the expedition of military assistance to the Philippines and Indochina indicate equally that the American Government, at last, has drawn a line against continued Communist expansion in the Far East. This should be heartening and electrifying news to free nations around the world and sobering news to Moscow.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, I am very happy to note that my distinguished senior colleague the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], and the other Senators who spoke on yesterday have been notably mentioned.

COLONIAL SLAVERY

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, the United States has sunk to the filthy business of bolstering colonial slavery in various parts of the world.

Our taxpayers' money is being used by the ECA for the vile purpose of strengthening the yoke of bondage and slavery and perpetuating misery among the primitive peoples ruled and worked by imperial overlords.

The United Nations seems to have repudiated the promises of freedom to the smaller nations of the world, given at San Francisco in connection with the organization of the United Nations in 1945, and now sanctions the control of the smaller of these countries by the empire-minded nations. It apparently has now become the accepted policy of the United Nations and of our own President and Secretary of State to hold the smaller nations in bondage through the colonial empire system.

Mr. President, Mr. Paul G. Hoffman, European Cooperation Administrator, has called for European Marshall-plan countries to intensify activities in the field of colonial development. In speaking before 500 industrial executives at the conference on marketing of the American Management Association, at the Statler Hotel, in Washington, D. C., Mr. Hoffman said that the ECA is charged with the responsibility of helping in the colonial development task.

In line with this, the ECA has earmarked some millions of dollars to help pay the costs of getting various territorial development projects under way. In addition, the administration is looking forward to a series of projects to go into effect after the promised end of the Marshall plan.

Mr. President, we condemn Russia for her slave camps, while at the same time our Government helps Britain, France, and the Netherlands maintain theirs. In times past, we Americans prided ourselves upon being protectors of downtrodden people and champions of independence. But we no longer can make that claim. The United States has fallen from its high pedestal by financing the consolidation of a repulsive slavery system. Especially is this true with relation to the Negro tribes and nations in Africa and the people of the Far East—the Malayan States and Indochina.

THE ECA DEVELOPMENT OF COLONIES

Mr. President, the ECA development of colonies for the empires falls into three classifications:

First, roads, railroads, schools, hospitals, and agricultural stations.

Second, business enterprises which require public assistance.

Third, strictly private business.

We are guaranteeing to maintain the colonial status quo in Asia, in Europe, and in Africa—a status quo which is much to the advantage of certain empire-minded nations, which realized a century before we did, Mr. President, that the countries of the Far East, of Asia, of the South Seas, and of Africa form an almost perfect complement to the production of the United States. The manganese, chrome, tungsten, copra, spices, hemp, and the 35 to 40 other products which we either do not produce at all or in only small quantities, and which are very important to our everyday, peacetime existence and are vitally necessary in war, are produced in those countries. We are natural traders and could not be prevented from trading with those areas, of course, but we are forced to pay anywhere from 10 percent to 60 percent tithings to the empire-minded nations for the privilege. Many years ago import-minded nations realized this fact, and they now hold certain nations in virtual slavery, and act as brokers for those countries, holding down the wages paid in those countries and, through the subterfuge of devaluation of currency, further lowering the wages, and then further raising the prices of the materials we need, when these materials are sold to us.

Mr. President, this Nation should demand equal access to the markets of areas we defend, subject only to the specific action of each particular nation, but not controlled and directed by the empire-minded nations. I do not say that we should demand that the colonies be abandoned by the empire-minded nations; I do not say that we should demand that they release these colonies. We do not make such a demand, and I do not suggest that we make it. However, certainly we should not levy further taxes on the taxpayers of the United States, to be used to hold these colonial possessions in bondage. We are simply making enemies of the far eastern and the African peoples, and they will join any nation promising them relief from the yoke.

Mr. President, the North Atlantic Pact simply guarantees the integrity of the colonial systems throughout Asia and Africa.

DO EMPIRE-MINDED NATIONS HELP THE PEOPLE OF THEIR POSSESSIONS?

Empire-minded nations have farmed their colonies for the sole benefit of the mother country in each case. They have established empire preferential rates and other restrictions. Apparently, it has never occurred to the officials of empire-minded nations to help the people of their possessions.

Thirty-five years ago, we did not at that time consider their treatment of these possessions in the light of affecting our welfare, and particularly our peace and safety. Then World War I came along, and we entered that conflict because our leaders decided that our ultimate peace and safety were actually threatened. So we sent our boys to Europe to drive back the invader, and out into the Pacific to reestablish these nations in their colonial possessions. The same thing happened again in 1941, when we entered World War II, for the same reason. Twice in our lifetime we have left bloody tracks all over the western rim of the Pacific and in Europe in order to reclaim colonial possessions for empire-minded nations. There is no doubt in anyone's mind about who it is that can protect the colonial possessions. If there were any doubt, it must have been dispelled when Singapore, the Indies, and the Malayan States fell during World War II.

Mr. President, that is decided by the President of the United States and the Secretary of State, for the executive department of this Government, which is charged with the responsibility under the Constitution of the United States to fix our foreign policy. If all these areas must be defended for our own ultimate safety, then they must be defended; but, Mr. President, it is unnecessary for us to make it possible, and to use our influence and power to put these little nations back under the yoke and hold them through financial dependence on us, and to hold them under the power of empire-minded nations, when these empire-minded nations simply act as brokers in selling these materials to the United States of America at a highly inflated price. Right at this moment, Mr. President, rubber and tin are sold out of the Malayan States to Russia in the same manner that it is being sold to the United States of America, and at an increased price above the price at which we were securing it immediately following World War II, and, at the same time, devaluating the currency in order to lower the wages of the Malayan people, not raising their wages.

As I have said before, and now I reiterate, we are doing the financing and doing most of the fighting in connection with the reclamation of the backward areas of colonies of empire-minded nations.

If the possessions which Great Britain still retains in Africa, Burma, and even in Australia, should come under attack, under agreement made by our State Department, we could be called in.

As I have pointed out previously, it would be an easy matter for nations which are about to lose their colonies to do something to provoke an attacker and to get us directly involved in a war.

BRITAIN NEEDS AMERICAN MONEY TO DEVELOP HER COLONIES

A high British Government official has said quite frankly that the British needed American money, not for England, but to develop her colonies—later to be more profitably despoiled.

The junior Senator from Nevada talked with this British official. He said they did not need our money for development in England; what they needed it for was to develop their colonies, in Africa and elsewhere, and to establish new industries; not to rehabilitate old industries, but to build new ones, and to start new farming areas. I asked him, "Do you mean to say that you want our Government to give your Government money so that you can expend it in the construction of new industries which your nation will own and operate?" He said that was correct. He said that they wanted the money not for recovery, but for the building up of industries in their colonies, notably in Africa, where they are brokers, where they own industries, once they are built with our money; and then, through devaluation and other subterfuges, the wages are not raised, they are lowered.

Britain's colonies cover 2,000,000 square miles. They consist of 36 separately governed areas with a total population of 60,000,000, most of whom are uneducated and unskilled. Millions are primitive peoples still living in the tribal state. The bulk of the territory they inhabit is untouched by civilization. These are the downtrodden people our Government is helping Britain to keep under the yoke for her selfish gain.

Some people point to the trend toward independence in India and elsewhere. There is a question whether any such trend heralds a deflection from the imperialist system or merely a temporary modification of colonial relationships, in which near-independent areas are juggling for an improved status in an attempt to benefit by posthostilities confusion before prewar imperial controls can be reasserted.

In condoning the French misuse of ECA moneys in north Africa, the United States turns its back on morality. Far from achieving any of its proclaimed objectives, the European recovery plan has served there only to consolidate French economic and political domination in Tunisia, Algeria, and Morocco. The French are operating a police state in north Africa, and the ECA, in permitting the misuse of its funds, has shown disinterest in the problems of the indigenous populations and disregard of treaties. This does not jibe with the anticolonial policy which our representatives here voiced loudly and piously in the United Nations.

President Roosevelt at Casablanca pledged American support for the independence of Morocco. That pledge has not been kept. We turned our back on these people, despite the fact that north African forces in the late war numbered 275,000, some 65,000 of whom died on the Allies' battlegrounds.

At San Francisco, at the organization of the United Nations, we pledged our support to the principle of independence for the peoples. In five short years we have reversed our position; we have given up our high ideals and are now supporting the enslavement of the little peoples of the world.

We should demand that further American financing be withheld, whenever it serves to consolidate an ideological and economic system which has always been distasteful to the American people.

Mr. President, I shall now quote briefly from an article entitled "French Accused of Using ERP to Boost African Rule," written by Homer Metz, Chief of the United Nations News Bureau of the Christian Science Monitor. The article appeared in the Christian Science Monitor on March 1, 1950. In part, it reads as follows:

Serious and well-documented charges that American Marshall plan funds are being used to bolster French colonialism in north Africa and suppress legitimate independence movements in that area have been filed with the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

Quoting further:

The letter was made public at United Nations headquarters by El Abed Bouhafa, personal representative of Abd El Krim.

The Committee for the Freedom of north Africa asserts that in condoning French "misuse" of Marshall plan moneys in north Africa, the United States has violated the sacred principles of international law" and placed short-sighted expediency above morality.

Reading further from this dispatch:

"Far from achieving any of its proclaimed objectives," the committee's letter states, "The European recovery plan has during the last 2 years served only to consolidate French economic and political domination in Tunisia, Algeria, and Morocco.

"American financial aid has been diverted to French North Africa for the promotion of the economic revival of, and free institutions in that area," the letter adds.

"However, in practice, American dollars, exclusively distributed to French settlers and businessmen, were used to further the dislocation of the national economy of Tunisia, Algeria, and Morocco for the benefit of their French masters, French trusts, and monopolies."

Mr. President, I do not want to give the impression that I am opposed to France, the Netherlands, Belgium, and other empire-minded nations. I am simply saying that today the American taxpayer should not be taxed to keep those people in bondage. Years ago, before we were so interested in world-wide affairs, when the people of those nations were kept in virtual slavery, we used to read of an uprising in Singapore, or in Malaya, and there was a little note that a British warship had thrown some grapeshot over into the jungle and quelled the riot. Then the boys went back to work. It was all very well when we knew very little about it, but we are now supposed to understand that the objective of these peoples is freedom, and we are supposed to understand that if we intend to get the cooperation of the people in authority in Asia and Africa we must not finance the slavery which has been going on, because we are the only nation which can hold those nations in bondage.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point the complete article from the Christian Science Monitor from which I was reading.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FRENCH ACCUSED OF USING ERP TO BOOST AFRICAN RULE

(By Homer Metz)

LAKE SUCCESS.—Serious and well-documented charges that American Marshall-plan funds are being used to bolster French colonialism in north Africa and suppress legitimate independence movements in that area have been filed with the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

The charges take the form of a letter to Senator TOM CONNALLY, Democrat, of Texas, chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, from the Committee for the Freedom of North Africa, of which the Emir Abd el Krim, Moroccan nationalist leader, is president.

LETTER MADE PUBLIC

The letter was made public at United Nations headquarters by El Abed Bouhafa, personal representative of Abd el Krim.

The Committee for the Freedom of North Africa asserts that in condoning French misuse of Marshall-plan moneys in north Africa, the United States has violated the sacred principle of international law and placed short-sighted expediency above morality.

The Emir's committee declares that while it enthusiastically supported the Marshall plan at first, it reluctantly has been compelled to withdraw backing for a plan which has in this particular case developed into an insidious instrument for colonial economic aggression.

The letter charges that American policy in north Africa contradicts the basic ideals of of the Truman doctrine.

DOMINATION SEEN

"Far from achieving any of its proclaimed objectives," the committee's letter states, "the European recovery plan has during the last 2 years served only to consolidate French economic and political domination in Tunisia, Algeria, and Morocco.

"American financial aid has been diverted to French north Africa for the promotion of the economic revival of, and free institutions in, that area," the letter adds.

"However, in practice, American dollars, exclusively distributed to French settlers and businessmen, were used to further the dislocation of the national economy of Tunisia, Algeria, and Morocco for the benefit of their French masters, French trusts, and monopolies."

As an example, the Committee for the Freedom of North Africa declares, French officials are seizing 50 percent of the sugar cargoes sent to the above countries and selling them to French sugar cartels.

In spite of existing treaties that fix duties at 12 percent, it is alleged, the average Tunisian or Moroccan is compelled to pay 12 cents for a pound of sugar which should cost only 8 cents.

After quoting various authorities in support of the contention that the French are really operating a police state in north Africa, the committee declares that the ECA, in condoning the misuse of its funds, has shown disinterest in the problems of the indigenous populations and disregard of treaties.

For generations, it is pointed out, the State Department punctiliously differentiated between the French Government in north Africa and the government of the Sultan of Morocco, who under existing treaties has sovereign status.

But now the ECA appears to have nonchalantly lumped the two together in its European recovery plan, since no special provision has been made for Morocco under the ERP.

The effect of this, the committee asserts in quoting a recent article in a national magazine, "is that ECA's official recognition of French authority * * * is actively helping the French to consolidate their control."

POLICY QUESTIONED

If this is true, observes here note, it can be asked with cogency how this action on the part of the ERP jibes with the anticolonial policy which the United States has voiced in the UN.

"The current argument in favor of the procolonial policy of the Economic Cooperation Administration and its violations of sacred principles of international law is that everything has to be done to hasten France's recovery," the committee's letter declares.

"It is not the purpose of this statement to demonstrate that the welfare and the freedom of the north African peoples are as much necessary to world peace and justice as those of the western European nations.

"It is more proper to put on record that:

"(A) The north African peoples and their leaders never applied for American financial assistance.

"(B) It was the Sultan of Morocco and not the French who assisted the American forces' landing in Morocco and mobilized Morocco's physical and material forces to fight on the side of the Allies (in exchange for which, incidentally, numerous unfilled promises were made by American authorities during the war).

"(C) President Roosevelt pledged American support for the independence of Morocco in his interview with the Sultan in Casablanca.

"(D) Finally, there were only 7,800 Frenchmen fighting in the so-called Free French forces, while north Africans numbered 275,000, some 65,000 of whom died on the Allies' battlefields."

VIOLATION NOTED

The Committee for the Freedom of North Africa charges further that when the State Department agreed on December 31, 1949, to waive for an indefinite period treaty rights which the United States acquired as a result of a pact of friendship and commerce with the Sultan of Morocco in 1836, it violated both the juridical status of Morocco and the sovereign rights of the Sultan.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, I should like to read briefly from the Washington Post of December 16, 1949:

EUROPE PLANS TO SPEND $2,500,000,000 IN NEXT 2 YEARS TO DEVELOP ITS COLONIES

Billion-dollar plans are being drafted by five western European countries for vast development of their colonies during the next 2 years.

A top-ranking Government official said total cost of these projects would reach $2,500,000,000.

The program, part of which is being financed with American dollars under the Marshall plan, is designed to pave the way for still further development as part of President Truman's point 4 plan for global development of backward areas.

Why are they backward, Mr. President? For 100 to 300 years the colonial-minded nations have held these peoples in the Far East, in Africa, and other colonial areas, in bondage to the extent that they were forced to send their raw materials to the mother country to be processed and manufactured into goods, and they have bought back the goods, paying the mother country, so that it became a manufacturing center. They were not allowed to establish any manufacturing and processing plants in those areas. They will be backward for another 100 years if this situation is permitted to continue.

I continue reading from the dispatch:

These details and other points of the program now getting in motion were disclosed by a high Government official who asked that he not be identified by name.

He said that the plans involve development and expansion of overseas territories in key areas of Africa, the Far East, and the Carribbean. The colonies affected are those of Great Britain, France, Holland, Belgium, and Portugal.

The Economic Cooperation Administration (ECA), it was said, has earmarked $23,500,000 to help pay costs of getting various territorial development projects under way.

The total extent of United States dollar aid for colonial development has not been disclosed. The major portion of such expenditures will be met, high sources said, by local currencies from the countries involved and from funds deposited by the Europeans to match Marshal plan aid grants.

REPORT OF NEW UNITED STATES AID TO MIDDLE EAST DENIED

British Embassy sources discounted a news report from London yesterday, declaring that talks were progressing here on a British proposal for a giant new (United States) aid program for the Middle East and southeast Asia.

The story, quoting a responsible British source, said that Sir Leslie Rowan, British economic expert in Washington, was participating in top-level, secret discussions with United States and Canadian representatives here.

These discussions were said to look toward a series of projects to go into effect in 1952, after the end of the Marshall plan, to take over the economic support that Britain is now giving to such nations.

Mr. President, the junior Senator from Nevada stated on the Senate floor, when the point 4 program came before the Senate, that the objective of the point 4 was to take over after 1952, after the Marshall plan has ceased operations, at least, theoretically. Mr. President, the only way we can handle this situation, if we have any influence, is for the Senate, the House, the Secretary of State, and the President of the United States to bend every effort to reestablish integrity throughout the world, the integrity of the nations. They are the ones who guarantee the integrity of investments, not the people who make the investments because if we continue to foster this sort of thing, if we are behind it and it is known that private investors will be reimbursed by the Government of the United States, it will prove to be another siphon into the United States Treasury. If, in South America, Asia, and old Europe, we foster the principles of integrity of private investments, Government capital will be necessary in those areas, because there is more private money available to them in the United States of America for investment than there is anywhere else in the world, that is, if businessmen want to take a business risk. They, of course, would not take the risk of confiscation, nationalization, and socialization of capital which is fostered by the Socialist governments of Europe.

THE RAILROAD STRIKE

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I desire to address myself briefly this afternoon with regard to the pendency of the railway strike by the switchmen's union.

Mr. President, on yesterday attention was called to the fact that the switchmen's strike which involves five railroads operating in the Midwest and West had continued through its second 24 hours, on the night of June 26, with no indication that it would soon be settled. It was pointed out in the course of the excerpts from which I quoted yesterday that, as a result of this walk-out by the switchmen, operations of four of the struck carriers were at a standstill. Those four are the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad Co., the Chicago Great Western Railway Co., the Denver & Rio Grande Western Railroad Co., and the Western Pacific Railroad Co.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. In view of the attendance of Democratic Members on the floor, does the Senator have in mind any bill which he would like to have passed?

Mr. DONNELL. I would suggest Senate bill 3463.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator wish to have it considered now?

Mr. DONNELL. I do not, Mr. President. It is pending before the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, and I would not call it up at this moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. DONNELL. But, in my opinion, it is highly important, nevertheless, that the bill be promptly passed by the Senate. I may say to the Senate, or at least to those Senators who are present this afternoon, including the distinguished occupant of the Chair, that the bill, S. 3463, as was indicated, is before the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, and that further testimony is to be taken on the bill tomorrow morning.

Mr. President, as I was about to indicate, in the RECORD of yesterday it will be observed that I called attention to a sentence in a New York Times article, reading as follows:

Reports from the Twin Cities, Minnesota, indicated that the Great Northern Railway Co., the fifth road involved in the strike, has maintained near-normal passenger service, although its freight operations have been crippled.

As indicated a moment ago, the four carriers which I first mentioned were at a standstill and the freight operations of the Great Northern had been crippled, although the passenger service had been maintained near normal. In this afternoon's ticker dispatch, which came over the ticker in the adjacent room, there is the following dispatch as of 1:33 o'clock:

CHICAGO.—Freight service of the Great Northern Railroad, one of the Nation's largest iron-ore carriers, was curtailed today in a strike of A. F. of L. switchmen against five western railroads. A spokesman for the Great Northern estimated that only 5,000 of the road's 28,000 employees could continue to cross picket lines if the strike lasted through Friday. He said nearly half of the 1,500 communities served by the 8,000-mile system were without trains, and 31 train runs were canceled today.

Mr. President, before discussing the Great Northern, I should like to say that the reader of the page upon which appears this discussion might not realize the pleasantry in which the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] was indulging a few moments ago. I would not want anything in this RECORD to indicate a willingness on my part—and I am sure he would not either—that there shall be any undue delay with respect to the passage by this Senate of S. 3463.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I shall be happy to yield in a moment. I want to state most earnestly that in my judgment this bill is one that should be passed very promptly by the Senate. I earnestly extend to the Senate the expression of opinion that the bill is one which the best interests of our Nation in this critical time in which we now are engaged—yes; in normal times likewise—demand the enactment of legislation such as is embraced in Senate bill 3463. I now yield to my distinguished friend, the Senator from Oregon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from Missouri will yield for a short statement by the present occupant of the chair, he should like to say for the RECORD that the Chair understood that the pleasantries between the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Oregon, which was participated in by the occupant of the chair, had to do with the fact that at the moment there was not a member of the Democratic majority on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. DONNELL. May I interrupt the Presiding Officer to ask whether any member of the majority party is present now, except the occupant of the chair?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is at least one member of the Democratic Party present in the Chamber.

Mr. DONNELL. That is the one in the chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. MORSE. I should not want the facetious remark which I made in any way to garble the RECORD, and if the Senator from Missouri should like me to do so, I shall ask unanimous consent to have my remark stricken. It has now been exactly 12 minutes since a Democratic Member of the Senate, outside of the present occupant of the chair, has been on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. DONNELL. I should not like to have the Senator's remark stricken. I know that my good friend had no intention in any way of injuring the RECORD with respect to this or any other bill. Both my friend who occupies the chair, the distinguished Senator from Florida [Mr. HOLLAND], and my good friend from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] are constantly distinguished by their courtesy and fairness, and I appreciate this striking evidence of that fact. I should like to have the RECORD note that there are now arriving in the Senate Chamber two Members of the Democratic side, the distinguished majority leader and the distinguished Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER]. I welcome them into our midst.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I just learned that the Senator from Missouri was speaking to an empty Chamber so far as the Democrats were concerned. As soon as I learned of that situation, which I thought was very serious, indeed, I immediately came to the floor with some speed, because I desire to listen to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. DONNELL. I very much appreciate the Senator's statement, and I thank him for it. I should like to say that he has now been joined by a third member of the Democratic Party, the distinguished Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

Mr. CONNALLY. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. We can provide some more Members if the Senator thinks he needs a better audience.

Mr. DONNELL. The quality of the audience is excellent, although I should be delighted to have more Members present. We have a fairly good attendance, certainly in quality, although perhaps not so large in quantity, upon the Republican side. I think about 6 or 7 Senators on the Republican side are present on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. LUCAS. I should like to observe that the Senators on this side of the aisle are paying attention to the Senator from Missouri, while on the other side of the aisle the Senators are apparently engaged in conversation.

Mr. DONNELL. The remark which the Senator from Illinois has just made applies only, I think, to two of the Members of the Senate on this side of the aisle who are engaged in conversation at the present time. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Texas or to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. Whatever the Senators on the other side of the aisle are engaged in is not half so important as what the Senator from Missouri is about to say.

Mr. DONNELL. I thank the distinguished majority leader. It is very kind of him to express himself so frankly.

Mr. CONNALLY. While I was out of the Chamber an intellectual air wave hit me, saying that the Senator from Missouri was speaking. So I immediately came into the Chamber, and I am here now listening to whatever he has to deliver.

Mr. DONNELL. I am very happy that an air wave struck the Senator from Texas. Previously today he was similarly struck once or twice, and I am sure that being struck by this wave will not increase his injury.

Mr. President, I was referring to the fact that the Great Northern Railroad Co. has experienced by this time very serious curtailment of its service because of the pending switchmen's strike. I desire to read an article appearing in the Washington Post of this morning entitled "Great Northern Railroad Service Curtailed." In the course of the article appears this statement:

> A strike by 4,000 switchmen tightened its grip on five western and midwestern railroads while Federal mediators sought to prevent another walk-out that could tie up the Nation's entire rail system.

Mr. President, I emphasize the words "the Nation's entire rail system." I am sure that the Senator from Illinois will join with me in feeling that this dispatch from Chicago, in his own State of Illinois, signifies an intensely important and critical situation in the Nation at this time. The article continues:

> The switchmen's strike, which began Sunday, forced the Great Northern today to cancel all service on 12 branch lines.
>
> Great Northern spokesmen said pickets and the reluctance of nonstrikers to cross their lines made it difficult to maintain even limited service, although main-line passenger trains and some freights still were operating.
> Supervisory employees took over the job of loading ore boats at the Great Northern's huge docks at Superior, Wis., but the movement of iron ore from Minnesota's Mesabi range was running far behind schedule.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at this point in my remarks the entire article from which I have quoted may be incorporated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GREAT NORTHERN RAILROAD SERVICE CURTAILED

CHICAGO, June 27.—A strike by 4,000 switchmen tightened its grip on five western and midwestern railroads today while Federal mediators sought to prevent another walk-out that could tie up the Nation's entire rail system.

The switchmen's strike, which began Sunday, forced the Great Northern today to cancel all service on 12 branch lines.

Great Northern spokesmen said pickets and the reluctance of nonstrikers to cross their lines made it difficult to maintain even limited service, although main-line passenger trains and some freights still were operating.

SUPERVISORS LOAD ORE

Supervisory employees took over the job of loading ore boats at the Great Northern's huge docks at Superior, Wis., but the movement of iron ore from Minnesota's Mesabi range was running far behind schedule.

The Great Northern was the only one of the five roads attempting to operate. The Rock Island, Western Pacific, Chicago Great Western, and Denver & Rio Grande Western shut down completely.

Chairman Francis O'Neill of the National Railway Mediation Board called representatives into conference after talking yesterday with representatives of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen and Order of Railway Conductors.

The two unions, representing 250,000 rail workers, demand a 40-hour work week with no pay cut. The demand was the same that led to the switchmen's strike.

Under cooling off provisions of the National Railway Labor Act, conductors and trainmen will be free to strike after July 15.

O'Neill said he plans to confer also with M. G. Schoch, president of the A. F. of L. Railroad Yardmasters, who also threaten to strike after July 15 on the 40-hour-week issue.

In another dispute, 300 trainmen walked off the job in a working-rule dispute with the 43-mile Lake Terminal Road and threw 6,000 employees of the National Tube Co. into idleness at Lorain, Ohio.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, the Philadelphia Bulletin of June 27 in an article entitled "United States Tries to Bar New Rail Strike—Trainmen, Conductors, May Walk Out July 15," says, among other things:

> Suspension of freight service on the Great Northern slowed the loading of iron ore at the big Superior Wis., docks. Supervisory employees sought to load freighters, but said they were far behind schedule.
>
> The Great Northern is the largest shipper of ore from the giant Mesabi Range, and operates the largest dock on the Great Lakes at Superior.
> The Great Northern announced that it will close shops in five cities and lay off about 2,260 shop workers by Thursday. In addition, 3,500 seasonal employees were ordered laid off. The layoffs will bring to almost 38,000 the number of nonstriking—

I emphasize the word "nonstriking"—workers idled by the switchmen's strike.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the entire article from which I have read be incorporated in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES TRIES TO BAR NEW RAIL STRIKE—TRAINMEN, CONDUCTORS MAY WALK OUT JULY 15

CHICAGO, June 27.—Mediators began talks today to head off a threatened walk-out of 250,000 railroad trainmen and conductors as a strike of 4,000 switchmen against 5 western roads slowed iron-ore shipments on the Great Lakes.

The Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen and the Order of Railway Conductors, which threatened to strike against the Nation's railroads July 15 for a shorter workweek, sent representatives to meet with Francis O'Neill, Chairman of the National Railway Mediation Board.

"LITTLE REASON FOR OPTIMISM"

But W. P. Kennedy, president of the BRT, said there was "little reason for optimism at this late hour for a peaceful settlement."

The trainmen and conductors, who now work from 48 to 56 hours a week, demand a 40-hour week without reduction in pay. They rejected a Presidential fact-finding board's recommendation which refused the demand.

O'Neill held separate talks with the A. F. of L. Switchmen's Union and representatives of the struck Rock Island, Western Pacific, Great Northern, Chicago Great Western, and Denver & Rio Grande Western railroads.

The switchmen walked out Sunday to enforce demands for a 40-hour week without reduction in pay. All of the roads except the Great Northern shut down immediately, and last night that railroad slapped an embargo on livestock and perishable freight. The road said the embargo did not apply to other types of freight.

SLOWS LOADING OF IRON ORE

Suspension of freight service on the Great Northern slowed the loading of iron ore at the big Superior, Wis., docks. Supervisory employees sought to load freighters, but said they were far behind schedule.

The Great Northern is the largest shipper of ore from the giant Mesabi Range and operates the largest dock on the Great Lakes at Superior.

The Great Northern announced that it will close shops in 5 cities and lay off about 2,260 shop workers by Thursday. In addition, 3,500 seasonal employees were ordered laid off. The lay-offs will bring to almost 38,000 the number of nonstriking workers idled by the switchmen's strike.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, the New York News of today editorially has this to say:

The switchmen's strike on five western railroads threatens to produce an iron-ore shortage.

I digress, Mr. President, at this point to mention, not with fear of war, but because of the pending critical situation, the fact that the production and distribution of iron ore is of intensely great importance to the people of our Nation and to the people of the world. We are told here that the switchmen's strike threatens to produce an iron-ore shortage.

Continuing, the editorial says:

One of the lines affected, the Great Northern, normally carries about one-third of the iron ore hauled from Minnesota's Mesabi Range. Because of the A. F. of L. switchmen's walkout, the Great Northern is unable to go on with this vitally important work.

Then, Mr. President, I call to the attention of the Senate this further significant paragraph:

Meanwhile, three other big rail unions have consented to further mediation aimed at heading off a Nation-wide strike which they are legally free to call on or after July 15.

I pause to state that these two organizations announced on February 17, 1950, that a strike had been called for February 27, 1950, and that on February 24, 1950, the President of the United States issued an Executive order creating an emergency board to investigate the dispute.

Mr. President, in a press statement released on June 22, 1950, these organizations, the Order of Railway Conductors and the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, of class I railroads generally throughout the United States, stated that they had rejected the emergency board's report, while it happens that on that date, I believe it was, the carriers formally accepted the report.

I am not arguing this matter from the standpoint of either the carriers or the employees, but I desire to point out that this country is faced at this minute with strikes which may be called by these two organizations, the Order of Railway Conductors and the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, which can tie up the entire class I railroad system of the United States.

Under the existing Railroad Labor Act, these organizations are not free to strike until July 15, 1950. I note with pleasure the fact that they have consented to further mediation. But the fact that they have consented to further mediation is no assurance whatsoever to the effect that this strike may not occur on July 15, 1950, or any day thereafter, at the instance of these great important organizations of railroad employees.

Continuing, the editorial in the New York News of today states, referring to the three big rail unions to which reference has been made, which the article says are legally free to call the strike on or after July 15:

These organizations are the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, Order of Railway Conductors, and Railroad Yardmasters of America. Their total membership is about 325,000.

In view of the tense world situation, the three big unions have clearly done the patriotic and prudent thing in consenting to further mediation. It's almost impossible to believe that these men would tie up their country in knots at a time like this, whatever their grievances against the railroads might be.

How about the striking switchmen? They know their own business, of course, and what they are doing. But—

I emphasize this as strongly as I can by my voice—

But an iron-ore shortage is about the most dangerous single threat to a country which conceivably could soon find itself in another war.

I am quoting from the New York News of today. Continuing, the editorial says:

Wouldn't the switchmen be both patriotic and smart to call this strike off promptly, and agree to go back to work pending mediation of the differences between themselves and the railroads? This is a time for everybody in every vital industry to think of the Nation's interests first.

Mr. President, I call attention to the fact, first, as this editorial writer so clearly and graphically points out, these three organizations are legally free to call strikes on or after July 15, and that regardless of what may happen in the instant case because of patriotic motives, the fact remains that the law of our Nation should not permit at any time the exercise of such a vast power as is referred to here, to tie up in knots the transportation system of our country.

Mr. President, I have in my hand an excerpt from the Washington Times-Herald of today. I read a one-sentence dispatch which appears on the front page of that newspaper:

ST. PAUL, June 27.—The Great Northern Railroad canceled all service on 12 branch lines today due to increased picketing by striking A. F. of L. switchmen and increased reluctance of nonstriking employees to cross picket lines.

I have in my hand a clipping from the Baltimore Sun of today, and I should like to read that clipping into the RECORD:

RAILROAD STRIKE SHOWS NO BREAK—COAL MINERS, INDUSTRIAL WORKERS FORCED INTO IDLENESS

CHICAGO, June 27.—The spreading—

And I call attention to the word "spreading"—

The spreading railroad strike continued without sign of a break today and thousands of coal miners and industrial workers were forced into idleness.

I pause in my reading, Mr. President, to say that it is not the coal miners, it is not the industrial workers, who are striking. It is a comparatively small number of men who are engaged in this strike. But coal miners and industrial workers are nevertheless forced into idleness.

I continue reading from the Baltimore Sun of today:

John D. Farrington, Chicago, president of the strike-bound 8,000-mile Rock Island system, urged President Truman to intervene to end the strike of 4,000 A. F. of L. switchmen on five midwestern and western railroads.

"The President should back up the findings of his fact-finding board," Farrington said.

THINGS LOOK DIM

The switchmen are striking in protest against a June 15 recommendation of a Presidential fact-finding board. The board denied the request of 79,000 yard workers for a 40-hour workweek at 48 hours' pay. It granted the 40-hour week but with an hourly pay boost of only 18 cents.

The report also has brought strike threats from the Order of Railway Conductors and the A. F. of L. Yardmasters of North America.

Leverett Edwards, a member of the National (Railway) Mediation Board, said after a conference with railroad executives:

"Things look dim. There is no indication of quick settlement."

DEVELOPMENTS LISTED

These were the developments:

1. The railroad strike spread to the National Tube Co. at Lorain, Ohio, which closed down, making 12,000 employees idle. The shutdown followed a wildcat walkout last night by 300 plant railroad workers represented by the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen. The trainmen are protesting the same Government fact-finding board report that led to the switchmen's strike.

2. The Great Northern Railway, the only one of the five struck railroads attempting to operate, announced it is closing down 12 branch lines and locomotive and car repair shops in five cities.

3. Utah mines which used the strikebound Denver and Rio Grande Western laid off 5,000 coal miners.

These 5,000 coal miners, these 12,000 employees of the National Tube Co. are forced out of work and deprived of the opportunity to obtain wages, because of the strike on these five western and midwestern railways.

I have emphasized the effect of the strike on the Great Northern, the road which was thought, because of the small number of men in the switchmen's union which were employed upon it, would be able to withstand the strike. It now develops that there is a serious interference with the transportation of ore from the Mesabi Range, that great range of which we all know. Is there a Member of the Senate or of the House of Representatives or of the public who, particularly in this very hour in which we have had such historic and dramatic recitals of the existence of conditions in which our country is concerned can doubt the urgent importance of maintaining intact the production and transportation of iron ore?

The Great Northern Railway Co. has only 1,225 employees who are represented by the switchmen's union. The Great Northern Railway Co. serves 10 States: Wisconsin, Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, Iowa, Montana, Idaho, Washington, Oregon, and California. It operates 8,317 miles of road. The total number of its employees is 27,596. As I have indicated, those who are in the switchmen's union, namely, 1,225, are but a fraction, less than 5 percent, I believe, of the total number of employees.

The Great Northern Railway Co. serves St. Paul-Minneapolis, Duluth, Superior, Sioux City, Iowa, running west through the northern part of North Dakota and Montana to Spokane, Seattle, and Tacoma.

The tonnage handled by the Great Northern in 1949 was as follows: Products of agriculture, 9,152,060 tons. Animals and products, 485,811 tons. Products of mines—and I call particular attention to this item—31,546,319 tons. Products of forests, 3,849,148 tons. Manufactures and miscellaneous, 7,305,319 tons. Forwarder traffic, 76,224 tons. L. c. l., 295,376 tons. A total tonnage handled by the Great Northern Railway Co. for 1949 of 52,710,257 tons.

With this vast quantity of more than 31½ million tons of ore, who is there to say, Mr. President, that the interests of the public, yes, perhaps even the stability of our Nation in time, would be involved in a cessation of transportation of a vast tonnage of ore such as this?

I have referred to the other four railroads that are involved in this strike, the operations of which, as was pointed out in the New York Times of yesterday, had come to a standstill.

The Chicago Great Western Railway serves six States: Illinois, Iowa, Minnesota, Kansas, Missouri, and Nebraska. There are only 256 employees represented by the switchmen's union out of a total of 3,631 employees on the railroad. Yet, this approximately 7 or 8 percent of the total number of employees have caused the railroad to close down.

The number of miles of road operated is 1,480. The line runs from Chicago to Omaha, and from Kansas City to Minneapolis and St. Paul.

Mr. President, during 1949 the Chicago Great Western Railway Co. handled the following tonnages:

Products of agriculture	1,785,458
Animals and products	594,646
Products of mines	1,428,646
Products of forests	540,031
Manufactures and miscellaneous	3,658,096
Forwarder traffic	3,965
Less than carload lots	57,653
Total	8,068,495

The Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad Co. serves 13 States: Illinois, Iowa, Missouri, Minnesota, South Dakota, Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Louisiana, and Texas.

In addition to the number of States which are served by it, its importance as a carrier, both initially and connecting, is particularly evidenced by the cities which it serves, namely, Chicago, Minneapolis-St. Paul, Omaha, Denver, St. Louis, Kansas City, Galveston, Memphis, Oklahoma City, and Tucumcari, N. Mex.

The number of employees represented by the switchmen's union is 1,366.

The total number of employees on the railroad is 22,179.

The miles of road operated are 7,619.

During 1949, this railroad company, the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific, handled the following tonnages:

Products of agriculture	9,999,187
Animals and products	1,016,387
Products of mines	12,770,603
Products of forests	2,352,259
Manufactures and miscellaneous	11,985,033
Forwarder traffic	38,166
Less than carload lots	346,325
Total	38,507,960

The Denver & Rio Grande Western Railroad Co. has a total of 332 employees represented by the switchemen's union—only 332 out of a total number of 8,386 employees on the railroad. Yet that railroad, the Denver & Rio Grande Western, is one of the four which were reported in the New York Times of yesterday to be closed down at a standstill.

The number of States served by that railroad is three, namely, Colorado, New Mexico, and Utah.

The railroad line runs from Denver to Salt Lake City and Oklahoma City. It also serves many points in southern Colorado. It operates 2,413 miles of road.

The following tonnages were handled by the Denver & Rio Grande Western Railroad during 1949:

Products of agriculture	1,489,882
Animals and products	342,994
Products of mines	8,922,706
Products of forests	1,928,350
Manufactures	3,899,114
Forwarder traffic	83,405
Less than carload lots	49,973
Total	16,716,424

Mr. President, the Western Pacific Railroad Co., the remaining one of the five railroads involved in the present switchmen's strike, serves three States, namely, California, Nevada, and Utah.

The number of employees represented by the switchmen's union, the union which is striking, is only 188, out of a total of 5,108 employees of the railroad. Yet those 188 employees have brought to a standstill the operations of that entire railroad company.

The number of miles operated by the Western Pacific Railroad Co. is 1,195.

The line runs from Salt Lake City to San Francisco.

If I am not mistaken, it is the same railroad company which was interfered with in the recent firemen's strike, only about a month ago, although the strike itself initially was not called upon that particular railroad company.

During 1949 the following tonnages were handled by the Western Pacific Railroad Co.:

Products of agriculture	883,682
Animals and products	141,927
Products of mines	1,462,041
Products of forests	779,738
Manufactures and miscellaneous	3,115,793
Forwarder traffic	141,060
Less than carload lots	24,439
Total	6,548,680

Mr. President, this is a statistical survey indicating something of the seriousness of the pending, actual, existing switchmen's strike now in progress. I dare say that what I have given does not scratch the surface of the actual effect upon the millions of people along the lines of the railroads to which I have referred.

I hold in my hand a few telegrams. I shall not burden the Senate by reading very many of them. One is from the Burlington Terminal Elevator Division of the Russell Miller Milling Co., A. H. Anders, manager, at St. Joseph, Mo., received in Washington on June 23, 1950, addressed to myself. It reads as follows:

Urge you take whatever action necessary to forestall scheduled rail strike which greatly endangers wheat harvest and economy of Nation.

Mr. President, in a few moments, I shall refer a little more fully to the wheat harvest.

Then I have a telegraphic message from the Ralston Purina Co., by T. R. Atchison, of St. Louis, Mo., one of the very large industries for which our city, for I happen to come from the county of St. Louis, is justly proud. The telegram is addressed to me, and was received in Washington on June 23. It reads as follows:

Any interruption in service of Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific, Chicago Great Western, Denver & Rio Grande, Great Northern, or Western Pacific will cause great damage to hundreds of feeders of poultry and livestock located locally on one or the other of those lines with corresponding loss to our company and others similarly located. We respectfully urge that whatever governmental action necessary be taken to prevent strike of Switchmen's Union of North America, Sunday, June 25.

Then, Mr. President, I have here a telegraphic message from Alton Brick Co., St. Louis, Mo., received in Washington on June 24, addressed to myself, reading as follows:

Rock Island Railway has advised us of impending strike. Inasmuch as we have a plant located on the Rock Island track at Maryland Heights, Mo., any railroad strike would seriously affect our operations so vitally needed at this time in the housing-development operation now under way in St. Louis. Any efforts on your behalf to rectify this condition will be appreciated.

Housing development, Mr. President, should not be interfered with.

Then, a message which reached Washington on June 23, from the Beyers Lumber Co., 9020 Olive Street Road, St. Louis County, Mo., addressed to myself:

Contemplated strike by employees Rock Island Railroad Lines here will cause untold losses and hardship on our company as well as seriously delaying numerous housing projects now being supplied by us. Urge immediate enactment necessary legislation to avoid this condition.

Then, Mr. President, a telegraphic message which reached Washington on June 23, from L. C. Chase, president of the Merchants Exchange, of St. Louis, one of the great organizations of the Middle West, of its type, addressed to me, reading:

If contemplated switching strike set for 6 a. m., June 25, becomes a reality it will seriously handicap movement of new grain crop and greatly affect transportation facilities to the detriment of the public welfare and will create an emergency. This strike should be averted by appropriate legislation enacted promptly to deal with the situation.

Mr. President, I have in my hand a telegraphic message received in Washington today from Joseph C. Williams, president of the Commerce Trust Co., Kansas City, Mo., one of the great financial enterprises of the Midwest of the United States, addressed to me, and reading:

It is regrettable that the switchmen's union has completely ignored the recommendations of the emergency board created by Executive order of the President of the United States and called a strike against several of our Midwest and Western railroads. The strike will greatly handicap and affect the operations of many companies and individuals throughout the areas served by these railroads, and it is particularly unfortunate that the strike comes just as the new wheat crop is being harvested.

Mr. President, in order that any reader of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD may not inadvertently pass over this portion of the message, I am interrupting the reading of it to point out the particular unfortunate fact emphasized by Mr. Williams is that the strike "comes just as the new wheat crop is being harvested."

We greatly appreciate your interest in preventing strikes of this nature and we urge that everything possible be done to settle the controversy on an equitable basis as quickly as possible.

Then, Mr. President, I have in my hand a telegraphic message from Mr. F. V. Heinkel, president of the Missouri Farmers' Association, one of the great farm organizations of the State from which I have the honor to come, received in Washington on June 23, addressed to me, and reading:

The strike on the Rock Island and four other western railroads, called by the switchmen's union for 6 a. m. June 25, will be a devastating blow—

Mr. President, I emphasize by my voice the words "a devastating blow." I continue the reading:

to Missouri farmers because of new wheat harvest—

And I emphasize by my voice the words "new wheat harvest"— which will begin next week. M. F. A.

That is an abbreviation for the Missouri Farmers Association.

M. F. A. Exchanges and grain elevators located on the Rock Island at Union, Beaufort, Gerald, Owensville, Bland, Freeburg, Argyle, Meta, Henley, Eugene, Eldon, Versailles, Stover, Ionia, Windsor, and Chilhowee will be unable to market the new wheat crop for farmers in their communities. Many other independent grain elevators at other points on the Rock Island will be unable to market wheat for farmers in their communities. The strike will create a national emergency which will not only cost Missouri farmers thousands and thousands of dollars but will affect our entire national economy. If it takes legislation to do so, we ask that such be promptly enacted to avert the impending threat to our economy.

Then, Mr. President, I have in my hand a telegraphic message from Washington, although signed by Irving F. Lyons, president of the National Industrial Traffic League, 101 California Street, San Francisco, Calif., received at Washington, June 26, addressed to me, and reading:

Strike of Switchmen's Union North America which represents but 5 percent total number of switchmen employed by railroads already threatens serious interference with movement Nation's commerce. This strike on five western roads effective yesterday was called despite that the Fact Finding Board had made its recommendations behalf demands of remaining 95 percent of switchmen. Believe every effort should be made to have strike group at least call off its action for the 30-day cooling period until July 15 which the other unions will be required to respect—

Mr. President, I pause to call attention to the fact that the other unions are the Order of Railway Conductors and the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, as earlier indicated. I return to the reading of the message from Mr. Lyons:

In hope that negotiations in interim may result in settlement thus making this strike absolutely unnecessary. Your good offices to that end respectfully urged thus preventing serious injury American business. Present international situation is no time for work stoppage.

Mr. President, there is a vast amount of good hard common sense in that and in the other messages I have read. The statement, "present international situation is no time for work stoppage" certainly strikes home to every member of the Senate, and I believe to the people of the country.

The last message I shall read is from the Skelly Oil Co., A. F. Winn, Traffic Manager, Kansas City, Mo., received in Washington June 24, 1950, addressed to me, and reading:

With the threat of switchmen's strike on five big rail lines extending Chicago to Pacific coast and its disastrous consequences to the citizenship and the economy earnestly urge that this move be smashed through passage of S. 3463 and House companion bill or any other emergeny legislation calculated to overcome this menacing situation which has come practically on the heels of another strike both growing out of railroad unions' refusal to accept findings of Presidential boards. Now is high tide grain movements in West and impairment would be tremendously disastrous to say nothing of other considerations. Congress being people's last line of defense appealing to you accordingly.

Mr. President, I have in my hand an editorial from the Philadelphia Bulletin of yesterday, which reads as follows:

ANOTHER RAIL STRIKE

AFL switchmen's strike against five major western railroads points again to the shortcomings of our National Railway Labor Act. These railroad workers have complied with all the provisions of that law with reference to mediation and a cooling-off period. The same was true of the Railroad Brotherhoods that struck last month for another fireman on Diesel locomotives.

I pause, Mr. President, to remind the Senate that the strike of last month continued for 6 days on behalf of the firemen. I continue reading from the editorial from the Philadelphia Bulletin:

On July 15 the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen and the Order of Railway Conductors will be entitled under the law to strike if they are unwilling to accept the recommendations of the Presidential Board.

The Railway Labor Act does not forbid strikes, but it sets up machinery of arbitration and mediation that for years preserved peace along the rails. Congress recognized by that act the national importance of preventing a breakdown or stoppage of service on the railroads.

Mr. President, I emphasize as strongly as I can, the last sentence that "Congress recognized by that act that national importance of preventing a breakdown or stoppage of service on the railroads."

The editorial continues:

That objective is now seriously threatened.

Railway workers think they are entitled to as high a wage as those, for example, given in the automobile industry. The trouble is the railroads are not making the profits earned by the auto manufacturers. On the contrary, the roads are making the fight of their lives against stiff competition from other means of transport. Government ownership or subsidies from Government to private owners may not be what the railroad unions want, but it may be the outcome of their tactics.

Mr. President, I have in my hand an editorial from the Washington Evening Star of yesterday, entitled "Totally Unjustifiable," which reads as follows:

The strike by 4,000 A. F. of L. switchmen against five western and midwestern railroads is one more nail in the coffin of the Railway Labor Act.

This statute does not forbid strikes.

I pause, Mr. President, to say that the bill which I advocate, Senate bill 3463, the one which was mentioned in one of the telegrams which I read a few minutes ago, does forbid strikes, and lockouts by carriers as well, in disputes which arise out of or in connection with a dispute falling within the purview of the Railway Labor Act.

The editorial from the Washington Evening Star continues:

It was intended to prevent rail strikes, however, by setting up under Government auspices procedures for the settlement of disputes which would be fair to both parties and which would protect the public against loss of an essential service.

I pause to point out that Senate bill 3463 leaves intact, and, as I see it, with even greater safeguards, the provisions in the Railway Labor Act for the settlement of disputes under means set forth in the existing act, but, nevertheless, it provides also that the settlement which shall be made by the various boards shall be final and binding upon the parties, and that a strike shall be unlawful in the instances cited.

The editorial continues:

For a while the law worked fairly well. Then the unions discovered that they could have their cake and eat it, too—that they could get everything recommended by the Presidential boards set up under the law and then strike for, and get, still more. The result is that the Railway Labor Act is breaking down and its usefulness is virtually at an end.

The switchmen's strike is no exception. The union wants, and has obtained, a 40-hour week instead of a 48-hour week. All that remains is the question of what the men should be paid for the shorter workweek. The union wants the same pay—the equivalent of an increase of 31 cents an hour. A Presidential board has compromised that issue by recommending an 18-cent hourly increase. This was accepted by the railroads, but the union rejected it and called the strike.

Dr. Gordon S. Watkins, a member of the board which made the settlement recommendation, says that the strike is "totally unjustifiable." But the rail unions do not have to justify their strikes. The cards are stacked in their favor and they know it.

Mr. President, in view of the statements made in that editorial, I again want to point out that I am not here as an advocate of either the railroads or the unions. My interest is the broad interest of the public, which, of course, includes the railroads and the employees as part of the members of the public, but it includes, likewise, a vast number of other persons who are neither railroad owners nor employees.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there may be set forth in my remarks at this point an editorial appearing in the Baltimore Sun of June 26, 1950, entitled "Another Rail Strike."

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ANOTHER RAIL STRIKE

For the third time since the end of the war the United States is face to face with a strike in important elements of its railroad transportation system. With 4,000 switchmen off the job on five Midwestern and Western railroads, operations on four of the lines have come to a complete halt. The East is not likely to feel the effects of the walkout, at least for some time, but the problem involved is one which affects the whole country.

As in the case of the strike of locomotive firemen last month, the switchmen's walkout involves only a segment of the country's rail network. Perhaps the switchmen have deliberately adopted the piecemeal approach to avoid the possibility of Government seizure. But whatever the reason for limiting the action, the fact remains that the men are off the job, operations have ceased, and we are compelled to realize that the Railway Labor Act is not working as it was designed to do and indeed as it did work for many years.

So far as the law is concerned, the switchmen are within their rights in walking off the job. They have met the conditions which the law imposes. But the exercise of that right cuts across a larger public right. In our vast country the great lines of transport are vital to the functioning of the whole economy. A strike on the railroads directly and immediately affects the national welfare and is of eventual direct concern to every citizen.

For years the machinery of the Railway Labor Act appeared adequate to protect the broad public interest. Increasingly, now, it appears that this is no longer the case. Whatever the merits of the strikers' position in the current dispute, it is becoming evident that our way of handling labor disputes in the vital area of rail transportation should be opened to review.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at this point in my remarks there be printed an editorial from the Christian Science Monitor of June 27, 1950, entitled "Not Merit Enough."

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NOT MERIT ENOUGH

The Switchmen's Union (an A. F. of L. affiliate) thus far has stayed within the terms of the National Railway Labor Act in its dispute with the railroads. Its current strike against four western roads also remains in line with the letter of the law. But we doubt that the union leaders who so earnestly worked for the passage of this measure ever intended that it be used as it has been in the last few years.

Judge T. Alan Goldsborough, at a pertinent point in a court hearing a couple of years ago, recalled that he was in Congress when the bill for the rail law was debated. The chiefs of the rail unions, said he, gave Congressmen strong assurance that were the proposed system of waiting periods, mediation, and fact-finding put in effect, a strike would rarely if ever occur.

The switchmen have now followed the firemen, within a space of less than 2 months, in pretty well repudiating that assurance. And the American public is sure to ask the question: What is their justification?

The switchmen have been demanding a 40-hour week for 48 hours' pay—a 31-cent-an-hour increase. A Presidential fact-finding board considered this demand along with similar demands of other unions of yard employees, and recommended a 40-hour week with an 18-cent increase.

The roads accepted the finding. The switchmen rejected it. The union's statement that it is striking for a 40-hour week such as the rest of industry enjoys is therefore not borne out by the facts. The merit of the union's case, then, must rest on its contention that it had not been heard separately by the fact-finding board and upon the obvious fact that its members want more money.

But has it merit enough to excuse a strike in a public utility—enough to justify carrying still further a course of action which can only break down the very law which was designed to bring fair treatment to the railroad worker and uninterrupted service to the public? We doubt that the American people will think so.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I have spoken this afternoon not in an endeavor to give a comprehensive or all-inclusive statement of the effects upon the national economy of a strike such as the one which is now in progress. It has been the thought of some members of the labor union, as the testimony before the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare indicates and demonstrates, that they could perhaps evade, or avoid, if I may use that term, the operation of the Presidential emergency action by calling a strike only upon a part of the railroads of the country, thus not making it possible for the President, in their opinion, perhaps, to go before a court and secure an injunction on the ground of the existence of a grave national public emergency.

Regardless of whether this device be followed—and it has been followed; it was followed in the case of the firemen's strike a few weeks ago; it is being followed this very minute in the strike to which I have been referring, in the West and the Midwest; it may be followed in connection with the Order of Railway Conductors and the Railroad Trainmen—but the fact remains that, piece by piece, section by section, community by community, these great interferences with the transportation systems are vitally and disastrously affecting the people of the Nation. So, Mr. President, this afternoon I most earnestly again emphasize, as I have on a number of previous occasions, the utmost importance of the enactment, and, I would say, the prompt enactment, into law of Senate bill 3463 because of the great public interest involved. The bill makes unlawful, as I have indicated, any strike or any lock-out arising out of or in connection with a dispute falling within the purview of the Railway Labor Act.

It is not a bill which undertakes to extend to industry generally the provisions of compulsory arbitration. Personally, I am opposed to any such extension. It recognizes the pecular situation in the transportation industry, the vital importance of the maintenance of transportation, and the fact that in this particular industry there exists a condition which cannot and does not prevail in any other industry of the country. The bill proposes to apply a remedy which is effective, proper, and logical.

So, Mr. President, I urge the Senate to give full consideration to this bill. I urge upon the Senate that it act and act without delay in connection with it.

THE KOREAN WAR SITUATION

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, the capital city of Seoul has fallen, and the Communist forces are now approximately 20 miles south of that city. That development underscores the importance of the prompt action by the United Nations and its members.

Yesterday the vote of the Security Council was 7 to 1. There was one absentee, the Soviet Union. Yugoslavia voted in opposition. Two nations abstained. They were India and Egypt. They abstained because of difficulties in getting in touch with their governments. The seven votes were furnished by Great Britain, France, the United States of America, China, Cuba, Ecuador, and Norway, Under the United Nations Charter seven votes were required to adopt a resolution. The action underscores, I believe, the importance of the fact that the Republic of China remained as a member of the Security Council, rather than being unseated, as some persons in high places in the United Nations had previously advocated, because without the vote of the Republic of China there would not have been the necessary majority required under the United Nations Charter.

Mr. President, I have been concerned by some discussion on the floor of the Senate today and some statements issued by the executive branch yesterday, with particular reference to the proposal that our support of the Republic of Korea should be limited to the area south of the thirty-eighth parallel.

From a military point of view, the main bases and depots of the aggressive Communist forces in North Korea are military objectives of the first priority. The interdicting of reinforcements before they reach the area south of the thirty-eighth parallel is essential. The entire drive of the Communist forces is being supplied and resupplied from ports, bases, and depots north of the thirty-eighth parallel.

The action this Government is taking is a police action against a violator of the law of nations and the Charter of the United Nations. It seems to me to be absurd to suggest that all air bombardment should be in the territory of the victim of this overt aggression. The criminal aggressor should not feel secure in his lair, for it permits him to continue his build-up in an area he does not have to bother to defend. It is utterly unrealistic that the aggressive Communists should be allowed to feel so secure.

EXTENSION OF RENT CONTROL IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington would like to address an inquiry to the majority leader, the distinguished senior Senator from Illinois. Would it be agreeable to the Senator from Illinois to have the vote on the District of Columbia rent control conference report taken at an early hour during the session tomorrow?

Mr. LUCAS. It would be very agreeable to the Senator from Illinois to vote at a quarter to 12, 11:30, or at any time which is agreeable to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. CAIN. Does the Senator suggest that the Senate convene at 11 o'clock tomorrow?

Mr. LUCAS. Yes.

Mr. CAIN. The Senator from Washington has conferred with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER], who is presenting the supporting data for the conference report, and the Senator from Tennessee is agreeable to voting at 11:30 in the morning following a quorum call.

Mr. LUCAS. That would be acceptable to me, Mr. President. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate on tomorrow, following the quorum call after convening at 11 o'clock, proceed to vote on the conference report on the District of Columbia rent-control bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. CAIN. Reserving the right to object, I wonder if it would be acceptable if immediately after the quorum call, assuming that the Senate convenes at 11 o'clock, 15 minutes be made available for debate, to be shared equally by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER] and the Senator from Washington, only for the purpose of restating the position which they take.

Mr. LUCAS. I modify my request to that extent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the unanimous-consent request, as modified, is agreed to.

The unanimous-consent agreement as entered into was subsequently reduced to writing, as follows:

Ordered, That on the calendar day of Thursday, June 29, 1950, immediately following a quorum call upon the convening of the Senate, the consideration of the conference report on the bill (S. 3776) to amend and extend the provisions of the District of Columbia Emergency Rent Act, as amended, shall be resumed; and that after 15 minutes debate thereon, to be equally divided between Mr. KEFAUVER and Mr. CAIN, the Senate shall proceed, without further debate, to vote upon the question of agreeing to the said report.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, the junior Senator from Washington has no desire to impose at length on the time of the Senate. However, he does not believe that a vote should be taken on the District of Columbia rent control conference report until every Senator is fully aware of the issues involved, and until there is some likelihood that most Senators will be present to vote on the question. The agreement which has just been arrived at is evidence of the fact that a vote will be taken tomorrow morning, beginning approximately at 11:30 o'clock. In the next few minutes the junior Senator from Washington will attempt to establish the reasons why he thinks it would be wise for the Senate to reject the conference report.

In the opinion of the junior Senator from Washington the conference report should be rejected for the following several reasons: The first is that when the Senate recently took action on the District of Columbia rent control extension bill, every Senator, with one exception, namely, the junior Senator from Washington, agreed that a 6 months' congressional extension with authority delegated to the Commissioners to extend the rent act in whole or in part for an additional 6 months was completely adequate to satisfy conditions prevailing in the District of Columbia. This position was advanced in the nature of an amendment offered by the Senator from Washington, and was accepted by the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia and also by the Senate of the United States as a whole. By its acceptance of that amendment the Senate made it very clear that District of Columbia rent controls as initiated by the Congress were to die on the last day of December 1950.

Mr. President, I would draw to the attention of the Senate the fact that on June 12th, the Senate voted 36 to 28 to continue Federal rent controls throughout the United States of America for a 6 months' period beginning on the first day of July, 1950. We should not, therefore, forget that what the Senate of the United States thought was proper for the rest of the Nation it will think improper for the District of Columbia should the Senate tomorrow morning agree to accept the conference report.

Federal rent controls will die throughout America on the last day of this year, December 31, 1950. Should the District of Columbia rent control conference report be accepted by the Senate, Federal rent controls will not die in the District of Columbia, I think every Senator on both sides of the aisle will agree, until 30 days later, that is, on January 31, 1951.

Another reason for opposing the conference report, in my judgment, is that if the conference report is accepted District rent controls will not be terminated until January 31, 1951, and at a time when the Congress is in session. This would leave with Congress the authority to continue controls beyond January 31, 1951. In its Federal rent control extension law the Congress decided to leave the determination of whether controls should be continued in communities throughout the land for a period of 6 months after the end of 1950 up to municipalities, not up to the Congress. The Senate District rent control extension law provided for a similar determination to be vested in the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. The conference report ought to be rejected because a large majority in the House of Representatives and in the Senate have previously decided that federally initiated rent controls should expire on December 31, 1950.

A third and important reason for resisting and rejecting the conference report, in my opinion, is that in the Senate bill a real effort was made to provide the Commissioners of the District of Columbia with authority to determine the future rent-control needs of their community. For one of the very few times during which the Senator from Washington has been a Member of the Senate, the Senate sought to treat the District of Columbia, not as a stepchild, not as a forgotten child, not as an unimportant person but as an American community, and as the Senate and the House of Representatives had previously agreed to treat every other American city.

If we in the Senate accept the conference report it can truly and properly be maintained that the Congress has once more treated Washington, D. C., our Nation's Capital, and the greatest capital city in all the world, as a second-rate community, undeserving of the degree of confidence and respect which has been granted to every other American city.

Fourth, Mr. President, the Senator from Washington and others of like mind will seek to have the conference report rejected because if we believe in the principle of home rule for the District of Columbia, we shall reject the Conference report. If we stand firm in support of the Senate's original intention to provide the Commissioners of the District of Columbia the authority to determine whether rent controls shall be continued in whole or in part within the District for 6 months in 1951, we shall have offered real evidence that we seek to provide the District of Columbia with home rule characteristics whenever that is possible. By such action we shall allow the District Commissioners to act as every self-respecting city council in America is permitted and enabled and required to act. By such action we shall grant to the citizens of the District of Columbia an opportunity to petition their Commissioners, as every other American citizen can do, in offering his views to his city council. To fail to reject the Conference report is for us to publicly state that when we talk about the need for and virtue of providing the District with home rule characteristics, we either do not understand what we are talking about or we do not mean what we say.

Mr. President, the Senator from Washton and others who share his views will seek to have the conference report rejected for another reason. Before I mention that reason, I ought to express my surprise at the attitude and the position taken by the distinguished Senators who were members of the conference which decided to recede from the Senate's position to do for Washington, D. C., what the Senate decided to do for the rest of the Nation, in an effort to provide a special favor for the District of Columbia which Members of this body, out of their own considered wisdom, thought was not right or proper or fair for the rest of the Nation.

The conferees were headed by the very distinguished Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER], who is known I think as the prophet of all those who desire home rule within the District of Columbia. The other two members of the conference were the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LEAHY] and the distinguished Senator from Maine [Mrs. SMITH]. It should be stated, and I do so without any criticism of any kind, that so far as I know, each of those three Sentaors has on a good many occasions spoken of the glories that will come when home rule in some effective fashion is provided for the citizens of the District of Columbia.

Yet, Mr. President, in this particular instance, when an opportunity was provided through which the Commissioners of the District of Columbia would have an opportunity to decide a purely local problem, the members of the conference, representing both the Senate and the House, for reasons of their own, thought it wise to recommend to this body that we accept a report which would deny to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia the same right to exercise some responsibility which not 3 weeks ago the Senate and the Congress and the President imposed upon every other municipality in the United States.

Mr. President, the fifth reason why the Senator from Washington will seek to reject the conference report I shall now state. In this instance the Senator from Washington can speak only for himself, for he wishes to say that he will vote to reject the conference report because of his own individual self-respect. The Senator from Washington will not tolerate a conference report recommendation which would provide rent control protection to him as a resident and as a tenant of the District of Columbia, which is greater in amount of coverage than is the rent control protection provided for millions of other American citizens and tenants who live beyond the confines of the District of Columbia. It will never be said of the junior Senator from Washington that he sought protection which he was not willing to provide for others.

In the considered judgment of the Senator from Washington it would be far better for the District of Columbia to have no rent controls at all than to have rent controls which constitute a special and unwarranted privilege. It seems to me, Mr. President, that any Senator who either voted for or against an extension of Federal rent controls must vote to reject the District of Columbia rent control conference report on the fundamental premise of principle which the Senator from Washington has just offered.

Mr. President, on June 22 the Senate accepted an amendment offered by the Senator from Washington to the District of Columbia rent control bill which would parallel the rent-control laws for the rest of the Nation. In order that Senators who may have an opportunity to read the RECORD in the morning before the vote is taken may know exactly what that amendment was and what the Senate sought to accomplish by adopting that amendment, I now wish to read it.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. CAIN. Certainly.

Mr. THYE. Could the District Commissioners adopt any kind of rent-control measure in the absence of action by Congress?

Mr. CAIN. When the Senator from Washington first became aware of the intention of the House of Representatives to provide for a 7-month extension of rent controls within the District while recommending a 6-month extension for the rest of the country, the Senator from Washington did what his friend the Senator from Minnesota would have done under comparable circumstances; he sought information on the question. The Senator from Washington asked the question which the Senator from Minnesota has just addressed to me, to Mr. Vernon West, the corporation counsel of the District of Columbia. Mr. West replied that if the standards within the bill were adequate, the District of Columbia could be given, as a delegated right, the authority by the Congress to extend rent controls for a 6-month period or for any other period. The Senator from Washington wanted to be very certain that he was not misguiding the Senate of the United States, so the amendment which the Senator from Washington now wishes to read for the record was prepared, as it ought to have been prepared, by a competent legal authority, the corporation counsel of the District of Columbia. It is his opinion, though a test in court might prove him wrong, that the intention of the amendment, to offer the right to the District Commissioners to extend or not to extend rent control within the District for a 6-month period, is completely legal and proper.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. CAIN. I yield.

Mr. THYE. Then it is the Senator's opinion that if the rent control for the District is extended until December 31, the Commissioners who govern the District, in the absence of action by Congress, would then be able to institute some type of rent control that could be extended for 6 months or any additional time that they would deem advisable?

Mr. CAIN. The Commissioners would not be able under the circumstances related by the Senator from Minnesota to extend rent controls of any kind. The type and character of rent controls which they could extend are either defined specifically in the amendment which the Senator from Washington now wishes to read into the RECORD or in the basic District rent-control law which was first written in 1940.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. CAIN. I am pleased to yield.

Mr. THYE. The question I want to make certain to have answered is simply this, that the Senator does not involve the District Commissioners in an extension of rent control that they cannot either impose or administer in the absence of action by Congress. That is the only question with which I am concerned.

Mr. CAIN. And a thoroughly legitimate question.

Mr. THYE. Because December 31 will come during the recess period of Congress. Congress will not reconvene until next January. Therefore we should be positive that the act provides that the Commissioners may extend the rent control if they deem it advisable, or that we have given them the legal right to do so.

Mr. CAIN. The Senator from Minnesota was recently I think among those Senators who voted for a Federal extension of rent controls from June 30, 1950, to December 31, 1950, while at the same time providing any authorized city or county body within this country could extend rent controls within their area of jurisdiction for an additional 6 months. The Senator from Washington, through the amendment to which he has referred, wished to do for the District of Columbia no more and no less than what the Senate thought was proper to be done for the rest of the country.

I would suggest to my colleague from Minnesota that he need have no concern of any kind unless he assumes that Mr. Vernon West, the Corporation Counsel of the District of Columbia, and the one legal authority to whom the Commissioners turn for advice and counsel, does not know his business. The Senator from Washington takes it to be a basic fact that Mr. Vernon West, in having been the Corporation Counsel of this community for a good many years, is thoroughly and competently qualified to make a decision concerning the legality of the amendment which the Senate only several weeks ago thought so proper that they accepted it without a dissenting vote; except that on a voice vote there was a single "nay" by the Senator from Washington.

I should like to add, however, that on that occasion there were few Senators present, and it seemed to me that had there been more Senators present a good many of them would have voted "nay" as did the Senator from Washington.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. CAIN. I yield.

Mr. THYE. I am quite certain that the majority of the Senators knew what was to be discussed and what was to be voted on, and how the vote would go. Had they had strong convictions and had they desired to record dissenting votes they would have been present.

Mr. CAIN. Perhaps the Senator is correct. If he is, that is a fundamentally important thing. The Senator from Minnesota has said in substance that rent control can be very important, so far as the rest of the Nation is concerned to the Senate of the United States, but when the Senate begins to consider a need or a lack of need of rent controls in the District of Columbia a majority of our colleagues are not sufficiently interested in it to register their opinion one way or the other. With all due respect, I beg to differ from that point of view, because I think most Senators have a great fondness for the District of Columbia and a respect for it, though because of their busy schedules they do not always give it the attention which they admit it deserves.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CAIN. I yield.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, in order that the RECORD may be clear on this question, the Senator from Minnesota will say that he was not casting any reflection upon the importance of extension of rent control in the District of Columbia. I am certain that the Senator from Washington would not wish the RECORD to appear as if I were attempting to minimize the importance of extension of rent control in the District of Columbia, because I believe that the persons who are seeking places to live in the District of Columbia are confronted with just as grave a problem as are the persons seeking a place in which to live in any of the other cities of the Nation outside the District. My purpose in referring to the fact that the question was voted upon by a voice vote was to show that the question had been debated and discussed at such length that the majority of the Members of the Senate knew exactly how the vote would go. The measure was permitted to pass by a voice vote. Irrespective of whether there had been a quorum call or not, the question rested before the Senate at the time in such a manner that if any Senators had been fearful that the measure would not have passed, they would have been present on the floor and would have voted. I am sure Senators knew the measure would be passed on a voice vote; otherwise the yeas and nays would have been called for.

Mr. CAIN. No; I merely think that on that occasion the Senator from Minnesota was absent, and does not happen to be aware of the facts surrounding the case.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to make a further observation?

Mr. CAIN. Certainly.

Mr. THYE. I have been here on the floor of the Senate during all the discussions of rent control, and I am sure a great many other Senators have likewise been present and have wondered, also, why there was so much debate.

Mr. CAIN. I ask the Senator from Minnesota to take the time to refer, at his convenience, to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of June 22, which was the one only day during which discussion of rent controls for the District of Columbia occurred in the Senate. If the Senator will read the colloquy which took place——

Mr. THYE. I was present then.

Mr. CAIN. And if he then will tell me that it took more than 30 minutes——

Mr. THYE. As I have just stated, I was present at that time.

Mr. CAIN. I am sure the Senator will not be able to say that more than 30 minutes was devoted to debate on a great property question which is equally as important to the citizens of the District of Columbia as it is to the citizens throughout the United States. That is one reason why tomorrow at 11: 30 a. m. every Senator will be given an opportunity to vote as he thinks best on the question of whether rent controls shall be continued within the District of Columbia. Tomorrrow every Senator will be given the opportunity to vote either to provide the District of Columbia with a privilege which the Senate did not provide to the rest of the Nation, or to vote the intention of the Senate to see to it that the committee on conference recommends that we do for the District of Columbia only what we do for Philadelphia, Charleston, Tacoma, Seattle, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Phoenix, Houston, and all other municipalities.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CAIN. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. I should like to inform the Senator that in Charleston rents have been decontrolled.

Mr. CAIN. I am very much aware of that fact, and I am happy about it.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HILL in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. CAIN. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. Is the Senator aware of the discussion had on that subject, particularly in reference to what was said by the senior Senator from Georgia?

Mr. CAIN. Yes.

Mr. LANGER. In reference to what the senior Senator from Georgia said, under the proposed amendment would the Commissioners for the District of Columbia be able to extend the period of rent controls in the District of Columbia for more than 6 months after December 31?

Mr. CAIN. The answer is "No." The amendment provides the Commissioners with authority to extend rent controls for an additional 6 months, beginning on the expiration of the Federal law on December 31, 1950.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. CAIN. Certainly.

Mr. LANGER. If the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington should not become a part of the law, then would the Commissioners have authority to extend rent control in the District of Columbia for more than 6 months additional?

Mr CAIN. Let me say to the Senator from North Dakota that on June 22 the Senate passed its version of the District of Columbia rent-control-extension law. That version provided for a 6 months' extension, as a congressionally initiated project, and provided authority to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to extend rent controls in the District of Columbia for an additional 6 months.

On the other hand, the House of Representatives provided that rent controls should be extended in the District of Columbia from June 30, 1950—Friday of this week—for 7 months, to expire on January 31, 1951.

The House version and the Senate version of the bill being different, the two versions of the bill were sent to conference. The conference report now before the Senate contains the House version of the bill. If the Senate accepts the House version of the bill, that will mean that if rent controls are to be extended in the District of Columbia beyond January 31, 1951, that determination must be made entirely, not by the District of Columbia Commissioners, but by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. CAIN. I am glad to yield.

Mr. LANGER. At that time, of course, if the Senate wishes to do so, the Senate could extend rent controls in the District of Columbia for more than 6 months; at that time the Senate will have authority, if the House of Representatives concurs, to extend rent controls in the District of Columbia for longer than 6 months, will it not?

Mr. CAIN. That is quite correct. I should like to be extraordinarily frank in this matter, however, Mr. President. The Congress and the President have determined, with reference to the rest of the Nation, that the next session of the Congress of the United States shall not be given an opportunity to consider extending rent controls throughout America. However, if we adopt the House version of the bill, thus providing for a 7 months' extension of rent controls in the District of Columbia, that will put the Congress in the position of being able to extend rent controls in the area in which the Members of Congress live, although they have precluded that possibility for the 150,000,000 Americans who live outside the District of Columbia.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at this point?

Mr. CAIN. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. That is exactly the point the senior Senator from Georgia made, is it not?

Mr. CAIN. The senior Senator from Georgia was indicting the Federal rent-control bill the Congress passed; he was indicting it as being unconstitutional. As I recall, he went on and said that in his opinion it would be perfectly proper for the Congress to extend rent control within a community, as it saw fit to do.

The amendment of the Senator from Washington, which was accepted on June 22, by a large majority of the Members of the Senate, continued Federal rent controls within the District of Columbia for 6 months, and then provided an opportunity for a further extension of rent controls in the District for an additional 6 months by action of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. CAIN. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. Perhaps I can refresh the memory of the Senator from Washington. It is my recollection that the senior Senator from Georgia specifically said he was opposed to a continuation of rent controls outside the District of Columbia.

Mr. CAIN. That is quite correct.

Mr. LANGER. But, as I recall, the senior Senator from Georgia said he was differentiating entirely in his mind between the District of Columbia and the rest of the country.

Mr. CAIN. The senior Senator from Georgia said, as I recall, that although he was vehemently in opposition to a continuation of the rent-control law, nevertheless, he was prepared, because he thought rent controls were yet needed in the District of Columbia, to vote for an extension of rent controls within the District of Columbia.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. CAIN. Certainly; I shall appreciate any question the Senator asks.

Mr. LANGER. I have not read the Senator's amendment; but does it propose anything which would prevent a continuation of rent controls in the District of Columbia after June 30, 1951?

Mr. CAIN. Yes. Let me say again that the amendment, which was accepted a few days ago by the Senate, provides that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall have authority to extend rent control up to, but not beyond, June 30, 1951.

Mr. LANGER. Then just what will be the effect, so far as that is concerned, if we adopt the amendment of the Senator from Washington?

Mr. CAIN. There is no doubt about that, I hope, in the mind of anyone. The effect is that when June 30, 1951, arrives, there will no longer be any rent controls in the District of Columbia. If my amendment is adopted—or, to put the matter in another way, if the conference report is rejected, and if the conferees later recommend an extension of 6 months and then 6 months more—the Commissioners of the District of Columbia might very well decide, upon examination, that there was no need to extend rent controls in the District of Columbia beyond December 31 of this year.

Again for the information of Senators, Mr. President—and I am proceeding with my remarks as rapidly as I possibly can—I should like to read the amendment as it was recently approved by the Senate:

That section 1 (b) of the District of Columbia Emergency Rent Act, as amended (D. C. Code, 1940 ed., sec. 45-1601 (b)), is hereby amended (a) by striking out "June 30, 1950" and inserting in lieu thereof "December 31, 1950, unless the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, prior to December 31, 1950, shall declare by resolution that a shortage continues in one or more classes of housing accommodations which requires the continuance of the provisions of this act with respect to such class or classes of housing accommodations, in which event the provisions of this act and all regulations, orders, and requirements thereunder shall continue in force and effect with respect to such class or classes of housing accommodations until—

Parenthetically, I may say, "but not beyond"—

June 30, 1951, and (b)—

I should like to call the second part of the amendment to the attention of all Senators, because I think it deserving of their consideration:

and (b) by adding at the end thereof, the following sentence: "The term 'classes of housing accommodations' as used in this section shall be deemed to be without limitation and may include categories of housing accommodations by location or geographical area, by monetary rental, or by types."

I know that my friend, the Senator from North Dakota, will permit me to say that if the conference report is rejected, and if we provide for the District of Columbia, through this amendment, substantially the same rights as those which have been provided under the Federal law throughout the land, we shall carry out a great wish. The amendment which I have just read carries out the intention of the Congress, which has been often repeated during the 4 years I have been in the Senate. In our declaration of purpose concerning rent-control laws, it is obvious that the intention is to decontrol rents wherever practical and whenever possible. This amendment is so written that it would provide the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, through advice coming to the Commissioners from the administrator of rent controls in the District, with authority to decontrol rents whenever in their joint opinion rents could safely be decontrolled, either as to price or as to location or as to character. With perhaps one or two exceptions, I have never heard a Senator maintain that rent controls ought to become a permanent part of America's social and economic structure; indeed, the foremost proponents of rent controls in this body in recent years have been the first to say: "We dislike rent controls; we want to do away with them, but we do not think the time for doing so has arrived." The way in which this amendment has been prepared, not by the Senator from Washington but by the corporation counsel of the District of Columbia, would provide machinery through which decontrol could become effective at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. President, there are, it seems to me, but one or two other things which should be suggested, as all of us overnight will consider what our wishes are with respect to the rent-control conference report. If the conference report is accepted, it will mean, unless the Congress deems it otherwise proper, that rent controls in the District of Columbia will expire on January 31, 1951.

The Senator from Washington is not an authority on the mechanics of the Senate, but he has always found it to be a fact that very little, if any, major legislation, and indeed very little minor legislation, is ever enacted in the month of January. As a very strong opponent of rent controls for several years, the Senator from Washington could more conveniently to his own point of view favor a conference report which practically guaranteed the termination of rent controls within the District of Columbia on the last day of January 1951.

But what seems important to the Senator from Washington is not the question of who is right in regard to this problem, but the question of what is right; and on the assumption that we have done a proper thing as a Congress for the rest of our great country, I seek through my opposition only to make as certain as I can that the Senate of the United States will provide no more and no less opportunity for either eliminating rent controls or continuing them in the District of Columbia than we have done on the basis of our considered judgments and votes for each of the 48 States which make up the Nation.

Mr. President, I trust that Senators will give consideration to these views, and that a large number of them will be inclined to, and will, vote against a conference report which does not present to us the position so recently taken in the Senate of the United States.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Swanson, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (S. 3571) to continue the authority of the Secretary of Commerce under the Merchant Ship Sales Act of 1946, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. HART, Mr. BONNER, and Mr. WEICHEL were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 492) making temporary appropriations for the fiscal year 1951, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled joint resolution (H. J. Res. 492) making temporary appropriations for the fiscal year 1951, and for other purposes.

AUTHORITY TO SIGN JOINT RESOLUTION DURING RECESS

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President of the Senate be authorized to sign the enrolled joint resolution (H. J. Res. 492) making temporary appropriations for the fiscal year 1951, and for other purposes, during the recess of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah? The Chair hears none and it is so ordered.

RECESS

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I move that the Senate stand in recess until 11 o'clock tomorrow morning.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 47 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Thursday, June 29, 1950, at 11 o'clock a. m.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate June 28 (legislative day of June 7), 1950:

MISSISSIPPI RIVER COMMISSION

E. F. Salisbury, of Missouri, to be a member of the Mississippi River Commission, vice Edward Flad, retired.

IN THE NAVY

The following-named officers of the Navy for appointment in the grade and corps indicated:

For temporary appointment as a commander in the Supply Corps:

Charles A. Baldwin

For temporary appointment as lieutenant commander in the Supply Corps:

Robert E. Whelan

For permanent appointment as ensign in the Civil Engineer Corps:

Benjamin E. Weeks

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 28, 1950

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, our Father, humbly and reverently we would approach Thy throne of grace, offering unto Thee our prayer of adoration, thanksgiving, supplication, and intercession.

Grant that in these days of strife and confusion, of storm and tumult, when many are tempted to yield to despair and defeatism, we may carry on in the glad assurance that the Lord of hosts is with us, and the God of righteousness is our refuge and strength.

Unite us with all who are faithfully and heroically striving to safeguard our heritage of liberty. May we understand more clearly that freedom can only be the sure and abiding possession of those who have the courage to defend it.

Illumine our minds and hearts with a vision of that blessed day when righteousness shall be gloriously triumphant. May the spirit of the Prince of Peace in whose name we pray be the strength of our souls, His truth our light, His presence our joy. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Carrell, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed, with an amendment in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 5002. An act to incorporate Reserve Officers Association of the United States.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 1672. An act for the relief of Efrosini Abad

SUBCOMMITTEE ON PANAMA CANAL AFFAIRS

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Subcommittee on Panama Canal Affairs may have permission to sit during general debate today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

PEACETIME DRAFT

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I was stunned on yesterday to have to vote for draft in peacetime. Mr. Truman used his powers in going into Korea to force us to an issue giving him the power to call forces of arms together, our boys to arms, war if necessary. They scarce us to vote power to the President. He gives up none but wants more. I voted for it, notwithstanding I thought it wrong in principle, because I want a united front to help the United Nations to act as a unit to defend weak countries the world over to stop one strong power from swallowing up the small, weaker nations. I wanted to help the United Nations to be strong and work together. This is the test for them. If they do not work together, act together, stick together, and do it now, then henceforth I do not propose that they let us do all to protect these small nations of Europe, Asia, and Africa.

On yesterday the Military Affairs Committee did just what they promised on Monday they would not do—that was give such power to the President to draft in peacetime. They said they would demand that Congress be called together to act on such a grave problem. The Korean situation changed this in such a short time.

I am for a strong America to take care of America and the American people.

I am not for wrecking America to save any country or any people in the whole world.

If that be tyranny, make the best of it.

THE UN HISTORIC DECISION ON KOREA

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Speaker, by approving the historic resolution offered by the United States calling for military action by its cooperating members necessary to halt aggression, the Security Council has taken a path which leads to success for a world organization seeking to maintain peace and security rather than the failure which met the League of Nations.

The difference between the United Nations and the League is the United States—the difference is between Korea and Ethiopia—all the world should understand that. We are determined that the United Nations shall have the power necessary to maintain peace and also that we, the most powerful Nation on earth, shall submit ourselves to its discipline. The nations on the Security Council who hesitated, India and Egypt, and the one that voted against, Yugoslavia, should today, in the clear light of the morning after, understand that peoples and civilizations can be destroyed by just such hesitation; they should give especial thanks for the democratic process of the United Nations which caused them to be overruled and for the decision of the United States to act. The hopes of the free peoples, whose only hope is a world of justice, should be high today.

TOWNSEND OLD-AGE SECURITY ON THE MARCH

(Mr. ANGELL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and include a brief excerpt from a magazine.)

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, while H. R. 6000, now in conference, is a step forward in old-age security, it is still a long way from the goal of a sound old-age security program based on universal coverage and pay-as-you-go. It is interesting to note from the current issue of United States News and World Report in its Newsgram column the following reference to the Townsend program. As the author of H. R. 2136, one of the bills embracing the Townsend old-age security program, I am particularly interested in this forward-looking comment in this outstanding magazine:

Pension checks for retired persons will be raised by October.

Checks for retired man and wife often will exceed $100 a month. Checks to single retired persons will reach up to $75 and above for some.

Retired persons will be allowed to earn $50 a month on the side.

Retirement will be made a little more attractive. Idea of "ham and eggs," or "$30 every Thursday," promoted in the 1930's, will be about realized. Townsend plan of $100 a month for every person aged 65 will come into sight. This plan, regarded as crackpot 15 years ago, doesn't seem so remote now.

Trend of old-age insurance, in fact, is toward the flat-pension idea. It is toward a rather uniform benefit for all reaching a fixed age, with cost to be supported in important part out of general taxation on a pay-as-you-go basis.

Millions not covered by old-age pensions will be covered in months ahead.

Little-business men are to come in. Cost, up to $81 a year for a pension that someday might return $121 a month. Lawyers, doctors, dentists, and engineers definitely are left out. They wanted it that way for the time being.

Housemaids come in. Cost, 1.5 percent of income up to $3,600 a year, to be payable both by maid and her employer, but housewife probably will get the bill. Actual cost, $36 a year on an income of $1,200 a year. There's this other point: Many housewives now do not report income of maids for purpose of income tax. Maids may prefer income-tax escape to a future pension, but the housewife can't take a chance on that and will be wise to report all income.

As suggested in this statement, we are gradually approaching the Townsend plan, and the committee proposal in the Senate amendment to H. R. 6000 to study this whole subject of old-age security with particular reference to the Townsend plan should bring to the forefront sound old-age-security legislation based on universal coverage on a pay-as-you-go basis, as advocated in the Townsend proposal.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. THOMAS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include a plan by the President's Council of Economic Advisers to make a detailed study of the economic situation in the Southwest.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in three instances and include extraneous matter.

Mr. ARENDS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.

REDUCTION IN EXCISE TAXES

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 8920) to reduce excise taxes, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, H. R. 8920, with Mr. DELANEY in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee rose on yesterday the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] had consumed 36 minutes; and the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] had consumed 52 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON].

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, the pending bill, H. R. 8920, was favorably reported by the Committee on Ways and Means by a vote of 17 to 8 after some 5 months of very thorough and careful consideration.

The bill provides for substantial reductions in wartime excise taxes amounting to approximately $1,000,000,000, and contains provisions which will make up the loss of the revenue resulting from the excise-tax reductions. It is well recognized that there is now a deficit in our Federal Treasury. A short time ago that deficit was estimated to be about $5,000,000,000. The most recent estimate that I have seen is that it will probably run about $3,500,000,000. Your committee felt that such revenue as might be lost by the reduction or repeal of excise taxes should be made up from other sources so that the effect of this bill would not be further to increase the deficit in the Federal Treasury, and we have a very clear indication from the President of the United States that he would not see fit to approve legislation which further increased the Federal deficit at this time.

The need for excise-tax relief, however, was called to the attention of the Congress by a message from the President of the United States on January 23, 1950.

The pending bill provides for reduction in excise taxes on transportation of property, transportation of persons, telephone and telegraph communications, retail taxes on jewelry, toilet preparations, luggage and furs, and many of the manufacturers' excise taxes. It also includes certain provisions to adjust other excise taxes to correct certain inequities that have developed under the excise-tax program.

The adjustments in the excise taxes are not restricted to 1943, because these taxes were also increased by the acts of 1941 and 1942.

Your committee attempted to recover the loss of revenue by reason of the reduction of excise taxes by the closing of loopholes, and secured as large a part of the revenue from that source as possible. The loophole-closing provisions contained in this bill will replace more than half of the revenue lost by the excise-tax reduction. The balance is accounted for by an adjustment in the corporation income-tax rates. As a result, there will be no permanent loss of revenue under this bill.

For the next 5 years there will be a substantial increase in the net revenue collections as the result of the provision included in the bill reducing the time for corporations to pay their income taxes on the previous year of tax liability. It is estimated that in a full year of operation the offsetting revenue provided under the bill will approximately balance the $1,000,000,000 of loss in excise taxes.

It is thought that the repeal of these excise taxes will stimulate and encourage business to the extent that something like $100,000,000 of additional revenue will be received from individual and corporation income-tax payers.

The major items accounting for the additional revenue with respect to the closing of the loopholes are the withholding on dividends from corporations, the changes in tax treatment of charitable and educational institutions, the revision of taxes on life-insurance companies, the change in the treatment of loss by the sale of business assets, the reduction in the interest rate on tax refunds and the increase in the corporate rate. The effect for a full year's operation of the loophole closing provisions contained in this bill will amount to about $465,000,000, and it is estimated that the full year effect of the change in the corporate rate will amount to about $433,000,000.

It is the conviction of your committee that the corporation income tax is about the fairest source to which we could turn for the additional revenue that is so very badly needed. It will be remembered that in the Revenue Act of 1945 corporation taxes were reduced and the excess-profits tax was entirely repealed.

We know that in the Revenue Act of 1945 there was also a reduction in the income taxes for individuals, and something like 12,000,000 individuals were removed from the tax rolls. In the Revenue Act of 1948 there was a further reduction of individual income taxes. The result is that of the additional taxes imposed to help finance the recent war, all of them have received some relief except these excise taxes. That is the only field of taxation embraced among the increases that were made that has not received some relief up to this time.

It might be of interest to refer to page 3 of the committee report. Table 1 appearing there, summarizes the estimates of the revenue effect of the committee bill. It will be observed that the excise-tax reduction on a full year's basis will amount to a loss of revenue of about $1,000,000,000, and for the fiscal year 1951 a loss of about $690,000,000. The increase in income taxes resulting from the excise-tax reduction on a full-year basis will amount to an increase of $100,000,000 and for the fiscal year 1951 an increase of $20,000,000, so that the effect of the excise-tax reduction on a full-year basis will mean a net loss of revenue of about $910,000,000, and for the fiscal year 1951 a net loss of about $670,000,000. Offsetting additional revenue from the withholding tax on dividends on a full-year basis will increase the revenue about $170,000,000, and for the fiscal year 1951 an increase of about $70,000,000. The provisions relating to charitable trusts, family foundations, educational institutions, and so forth, on a full-year basis will yield an increase of revenue of about $100,000,000. Miscellaneous loophole provisions on a full year of operation will produce about $115,000,000 of additional revenue. The life-insurance company provision will produce on a full-year basis about $70,000,000 additional revenue, and for the fiscal year 1951 an additional amount of about $166,000,000.

The reduction of the rate of interest on refunds of Federal taxes will result on a full year basis in about $45,000,000 increase in revenue, and the corporate rate changes will produce on a full-year basis about $433,000,000 additional revenue, so that the total offsetting additional revenue will be an increase of about $898,000,000 on a full-year basis, and for the fiscal year 1951 about $1,214,000,000.

Attention is invited to table 2 appearing on page 20 of the committee report which shows the excise tax reductions in detail, and table 3 appearing on page 23 of the committee report, which compares the excise-tax revenue under the present law and the pending bill. One of the principal sources of additional revenue is the revision of the corporation rate structure. The bill makes a substantial change and simplification in the corporation tax rate structure. Under the present law, for corporations with taxable net income of $50,000 and over, there is a 24 percent normal tax rate and a 14 percent surtax rate, or a total rate of 38 percent. However, in order to give encouragement to small business, there has been, for many years, a lower rate for corporations with not to exceed $25,000 of net income. For corporations with income of not to exceed $25,000 we have three brackets under the present law. The first is for corporate income not to exceed $5,000. The normal tax rate there is 15 percent, the surtax rate 6 percent, or a total tax rate of 21 percent.

For the next $15,000, the normal tax rate is 17 percent, the surtax rate 6 percent, or a total rate of 23 percent.

For the next $5,000, the normal tax rate is 19 percent, the surtax rate is 6 percent, or a total rate of 25 percent.

The effective rates on income in this area of $25,000 and under range from 21 percent for corporations with incomes of $5,000 or less to 23 percent for corporations with incomes of $25,000.

As the 38 percent rate applied to corporations with taxable income of $50,000 and over is applicable to the entire taxable income of the corporation under present law, there is provided what is termed a "notch" for corporations with income between $25,000 and $50,000. In other words, if we did not have this so-called notch provision the corporation making $25,001 would catch the higher rate of 38 percent. For a number of years this notch provision has been included to provide for the tapering-off of the 23 percent rate of tax for corporations with taxable income of $25,000 until the 38 percent rate of tax at $50,000 of corporate income is reached.

I think it is a real contribution that the committee has made under this bill in removing this notch with the complications that result from it.

The rates under the pending bill I think are much simpler in application than the present complicated system with a notch, which provides one set of rates for corporations with income of not more than $50,000 and another set of rates for corporations with income over $50,000.

The bill provides for the following corporate tax rate:

There is a $25,000 surtax exemption. Then there is a flat 21 percent normal tax rate and a flat 20 percent surtax rate. This means that a corporation with an income of less than $25,000 will pay a flat 21 percent normal tax and no more. A corporation with income in excess of $25,000 will pay a normal tax of 21 percent on its entire taxable income plus a surtax of 20 percent on that part of its income in excess of $25,000.

Tables 3 and 4 appearing on pages 24 and 25 of the committee report compare corporate income tax liabilities and the effective rate under the committee bill with those under existing law.

Table 5 shows the increase or decrease resulting from the pending bill.

Under this bill the tax liability for corporations with incomes of $5,000 or less will remain the same as under the present law. For incomes between $5,000 and approximately $167,000 the bill provides for decreases in the tax liability. This reduction would be for about 170,000 corporations. Only about 20,000 of the large corporations of the country would pay any additional tax.

For incomes above approximately $167,000 the bill increases the tax liability, but the increases never quite reach the effective rate that would be produced by a simple increase of 3 percentage points in the corporate rate. The top normal and surtax rate never reaches the 41 percent, because all corporations are exempt from the surtax on the first $25,000 of taxable income.

The rate changes provided in the bill will apply to the taxable years beginning after December 31, 1949. It is estimated that the tax rate revision made by the pending bill will increase net corporate tax collections in a full year of operation by $433,000,000.

This bill eliminates the notch rate by providing a flat $25,000 surtax exemption which applies to all corporations.

There are some interesting tables appearing in the committee report on page 25 which show the effect of the application of this new corporation tax-rate structure. By examining that table and other tables appearing in the committee report, it will be seen that for all corporations with taxable net incomes of not more than $5,000 there will be no change from the present law with respect to the tax liability. For the corporations between $5,000 and approximately $167,000 there will be a slight reduction.

For corporations with taxable net income above $167,000 there will be a small increase. By looking at the table to which your attention has been invited, it will be seen that a corporation with $10,000,000 of taxable net income will pay an additional tax of about $295,000.

Mr. Chairman, considerable time was taken from the committee yesterday for the consideration of this bill, and I shall not ask your indulgence much longer.

But, Mr. Chairman, I would like to take just a moment more to reply further to the question asked yesterday by the distinguished Delegate from Hawaii with respect to the provision included in this bill in connection with the exemption from tax of transportation to Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands. The question was asked as to why Hawaii and Alaska were not included. I would like to call attention to the fact that the Constitution requires that duties, imposts, and excises must be uniform throughout the United States. The term "uniformity" has been construed by the Supreme Court to mean geographical uniformity, the Court stating that "a tax is uniform when it operates with the same force and effect in every place where the subject of it is found"—Head Money cases (112 U. S. Repts., p. 580). That is, a tax cannot be levied at one rate in one locality and at another rate in another locality upon the same object or business, nor may Congress exempt from taxation taxpayers of a certain class located in one part of the country and not taxpayers of the same class living in another part of the country.

The term "United States" has been construed, for purposes of the uniformity clause, to include Alaska and Hawaii, which have been incorporated into the United States. Therefore, it would appear unconstitutional to levy a Federal tax on a ticket purchased in one part of the United States and exempt a ticket purchased in another part of the United States, or to exempt a ticket purchased for transportation to one part of the United States and tax a ticket purchased for transportation to another part of the United States. On the other hand, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands are not a part of the United States, having not been incorporated into the United States, and are, therefore, not subject to the uniformity clause—Downs v. Bidwell (182 U. S. 244); Neuss, Hesslein and Co. v. Edwards (24 F. (2d) 939); see also Binns v. United States (194 U. S. 486).

Moreover, if the committee had exempted travel to Alaska and Hawaii from the transportation tax, there is a strong probability that the entire transportation tax on persons would be held invalid, thus causing a loss in revenue of almost $200,000,000. The committee was unwilling to assume this risk.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield.

Mr. STEFAN. The transportation tax from Alaska and Hawaii is still in force, under this bill?

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. STEFAN. How about the transportation tax from Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands?

Mr. COOPER. That is exempted, under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. STEFAN. Then would that not make it possible for people in the United States who want to evade the transportation tax to mail a letter to Puerto Rico or the Virgin Islands and buy a round-trip ticket without paying the transportation tax?

Mr. COOPER. Of course there might be some opportunity for evasion. However, the committee has been assured by the Bureau of Internal Revenue that every administrative precaution possible will be taken to prevent that. We have a situation now under which there has been some complaint of evasion of transportation tax by people writing to Canada, or one of the adjacent countries, enclosing money for the purchase of tickets.

Mr. STEFAN. I was going to bring that up.

Mr. COOPER. But we have been assured by the Bureau of Internal Revenue that they have been taking steps to correct that situation, and we are encouraged to believe from information received that it is being reasonably well taken care of.

Mr. STEFAN. My information as of today is to the effect that the transportation people are encouraging travelers to evade the transportation tax by purchasing their tickets outside the borders of the United States. Some airlines have set up offices in Canada and other places in order to sell these tax-free tickets, with the result that the United States Government is losing millions of dollars through the evasion of this transportation tax.

Mr. COOPER. The committee has received some information to that effect and has made an investigation of it; and, as I stated a moment ago, from the information we have received we are encouraged to believe that the situation is being corrected.

Mr. STEFAN. The Internal Revenue Bureau issued an order as of last September discouraging this evasion of transportation taxes, but in spite of that, they are still evading them.

Mr. COOPER. I regret I cannot yield to the gentleman further. We have looked into the situation and are trying to correct it.

Mr. FARRINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield to the distinguished Delegate from Hawaii.

Mr. FARRINGTON. I very much appreciate the clear explanation that has been made of the committee's position on this issue, as the representations in behalf of exempting the outlying areas from this tax came originally from the Territory of Hawaii, as a result of an amendment to the bill extending the excise taxes that exempted travel to foreign countries from this tax. I understand that it is the committee's point of view that the constitutional objection alone is what has caused them to deny this exemption to Alaska and Hawaii.

Mr. COOPER. As I endeavored to point out, the committee felt that the constitutional question involved was quite serious.

Mr. FARRINGTON. If that were overcome, the committee would be perfectly willing to extend this exemption to the Territories?

Mr. COOPER. I am unable to pass on that now, but I am unable to see how the Territory is going to overcome it, because Alaska and Hawaii are Territories of the United States, and there is some indication that they will be States. If they become States they certainly cannot expect preferential treatment, because you cannot levy one tax for Maine and another for California and another for Michigan and another for Texas; there has to be uniformity throughout the United States. If Alaska and Hawaii become States, then, of course, they take the same relative position as all other States in the Union.

Mr. FARRINGTON. I thank the gentleman for his compelling argument.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS. It is a fact, is it not, that the committee gave this its most sympathetic consideration?

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. JENKINS. There is absolutely no way to grant this exemption, because to make it uniform would mean the setting up and establishing of zones. Then, too, a person living in Massachusetts would be just as close to California as one who lived in Hawaii. It would, therefore, be simply impossible under the present circumstances.

Mr. COOPER. The committee feels that under the Constitution it cannot be done.

Mr. SCUDDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield.

Mr. SCUDDER. I am very much interested in the discriminatory effect on long distance hauls particularly from the West and as applied to Hawaii. It seems to me that the committee could provide some system whereby there would be a more uniform tax. I believe that has been covered very well in the coal tax; the tax on coal is a specified amount per carload or per ton. That principle should apply, it seems to me, on long distance hauls; because, coming across the entire continent, it does not seem right that the tax rate should be based on the freight bill. To ship a carload of beef or a carload of fruit from California to New York entails a rather burdensome tax, whereas the same type of product shipped a shorter distance pays a lesser tax.

We have felt that the tax, regardless of how it is paid, should be on a sliding scale, maybe starting off with a certain tax of 3 percent and then have it reduced to a 1 percent tax which would give greater benefit to the long haul people. We do not feel that it is right to tax a freight bill or a passenger ticket.

Mr. COOPER. I appreciate the observation made by the gentleman from California.

DEMOCRATS GRANT EXCISE-TAX RELIEF THE REPUBLICANS PROMISED

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, as everyone knows and as my record clearly shows, I was against the imposition of wartime excise taxes and increases in excise tax rates, and have been fighting for their repeal since the end of the war. These taxes have absolutely no relationship to ability to pay—the fundamental test of any sound tax. Failing to prevent the imposition and increase in these taxes, it was on my motion that a provision was inserted in the Revenue Act of 1943 providing for the termination of these taxes 6 months after the close of hostilities of World War II. It was at my insistence that the report on this bill stated that these taxes "were justified only in view of the wartime emergency." Under the provisions of that act, these taxes would have terminated on July 1, 1947.

When the Committee on Ways and Means was considering the Revenue Act of 1945, it was again on my motion that a provision was inserted terminating these excise taxes on June 30, 1946—1 year before they would have been terminated by the provision of the Revenue Act of 1943. This provision was struck out in conference.

In the Eightieth Congress, I introduced H. R. 4708 which would have repealed wartime excise taxes and wartime excise tax rates. Again, on the day the Eighty-first Congress convened I introduced H. R. 43 providing for their repeal.

Although H. R. 8920 does not go nearly as far as I would like to see it go, there is some measure of relief provided for industries and services which are hardest hit by these burdensome and regressive taxes. It is still my position that all these "super-duper" sales taxes should be repealed.

I would like to make it clear, however, that I would not like to see this done by increasing the expected deficit of the Government at a time when the country is enjoying an unparalleled prosperity and national income. Big corporations, in particular, are reaping the highest profits in their history.

For a moment, I would like to comment on the charges that H. R. 8920 is a phony tax bill. If it can be said that granting tax relief to millions of low-and-middle-income groups who are still paying wartime excise taxes 5 years after the end of World War II, without any reference whatever to their ability to pay; that granting excise tax relief to the many industries that have suffered greatly from the continuation of these wartime taxes; that a constructive effort to relieve unemployment in affected industries; that granting relief to new and small corporations; and that transferring part of the tax burden from industries hardest hit by wartime excise taxes to a few of the most prosperous corporations—amounts to a phony tax bill, then this is a phony one.

The only thing phony about this bill is that, in contrast to the rich man's tax bill which was passed over the President's veto in the Eightieth Congress, we are granting relief not only to the small corporations, furriers, jewelers, and small businesses in general but, most important of all, to the consumer.

If we really want a good illustration of phonyness, let us take a look at the Republicans' record, particularly as to their sincerity in granting excise-tax relief. In the Eightieth Congress, contrary to their campaign promise to cut or eliminate excise taxes, they made them permanent in the first important tax bill they passed. Why? The answer, we all know, was so they could pass the rich man's income and estate tax relief bill. If ever there was a case where actions speak louder than words, this is one. To say the least, their sudden concern over excise-tax relief comes with poor grace.

Of course, we are told, we should reduce excise taxes by reducing Government spending. Apparently, there are people who are still living in the horse-and-buggy days before the two World Wars when we were going our way and letting the rest of the world go hang. It is interesting to note that social-security extension and military training have been listed by the Republicans as being among the items where "there should be a drastic reduction in Federal expenditures."

The easiest path for any group responsible for taxes is to reduce them. It takes moral courage to increase them.

Now, let us see what the revisions increasing taxes are which are causing so much concern. First, the bill grants tax relief to all corporations with incomes between $5,000 and $167,000. One of the major and most desirable revisions is relief from the present unduly high rate of 53 percent on corporate incomes between $25,000 and $50,000. When the corporation's income reaches $167,000, there would be an increase in taxes, but this increase averages less than 2 percent for all corporations affected due to the fact that the notch rate is eliminated.

The hue and cry is no more than one would expect from the protectors of big business. It is interesting to note that of around 350,000 corporations only around 15,000 of the very largest and most profitable would have their taxes increased by H. R. 8920. As a matter of fact, many of the industries' spokesmen have stated that they would be willing to pay higher corporation taxes to get excise-tax relief.

In any event, no one can doubt the sincerity of this Congress in wanting to grant some measure of excise-tax relief. Unlike the Republican Eightieth Congress, the Democratic Eighty-first is fulfilling the promise of reduction of the wartime excise taxes made when these taxes were imposed.

Even though H. R. 8920 is a step in the right direction, it leaves many of the wartime excise taxes untouched and provides too small a reduction for many others. I will not be satisfied until all of them are repealed in their entirety.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, I have no prepared speech and shall speak extemporaneously. I wish to pay a compliment to the very able staff that cooperates with the Committee on Ways and Means in its arduous duties. I think I can say to the membership today that this report which this staff has put out for us is one of the finest documents of its kind that could possibly be prepared. The reason I say that is because I know that all of you keep files on these important matters of legislation so that you may have available the important material about every important bill. If you follow my advice with reference to this matter and keep a copy I think you will be glad this report also contains the minority report which you will also find to be a lucid and convincing document.

Another thing I want to say about this staff—and I can say it most impartially because the staff is selected primarily by the party in power, which would be the Democratic party—we have a staff assisting the Committee on Ways and Means some members of which are outstanding tax authorities of the Nation. There is no question about it. I know that they could command much higher salaries than they receive if they should engage in that kind of private employment. Here is the reason I make this statement. There come to my desk very often inquiries in regard to taxes which inquiries I feel I cannot answer adequately. Having been a member of the Committee on Ways and Means for 17 years I naturally would be expected to know something about taxes. But I frequently get questions that I cannot answer. I am sure all of the Members of the House and of the committee get tax questions they cannot answer. I do not want to add to the burdens of this staff, but if you will take your problems to them or through a member of the committee ask their assistance in respect to your problems you will get an answer very gladly and you will get the right answer every time.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MASON. I have been a student of taxation for over 30 years. There are many inquiries come to my desk about the technical provisions of the tax bill that I cannot answer. I refer those inquiries to the staff and they do give me the answers.

Mr. JENKINS. Yes, I am sure that the experience of the gentleman from Illinois is the experience of the membership generally. Many of you will remember Mr. Beaman who was chief of those who draft legislation. I thought that he was an outstanding man from the standpoint of mental ability. He had an incisive determining mind that was very hard to surpass When he left I thought we would not get anybody to take his place, but, you know, there are young men coming along who are men of promise. We have them on this staff and they have done a fine job on this bill. In addition to the members of the committee who complain that they worked long and arduously on this legislation, these unsung heroes who sit in the back seats are deserving of a fine compliment. And Mr. Chairman, I must not fail to mention Mr. Davis, the clerk of the committee, and his fine assistants who render fine service day after day.

Now, Mr. Chairman, briefly I want to discuss this bill. I appreciate most Members have made up their minds as to how they are going to vote. Argument will not convince them. But tax bills are tremendously important and should be considered carefully.

Let me call attention to the title on the first page of the bill. This title is as follows: "To reduce excise taxes and for other purposes." I want to speak to the Republicans for a minute about that first phrase, "To reduce excise taxes." That part of the title belongs to the Republicans. We are responsible for that part of the program. We have been calling for this reduction for months. This other part "and for other purposes" belongs over on the Democrats and New Dealers side. We will give it to them most happily and let them do whatever they please with it, because it will be a real job for them to justify it. However, to be serious, the reduction of excise taxes does belong to the Republicans. We have been the pioneers in this matter; we have been in the forefront and I know I can say most emphatically that if we had had our way we would have had excise-tax reductions long before this. We could have had excise-tax reduction in 3 weeks after the Congress convened in 1949 if it had been agreeable to the majority in power. If this had been done many of the business concerns in the country would have been greatly pleased.

There is a reason why we did not get excess tax reductions earlier. My good friends on the other side of the aisle have never shown any inclination to reduce these taxes because the President had indicated that he could not get along without this money. They shout to high Heaven that at one time most of us Republicans voted to extend the time of these excise taxes—when we voted it was at the request of the President and practically every Democrat voted as we did. Why do they refer to the Eightieth Congress so complainingly? I have repeatedly asked all these Democrats and New Dealers why, if the tax bill passed by the Eightieth Congress did not suit them, why have they never at any time sought to repeal that tax law or at least some portion of it? Why has not the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] or some other prominent Democrat made an effort to remove what they complain about? Why? Because they have got to have the money. I will tell you, it is a fact, and a sad fact, this man Harry Hopkins pronounced a great truth when he said, "We tax and tax and tax so that we can spend and spend and spend and elect and elect." That is the truth. It is the sad truth about this whole program, and that is the reason for the last part of this title "and for other purposes."

Let me say to you that we have reduced the excise taxes by a billion dollars, which is a great thing to contemplate in these modern times when nobody but Republicans in Congress want to cut down extravagances and effectuate any other kind of economies. I will leave it to anybody who wants to criticize me on this proposition. If it had not been for us Republicans these excise taxes would not have been reduced more than half that amount. Why? The Democrats were always confronted with the proposition of what will we do to balance what you take from us? It never occurred to them to stop spending. The word "economy" never occurred to them. I have said on this floor and say it again that I have never heard and I have never read where Mr. Roosevelt ever used the word "economy." I have never seen that word in any of his writings or in any of his speeches after he was elected the first time. He talked about economy constantly before he was elected but never after he was elected. If you can show me where he used this word "economy," I will stand corrected.

While we are talking about economy, I have never heard Mr. Truman use that word either, and neither have I seen it in any of his writings. I would like for somebody to point out to me any time that he recommended economy. That is the trouble that confronts you of the Democratic side. You have got to raise the money; you have got to raise the money "for other purposes," and you have got to do it all the time, and you cannot do what you want to do or what you know you ought to do. Why? Because the President says he will veto the bill. The threat of a veto should not terrify you into inaction. Now, then, my friends, that is a very serious proposition. I dislike very much to see the President's threat scare you. But it has been done in this case. The Ways and Means Committee has surrendered its sworn duty under the Constitution to levy taxes and to introduce bills for raising revenue. The President was exceeding his authority when he sent up his message and sent out the word "I will veto the bill." My dear friends, when will we get around to resenting an intrusion of the Executive into the exclusive jurisdiction of the Congress? Are we ever going to stand up and do our constitutional duty even if we must, in effect, tell the President to mind his own business? This is a serious matter and I demand that the chairman and the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee assert their rights. Let us talk about this business of veto a little more. The right of the President to veto is a very important provision of democracy. That was put into the Constitution for a very definite purpose. That was not put there for the President to exercise it capriciously as he pleased. It never was the intention of those who wrote the Constitution that he should have the right to veto a bill just because he did not like it. In fact, he should recognize the fact that the Constitution has specially provided that all tax matters should be initiated in the House of Representatives. And that all legislative matters are within the jurisdiction of the Congress. So long as Congress stays within its constitutional jurisdiction the President should have nothing to say. Likewise the Congress should stay out of matters specifically within the jurisdiction of the President. The intention of the framers of the Constitution was that he should veto only when the Congress was glaringly wrong. The veto is a hallowed power given to the President, not a power that he can blatantly brag about and boast about. Since the Democrats on the committee have yielded to his threats, he will blatantly say "I scared them out." And he can prove it. My colleagues on the Democratic side, you got scared of the President's veto and you went to work on this bill and you crept around and you taxed everybody you could tax. You taxed the poor widow, for instance, who has an insurance policy, and you taxed everybody that you could grab a nickel off of in order to meet the President's threat. Now, if you do not think that is true, you can answer me in your time. It makes me feel bad to think that we are surrendering the power to legislate, surrendering it to the threat of the President. When a President tells us what we have got to do, I do not like it, and I hope, if I am here when we elect a Republican President—I do not know when that will be, but from all indications soon—this spend and spend and elect and elect will be done away with forever. Spend, spend, elect, elect has been a magic program with you gentlemen. You have always been able to spend yourselves into office and perpetuate yourselves, but there is one outstanding fact in this orgy of spending from the day the Democrats took over in 1930 down to this time, that the country has never been in balance but 2 years. Yes; you can say that that was the terrible Eightieth Congress. That was the majestic Eightieth Congress, the masterful Eightieth Congress—yes; the Congress that had the courage to cut taxes and reduce expenses and save the Government money and balance the budget, the only time it has ever been done in the last 20 years.

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS. Let me say to my distinguished friend from New York, I should not yield to anybody at this time when we are getting along so well, but he is such a fine, irresistible character that I have just got to yield to him.

Mr. LYNCH. Was it not the Eightieth Congress that made the excise taxes permanent?

Mr. JENKINS. Well, no, no. That is a proposition that I have not time to go into now. The answer is "No." The gentleman is absolutely wrong. No Congress can pass a law that another Congress cannot repeal. There is no such thing as permanent law. I can answer any criticism of the very splendid tax bill passed in the Eightieth Congress by saying that the Democrats have been in power now for two years and neither the President nor any Democrat in Congress has tried to repeal one word or line of that tax law.

While I am talking about the gentleman, let me say something that you probably do not know, but he probably will be the next nominee for Governor of New York, on the Democratic ticket and if the Governor is to be a Democrat, I hope it will be my distinguished friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. LYNCH].

Now, let me go on just a little further. I want to call your attention to another very serious situation, and I want you Democrats to listen to me. If we carry out Mr. Truman's program, it is going to cost us $65,000,000,000 a year. I would like some of you, when you get up on this floor, to answer this question. Can our country, with our economy, pay $65,000,000,000 a year in taxes?

Mr. FORAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS. I yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island.

Mr. FORAND. If the gentleman and his party will not vote for the appropriations, the President cannot spend it.

Mr. JENKINS. That is just a little, cheap, political answer. Answer the big question. Answer it as an economist. Answer it as a financier. Can the gentleman do that?

Mr. FORAND. Is the gentleman talking as an economist or financier? He is talking as a politician.

Mr. JENKINS. No, I am not. I am just a country boy who learned young that you can't spend money that you have not got.

Mr. FORAND. The gentleman's primaries are over, at that.

Mr. JENKINS. I will not yield any more. I want an answer to my question. Let us get back to the serious proposition here. I say there is not an impartial economist or financier in the country that will say our economy can stand a $65,000,000,000 tax. It just will not do it. I tell you, the time is going to come that you are going to have to quit taxing in order to spend and spend and elect and elect. Maybe when that time comes the country will be restored to its normalcy and things will be different. I hope so. It has always been the lot of the Republican Party to be elected to power in time to save the country. God speed the time when we will realize our danger.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS. I yield.

Mr. REED of New York. The other side seems to be somewhat excited about the excise taxes and their continuation. When the Eightieth Republican Congress convened in January 1947 a buyers' strike was developing on all items which were covered by the 1943 excise-tax provisions with its termination date as of June 30, 1947. This buyers' strike was working great injury on business and creating unemployment.

The President, in his message to Congress in January 1947 said: "I have recommended that the war excise-tax rates due to expire July 1, 1947, be continued. When the time comes for excise-tax revision the Congress should review the entire group of excise-tax revision rather than concentrate attention on those that were imposed or increased during the war."

In accordance with the President's request, and to avoid the growing buyers' strike, the Eightieth Congress extended the 1943 excise taxes without a termination date. This was done in order to put the excise taxes of the 1943 act on the same footing as those in the 1941 and 1942 Revenue Acts, and thereby allow Congress to consider all excise taxes together.

A bill, H. R. 1030, to achieve this result, was unanimously reported by the Ways and Means Committee which, without delay, passed the House by a vote of 373 to 35 on January 29, 1947. It passed the Senate without a record vote. So it is evident that the Democrats supported it wholeheartedly. They have no complaint to make.

Mr. JENKINS. I thank the gentleman for his clear and convincing statement. Still, the outstanding accomplishment from a tax standpoint for the last 20 years is that in the Eightieth Congress we took six or seven million people, the low-income people, off the tax rolls entirely, as you know. We increased the exemptions and we did a lot of other things that I am not going to repeat, because you have been told about them time and again. However, if you look at the record you will see that the only time the country's finances have ever been in balance in the past 20 years were in 1947 and 1948 when the Republican Eightieth Congress was in power.

At this point and to illustrate how extravagant the Truman administration has been I wish to insert as a part of my speech a table of figures as they are set forth in a page of the Reader's Digest:

Here are two columns of figures. One gives the amount spent by each of our 32 Presidents from George Washington to the end of Franklin Roosevelt's second administration. The other gives the amount spent by President Truman since his inauguration up to September 30, 1949:

Spent by 32 Presidents from Washington to Roosevelt (through second term):

Washington	$34,088,486
Adams	34,262,668
Jefferson	72,424,289

Spent by 32 Presidents from Washington to Roosevelt (through second term)—Con.

Madison	$176,473,964
Monroe	147,237,899
Adams	65,427,017
Jackson	152,969,968
Van Buren	122,325,242
Harrison and Tyler	108,904,678
Polk	173,477,220
Taylor and Fillmore	179,631,529
Pierce	255,154,244
Buchanan	272,933,490
Lincoln	3,252,380,410
Johnson	1,578,557,645
Grant	2,253,386,743
Hayes	1,032,268,037
Garfield and Arthur	1,027,742,757
Cleveland	1,077,629,089
Harrison	1,412,315,899
Cleveland	1,441,674,174
McKinley	2,093,918,514
T. Roosevelt	4,655,450,505
Taft	2,799,211,854
Wilson	46,938,260,143
Harding	6,667,235,429
Coolidge	18,585,549,115
Hoover	15,490,476,636
Roosevelt (8 years)	67,518,746,001
Total	179,620,113,645

Spent by President Truman from fiscal year 1946 to Sept. 30, 1949:

Truman	191,081,394,191

Think this over:

Thirty-two Presidents in 156 years spent $179,620,113,645.

One President in less than 5 years has spent $191,081,394,191.

(The extraordinary expenditures of the war years from 1941 to 1945 have been excluded.)

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Will the gentleman tell us why it is necessary to have a withholding tax on stocks that somebody owns, when he may not even owe the Government a cent? It will take a year or 2 or 3 years for such a man to get his money back, when he does not even owe the Government anything. Will the gentleman tell me why a committee would put that in the bill?

Mr. JENKINS. The gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] discussed that very exhaustively yesterday, and so did the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON]. I personally am emphatically opposed to applying the withholding tax on dividends. The main argument in favor of it, they say, is that withholding dividends will work the same as withholding wages. That is not true, and let me show you how and why it is not true.

Let us take, for example, a man who works for a factory. When he first goes to work he fills out an application blank. They take his name and his family connections and how many children he has, and so forth, and their ages, and they probably have his picture and give him a thorough physical examination. They know how many exemptions he is entitled to—that is, they know whether he has a wife and minor children and so forth. He works in the plant every day. He is in with them every day, in and out. They can withhold very nicely from him because he is there and they know all about him. He knows what his wages are. They withhold the tax from his wages and he gets a take-home wage. That is how much he can spend. If the company makes a mistake in the amount they withhold he, of course, will stop in at the office at once and have it corrected. Withholding on stocks cannot be done without a lot of trouble because, just as the gentleman says, the stocks may be owned by somebody in a foreign country. They may be owned by someone who has put them up for collateral and does not have possession of them. The stocks may be owned by somebody's estate that is being administered. A widow may be administering an estate, for instance. She may have three or four little children. She and the children may own the stocks jointly. You lawyers know that when an estate is in the courts that widow has to make an accounting between herself and the children. I can give you a large number of illustrations that will show how unfair, unjust, and unreasonable this withholding of dividends will be, especially to the small-stock holders who are not equipped to handle these complicated matters. The big corporation might be able to do this job and the big trust companies may be able to handle them. I have had considerable experience with these matters as a lawyer and I know it will not work well.

It is absolutely a tough job. It is not necessary. At the present time the Federal law provides that every corporation must make a report to the Government for all dividends over $100 paid to an individual or company. If this must be done, why not require corporations to report all dividends to the taxing authorities. This can be done. In Ohio we have an intangible tax law that requires all Ohio corporations to report to the State taxing authorities all dividends paid and to whom paid. A lot of people do not report their taxes on a lot of different things. This plan set out in this bill will not be satisfactory. Why experiment with these women and children and these people who live all over the country and these trusts, and people like that, with complicated bookkeeping matters. It is not wise. My recollection is that the Treasury was not for this plan. A lot of people are not for it. But this is a grab for money, as I said before. They need the finances to elect and elect.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let me go on to another matter which I want to discuss, and which we hear so much about—these loopholes. Let me give you a little of the history of loopholes and the way the thing runs. These experts known as the committee staff which I told you about have for years been collaborating with the Treasury experts and have found a lot of inconsistencies and inequities and a lot of loopholes in the tax laws. They found about 120 of them 2 or 3 years ago. About one-half of them were advanced by the Treasury and the other half by the staff. They were given an opportunity by the committee to assemble them and to make an effort to agree on as many as possible. They agreed on about 50 which they embodied in a bill which was introduced in the Eightieth Congress by Mr. Knutson, the then chairman of the Ways and Means Committee. That bill was approved by the Ways and Means Committee without any opposition and was passed by the House in the last few days of the last session of the Eightieth Congress. Of course it did not receive the attention of the Senate. These suggestions are embodied in a bill, H. R. 990, which I introduced in this session of Congress, but which has not been called up for consideration.

There is no question that something should be done about stopping these loopholes and I compliment the committee for having taken action to stop some of this loophole invasion. The principle loophole invasion, I think, comes from what we call unrelated properties. Where somebody dies, for instance, and leaves a hardware store to a college and that college goes ahead and runs the hardware store in competition to another hardware store. In that case they ought to pay taxes on that hardware store. They ought to pay their fair share of taxes. That is what this bill does in that respect, and it does a good job, I think.

Let me proceed to one thing else. We have heard some talk in the discussions on this bill about cooperatives. A very unfortunate circumstance happened to the members of the committee with reference to the matter of taxing cooperatives, and I would like to discuss that for just a moment. The report has gone out to those people who were in favor of taxing cooperatives that the committee decided not to tax cooperatives. Now the committee did not decide anything like that. The committee did not take definite action on whether it would tax cooperatives, but it did take definite action as to whether we should tax them now under this bill. A big majority of the members of the Ways and Means Committee voted not to take the matter up in this bill. Here we are—we have been 5 months on this bill trying to get excise taxes reduced. Taxing cooperatives is a big job. We who come from the country look upon cooperatives simply as agricultural cooperatives. But there are a great many different kinds of cooperatives. There are all kinds of cooperatives—there are financial cooperatives, labor cooperatives, business cooperatives, and so forth. You may find one cooperative perhaps which will have a controlling interest of 10 or 15 other cooperatives. How are you going to tax that money if it all goes into one treasury or if it does not go into one treasury. You cannot write a law to cover these complex situations in a day. You cannot do it in a week. It is one of the most complex matters that I have met up with in my time on the Ways and Means Committee. It would take an expert draftsman a long time. It is a difficult drafting job, and a difficult job in many ways. I think the great majority of the committee stands as I do with reference to the matter of cooperatives. I am not afraid to tell you how I stand on these cooperatives. I think cooperatives ought to be taxed on business which is directly in competition with private industry and private business. Business that is not related to any other business and is directly in competition to a similar business privately managed and privately owned should pay a tax.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself five additional minutes.

Mr. Chairman, as I have indicated it is sometimes a difficult thing to separate and segregate co-op property. It is difficult to write a law and do it right. There is no use to do it wrong. The time will come when that will be done. Out of respect and out of fairness to some of the big cooperatives, I want to say they indicated at the public hearings that they are agreeable to taxing some of the activities of the co-ops. But they and we and all parties interested have to have time to write out a program which will do the job. To send out a report over the country that the committee refused to tax cooperatives is not exactly the truth. I hope that impression will be corrected.

There is one further thing I want to discuss before I conclude, and that is the matter of depletion allowances. That is a matter which the Treasury has been opposed to from the beginning. They are against it now.

We have made a great number of changes in the pending bill with reference to depletion allowances. We did what we ought to have done, I think. The majority of the committee acted in every case, and the depletion business has been pretty well handled. I think I can go to the country, and so can you, and defend ourselves, and substantiate our program and do it earnestly.

No abuse was allowed, no undue advantage was given to anybody. Everything was supposed to work out fairly and properly. We did not reduce any depletion allowance as provided in the present law. We increased the allowance on a few commodities; we added a few commodities. I shall not take the time now to set out these additions in full. Let me enumerate a few. We added high-grade limestone; we added refractory clays, and a number of other commodities.

Now, most of you will remember that we passed an insurance bill in this House about 3 or 4 months ago—a bill taxing all the insurance companies of the country, and the tax that would have been paid in to the treasury would have been about $90,000,000. We went back over several years to tax them. We did not have any right to do it. The law under which they had been taxed had expired. There was no law to tax them. They did not owe any tax. The insurance companies came in and said, "Well, we will pay some taxes." I was the only individual on the committee who was opposed to handling the matter in that manner. I did not think our great country should allow anyone to come in and say, "We recognize that the law has expired but we will just pay some money, and you may take it and we hope you will be satisfied with this amount." I do not think that our great country should be a mendicant. I did not think that was the proper way to legislate. The bill passed the House, but when it got over to the Senate, Senator GEORGE and Senator TAFT and other distinguished tax experts agreed with my position, and they offered some amendments to this bill to which I am referring. The bill has passed the Senate with amendments supporting the view that I had taken. Now that bill passed by this House once, and passed the Senate with amendments, has been inserted into the bill that we are presently considering. This is a very strange proceeding. Why did we not wait until the conferees had an opportunity to act on the bill that had passed both Houses? They have not acted. They have met once. I have never seen a proceeding like this before. There may have been proceedings like this, but I never saw a bill that was on its way to passage between the two Houses being incorporated into another bill.

For fear there may be somebody here who does not know how I am going to vote, let me say this, I am going to vote for this bill, because it reduces excise taxes, which should have been reduced a long time ago, by a billion dollars. I shall vote for it in spite of its many faults which I do not have the power to remove.

Mr. JONAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS. I yield.

Mr. JONAS. I am one of the 50 Members who would like to have the excise taxes reduced. I have not heard any complete explanation about the withholding tax on dividends. Do I understand the distinguished gentleman to say that if they withhold 10 percent that the party who is entitled to that can take it off of his income tax?

Mr. JENKINS. It is being withheld for that purpose.

Mr. JONAS. Then you get into a category where a party does not have to pay any tax? How will he get his money back?

Mr. JENKINS. He will have to get it by way of refund. I do not want to take the time to go into that now. I have already exceeded my time. I have already discussed this subject. Other members of the committee will explain that. But I am definitely opposed to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has again expired.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MILLS].

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I am a little surprised at my good friend from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS], but I think I will have to agree with the first statement that he made about the bill. He pointed out, according to his own thinking, that the Republicans were responsible for the first part of the title of the bill: "Reduction in excise taxes," and that the Democrats were responsible for the remainder of the title "and for other purposes."

I think I am going to have to agree with him in that statement, and I will tell you why. As pointed out by one of our colleagues on the Democratic side, these are wartime excise taxes, a part of which are being reduced in this bill, and they would have expired during the year 1947 if the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] and his colleagues in the House, supported by some of us Democrats, as Mr. REED said, had not made the excise taxes permanent.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. In just a minute. The record should be clear as far as the President is concerned that he asked for an extension of the wartime excise taxes for 1 year. What did he get from the Eightieth Congress? He got a law making these wartime excise taxes permanent, so in that respect you Republicans are entitled to the credit for the excise-tax reductions contained in this bill; it was absolutely necessary for us to have this bill in view of the action taken by the Eightieth Congress.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS. Why, certainly; and the record shows that the Democrats, including the gentleman on the committee and in the House, unanimously approved that program.

Mr. MILLS. The gentleman from Arkansas voted for the bill; there is no question about that. I do not remember how all my colleagues voted, but it is interesting to point out, on the other hand, that perhaps you Republicans are not entitled to all of the credit for the excise-tax reductions contained in this bill, for I remember that the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED], the ranking minority member of the committee, introduced a bill providing for some excise-tax reductions. The amazing thing about the committee tax bill, the one before you today, is that it reduces excise taxes by over a billion dollars, whereas the bill of the gentleman from New York proposed a reduction in excise taxes of some $500,000,000 or $600,000,000.

Mr. REED of New York. And if the gentleman had followed my suggestion that the way to recoup the loss that might be sustained by the elimination of those taxes was to reduce the expenditures of Government by 1 percent, it would have taken care of it.

Mr. MILLS. The gentleman knows that our committee is not responsible for the appropriations bills. The gentleman knows also that he and I joined in voting for all of the reductions proposed to the appropriation bill when it was on the floor of the House recently; but in doing so the gentleman and I were not misled into believing that had those reductions been approved finally by the entire Congress we would have reduced the expenditures of Government to the point that we could reduce excise taxes without further increasing the deficit in Government expenditures for the fiscal year 1951.

Mr. REED of New York. I disagree with the gentleman.

Mr. MILLS. I will yield to the gentleman in a moment. If we follow the gentleman's suggestion the net result will be a further increase in deficit spending in the fiscal year 1951 regardless of why or how; that will be the net result.

Mr. REED of New York. Let me tell the gentleman that had he voted for the reduction of Federal expenditures that I have we would have had a balanced budget long ago.

Mr. MILLS. I have not been here as long as the gentleman from New York; I have not had the opportunity of voting for as many reductions as he.

Mr. FORAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. I yield.

Mr. FORAND. I think it is very appropriate in view of the discussion concerning the vote on making excise taxes permanent to look at the Republican promises. I want to read what the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS], had to say speaking on the bill, H. R. 1030, on January 29, 1947. He said:

> I have no right to promise for my party what we will do, but I daresay I can promise for my party and your party both that before the end of this year we will enact some legislation that will change these excise taxes and change them very materially. But we cannot do it in a hurry; we have to do it scientifically.

You know the science that was involved: Passing the Knutson bill cutting income taxes by $5,000,000,000, which resulted in the budget's being out of balance.

Mr. MILLS. The fact remains that those people who would vote today for an excise-tax reduction without revenue to offset that loss are voting to increase the deficit in the fiscal year 1951; no one can deny that fact. If there is anyone who wants to deny it, I will yield to him at this time.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield, having mentioned my name?

Mr. MILLS. I yield to the gentleman. Does the gentleman deny my statement?

Mr. JENKINS. No; really, I did not concentrate on the gentleman's statement.

Mr. MILLS. I am sorry the gentleman did not, because he lost the benefit of a very wise observation.

Mr. JENKINS. I was thinking about what the gentleman from Rhode Island said.

Mr. MILLS. I can understand the gentleman's concern with that statement.

Mr. JENKINS. I am glad the gentleman read that because it expresses exactly my viewpoint today. Furthermore, in the committee in all these hearings I have been ready and willing, and I was ready at all times, to reduce these excise taxes. I would be willing to do like the President said he would be willing to do and that is do away with some of them entirely.

Mr. MILLS. I know the gentleman would.

Mr. JENKINS. I stand on that same principle today. These excise taxes we have not reduced enough.

Mr. MILLS. I know the gentleman would, but the gentleman is sound enough in his thinking, and I have great respect for him, so that he would not do those things without providing offsetting revenue to avoid an increase in deficit spending. I know the gentleman abhors deficit spending as much as I do and I know he would not vote for it.

Mr. FORAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. I yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island.

Mr. FORAND. The statement I read also proves the Republicans' failure to carry out promises.

Mr. MILLS. Well, the gentleman from Chio should be defended to the extent that he is not speaking for all Republicans in that statement. He did not speak for all of them today. He has already said he is going to vote for this bill on final passage.

Mr. JENKINS. I stand exactly on what the gentleman read and I am glad he read it.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. REED of New York. I would like to have the gentleman put in the RECORD the vote on this question that he has been debating here in regard to the question of making permanent, as he says, excise taxes. Of course, you cannot make taxes permanent. I want the RECORD vote on that bill. I think you will find it enlightening.

Mr. MILLS. May I ask the gentleman from New York a question? In making them permanent, an action in which I joined during the Eightieth Congress, did not that result in requiring subsequent repeal or reduction by the Congress to eliminate the war tax rates?

Mr. REED of New York. Your President never asked for it. He usually asks the Congress for what he wants.

Mr. MILLS. Will the gentleman answer the question?

Mr. REED of New York. He sent a message down here in which he said that there was a buyer's strike on, he wanted to stop it and he wanted the cooperation of the Ways and Means Committee. We at least were generous and statesmanlike enough to comply with his request. All but 35 of you people on that side voted to carry those excise taxes along.

Mr. MILLS. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to return to the bill for just a moment. This morning I read in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the speech which my distinguished friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] made on yesterday, setting forth the basis for his objection to the bill. He referred to the bill as a dishonest bill. Another distinguished member of his party a few days ago was quoted in the newspapers as describing it as a "phony" bill. The gentleman took considerable time in his statement to point out those things about the bill with which he finds fault. I presume that the inclusion of those features by the Ways and Means Committee makes the bill dishonest. Strange as it may seem, the things to which the gentleman from New York addresses his criticism primarily are matters that were not suggested by the Treasury nor by the President of the United States. The gentleman from New York criticized the action of the committee in increasing the rate of taxes on corporations. The gentleman knows that the committee bill did not follow the recommendations of the Treasury in the method of applying that tax. If the gentleman's theory is correct that the corporate tax is passed on to the consumer, I do not see how he can complain about double taxation of dividends. How is the stockholder doubly taxed if the corporate tax is not borne by the shareholder, but is passed on by the consumer? I do not agree with this theory. If there is competition in an industry it is not possible to pass the tax on to the consumer. This could only be done where there is little competition, or where a monopoly exists. The gentleman criticized the withholding tax on dividends paid by corporations to stockholders.

The gentleman from New York knows that that was not one of the suggestions of the Secretary of the Treasury carrying out the President's message. The gentleman criticizes the acceleration of corporate tax payments. The gentleman realizes also that that was not one of the suggestions made by the President of the United States or the Secretary of the Treasury for offsetting revenue.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. I yield.

Mr. REED of New York. The gentleman is the author of that, nobody disputes that.

Mr. MILLS. The gentleman was criticizing the President for something that he now says I did.

Mr. REED of New York. As a matter of fact, the gentleman would not dare have gone along unless, the President agreed to it.

Mr. MILLS. Well, there is no record of the President having agreed to it. The President has never done so in any conversation with me. I do not want to see the President bear the responsibility for something the gentleman says is unwise on my part.

The gentleman is concerned about withholding taxes on dividends. That is understandable in a way, but when we had up legislation imposing a withholding tax on those receiving salaries and wages, the gentleman from New York was in the forefront of those advocating that legislation. The gentleman remembers that during the discussion of the matter on the floor, the gentleman from North Carolina, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, along with many others of us on the Democratic side, opposed the legislation. The gentleman from New York and members of the committee on his side, joined by two or three Democrats on our side, led the fight, and they defeated the chairman of the committee, myself, and others, and applied a withholding tax on salaries and wages. Why? I do not know, but there was talk at the time that if we permitted wage earners and salary earners the opportunity of retaining their entire income over a year, and called upon them to pay on the 15th of March of the following year, they would not have the money to pay the tax. It was urged that, if the Government was to get the tax that these people owed, it would be necessary for us to withhold it from them before they ever received it and to require their employers turn that over to the Government. That was the rule laid down for wage earners and salaried people.

Now we propose that we shall lay down a comparable rule for those individuals who receive dividends from corporations—true dividends, not interest, but actual dividends paid upon investments in stock. He says that the inclusion of that type of a measure in this bill makes the bill dishonest. Why?

The gentleman from New York says that we will take money from widows, we will take money from hospitals, we will take money from educational and charitable institutions that never owe a tax. But, I never once heard the gentleman from New York object to withholding on salaries and wages on the ground that we might take something from some of those individuals who, at the end of the year, would owe no tax.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. I yield.

Mr. REED of New York. The gentleman is making a very fine apology for voting against something that he would not vote against now.

Mr. MILLS. On withholding taxes on salaries?

Mr. REED of New York. Yes.

Mr. MILLS. I would vote for it now; the gentleman is eminently correct. In 1944 I was wrong. Today I think I am right in applying the same rule to those who receive dividends, and the gentleman is wrong. The truth of the matter is that the gentleman realizes that in both the case of withholding taxes on wages and in the case of withholding taxes on dividends, the individual against whom the tax is applied, if there is no liability, will receive back the amount of money withheld from the Treasury of the United States immediately upon the filing of a return setting forth the lack of tax liability.

Mr. REED of New York. And the next year you take out the same amount; in other words, you confiscate the money when they do not owe any taxes, and that is dishonest.

Mr. MILLS. The gentleman made that statement in his speech, but it would be equally applicable in the case of wage and salary earners. But, he never raised that complaint at the time. It should be pointed out that after the first year for which the tax is withheld, the taxpayer will be in the same position as he was prior to withholding. In the second year, the individual will receive the refund of the tax withheld for the first year. This will offset the amount withheld in the second year. In a similar fashion, there is no hardship in subsequent years since withholding in each year will be offset by the refund of the amount withheld in the prior year.

The gentleman knows that, for purposes of administration of this withholding tax, it must be applied to all dividends paid, otherwise as to the corporations paying those dividends and the Internal Revenue Bureau there would be an intolerable administrative situation.

It is true that under this bill there will be people against whom this withholding tax will apply who do not owe a tax. There will be institutions against whom this tax is applied that do not owe a tax. But let us see what the figures are. On page 33 of the committee report—House Report 2319—in the first full paragraph on that page, the gentleman from New York will find very significant figures in regard to this point. In 1947, the last year for which there are adequate records that can now be divulged to the public, some $6,500,000,000 of dividends were paid out by corporations; individual and fiduciaries, on the other hand, reported in income-tax returns approximately five and three-tenths billions.

It is estimated, not by the Treasury, but by this very splendid staff of experts to which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] referred just a little while ago, that only about $300,000,000 of that difference between 5.3 billion and 6.5 billion was paid out to individuals and institutions having no tax liability. That is a tremendous amount of money which is escaping tax liability.

Is it fair for recipients of dividends from corporations to be permitted to have the advantage of this loophole, and to advocate, as the gentleman did in 1944, the closing of such a loophole with respect to wage earners and salary earners? Certainly there should be no loopholes through which anyone can evade taxes. I am certain the gentleman from New York will agree with that observation. We feel that there is involved some $170,000,000 in unreported tax liability. To advocate any system that will not permit the Federal Government to collect what the Congress has levied in the way of taxes is to approve and condone the failure to report taxes.

What does the gentleman suggest as a substitute? The gentleman from New York suggests, and in the minority report it is suggested, that all you have to do is extend the application of Form 1099 to require corporations to report the payment of dividends down to the last dollar paid to individuals and others. What does that mean? It means the most expensive, minute system of accounting that one could have. Does the gentleman from New York or anyone else on the committee think that the present personnel of the Bureau of Internal Revenue is sufficiently large to undertake the minute accounting system of checking the information returns of every corporation paying dividends against the returns of every dividend recipient?

My friends who tussle with us about the creation of a bureaucracy and who castigate us about a spending program certainly do not want to place themselves in a position, in all fairness, of further creating more bureaucracy. How many additional employees would be necessary, may I ask the gentleman from New York, to carry out the proposal he suggests?

Mr. REED of New York. I have already answered that. It is in the law now.

Mr. MILLS. It is in the law but the Commissioner requires reports for dividends of $100 or more, but not below.

Mr. REED of New York. Certainly.

Mr. MILLS. But the gentleman knows that in Kansas City where this checking job would have to be done, we were told it is utterly impossible on the basis of the present $100 requirement for reporting by the corporation to make a detailed check of every individual involved.

Mr. REED of New York. Did the withholding scheme start in Kansas City, Mo.?

Mr. MILLS. The withholding scheme started in Kansas City at the same time it did in the gentleman's district and mine. It applies to everybody equally.

Mr. COMBS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. I yield.

Mr. COMBS. I want to ask a question or two for the purpose of clarification. It is true, is it not, that in providing for withholding 10 percent on corporate dividends, we do not levy and do not propose in the bill to levy one additional penny of tax on the recipient?

Mr. MILLS. We are merely endeavoring to collect the amount of money now due on those dividends. We are not levying any additional tax on dividends.

Mr. COMBS. It has been found in practice that withholding on salaries and wages is greatly to the benefit of the wage earner and salaried worker because the money is taken over a period of a year and thus it is easier to make the payment. That is true, is it not?

Mr. MILLS. That is true.

Mr. COMBS. Now, will that not also be the case so far as withholding on these corporate dividends for those who owe taxes?

Mr. MILLS. That was certainly my thought.

Mr. COMBS. Finally, with reference to the talk we hear about the penalty of withholding where the tax is not due, is it not true that in thousands and thousands of cases where wage earners and salaried workers have their wages or salaries withheld on they get a refund?

Mr. MILLS. They get a refund as soon as that refund can be made, if there is no tax liability.

Mr. COMBS. And the same identical thing will be done in the matter of withholding corporate dividends where there is no tax liability?

Mr. MILLS. That is true. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER] called the attention of the members of the committee to the rapidity with which those refunds had been made after March 15 in the Pittsburgh district. I presume the same degree of rapidity prevails throughout the country.

Mr. COMBS. Does not the gentleman agree with me then that there certainly is nothing sacrosanct about the dividends of corporations and they are certainly not entitled to any better treatment than the pay of wage earners and salaried men?

Mr. MILLS. I do not see the fairness of saying that the inclusion of such a provision in a bill makes the entire bill dishonest.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. As a matter of fact, the bill contains provisions which will require every corporation to report all dividends, even down to the last dollar to every individual; is that not true?

Mr. MILLS. Not in the bill. It was the understanding as set forth in the report, that the Internal Revenue Bureau would require that by regulation.

Mr. CURTIS. That is right. In other words, the question you raise as to the costly procedure, that the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] suggested, is already in your proposal.

Mr. MILLS. No, not to the extent that it would have to be carried out administratively under Mr. Reed's proposal. It would not, under the committee proposal, require anything like the number of people to check returns as would be necessary under his proposal.

Mr. CURTIS. How can you make refunds without checking the returns?

Mr. MILLS. The refunds, of course, are going to be checked on the basis that they are now being checked, with respect to wages and salaries, but I am talking about cross checking. The gentleman understands exactly what I am talking about.

Mr. McDONOUGH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr MILLS. I yield.

Mr. McDONOUGH. With reference to the 10-percent withholding on dividends, is that the total amount the individual has to pay in the way of taxes?

Mr. MILLS. No, that is not the total amount. The gentleman from California will recall that if an individual owes any tax at all, the net first bracket rate is 16.6 percent.

Mr. McDONOUGH. That is right.

Mr. MILLS. So that if the dividends come into the first bracket of individual income tax, there will still be 6.6 percent of the tax due in addition to the 10 percent. Then, too, this makes no provision, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] pointed out, for the exemption of dependents or any expenditures that may be deductible. This is a flat rate on gross dividends.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I have asked the gentleman to yield in order that I may point out to him that in Ohio we have an intangible tax of 5 percent on dividends, earnings, interest payments, and so forth. Under our Ohio State law, every corporation is required to report the name and address and amount of dividends paid to any citizen of Ohio. That has worked with entire satisfaction.

The difficulty I encounter in approving the provision in this bill with reference to the withholding of dividend payments to the extent of 10 percent is that there are a great many stockholders who receive only a small amount of dividends and who are not subject to any tax at all. We hear a great deal of talk about the poor and the workingman.

The very individuals who need every bit of their income, old men and old women who live off of their investments, have a portion of that income held up until they get a refund. I presume they would have to apply for that refund. If they fail to do so, as I understand the internal revenue law, they do not get it. But in the meantime, if they have $300 income, they have $30 withheld until the bureaucracy gets around to distributing that money. It seems to me if you would look at the Ohio law and see how it works there, there might be an answer found in that system, which gives the Government complete information and a complete record but does not at the same time hold up the funds.

Mr. MILLS. I appreciate the gentleman calling that to my attention. We did not have it before us when we were considering this. It may be that there are other ways of doing this job and doing it satisfactorily, but the gentleman will agree with me that it was time for the committee to concern itself about the payment of tax liabilities on dividends if information was available to the committee that there were tremendous amounts of dividends on which there were no taxes paid.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I agree fully with the gentleman part way. I agree, of course, that we should enforce the internal revenue laws fully and adequately against all. I have been concerned with the fact that somehow we seemingly have not done so. But the present law requires corporations to report the names and addresses of all stockholders who receive more than $100 a year in dividends. It seems to me that a simple amendment cutting that down to sending in a report of stockholders would give you a check, and catch any tax dodger, without all this difficulty.

Mr. MILLS. I appreciate the gentleman's observations.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Well, I would like to have your comment on that, as to why you go through all this expensive process and still do not get the taxes.

Mr. MILLS. It was the opinion of the gentleman speaking that it was less expensive to the Government this way; that it would not require additional personnel this way, whereas it would if some of the other procedures had been adopted by the committee.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Does the gentleman predicate that on fact?

Mr. MILLS. Well, it was so suggested to the gentleman, yes.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. In the gentleman's colloquy with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COMBS] the attempt was made to give the impression that the situation with regard to dividends and wages was completely analogous. The gentleman will admit, however, I believe, that in the case of wages we do not withhold from all wage earners. In other words, we take into consideration his potential tax liability by giving him credit for personal exemptions, and so forth; whereas, in the case of dividends you are giving no consideration whatever to the potential tax liability of the dividend recipient.

Mr. MILLS. But the gentleman will admit that if an individual is employed at a weekly wage which would justify, on an annual basis, the payment of a tax, regardless of his marital situation, you withhold on that individual's pay for that week, even though he may never work again during that taxable year.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Oh, certainly.

Mr. MILLS. So in many respects the two situations are comparable. They are not entirely analogous, of course.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. But you make no attempt whatever to determine, in the case of the dividend withholding, the potential tax liability of the dividend recipient, whereas you do make an attempt, as best you can, in the case of the wage earner.

Mr. MILLS. That is true.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. That is a very sizable distinction.

Mr. MILLS. The gentleman will admit that if we applied that same rule to the withholding tax on dividends, we would create a situation that would be completely unmanageable, as far as corporations are concerned.

I had intended to discuss the details of the plan for acceleration of tax payments of corporations, but time does not permit. I do, however, want it clearly understood that this plan was proposed as a reform, and not because of the temporary increase in tax receipts that will be provided over the next few years.

For some time I have been concerned about the sharp contrast in the present law between the time given for payment of taxes by corporations and the time provided for unincorporated businesses. While corporations may pay in four quarterly installments over the year following that in which the tax liability was incurred, partnerships and individual proprietorships must pay the bulk of their tax during the year in which the income arises. This is an unnecessary discrimination under the tax laws that should be eliminated.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MILLS] has again expired.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SIMPSON].

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I will take just a moment to mention something about this withholding tax on dividends. The fact is that around $8,000,000,000 are paid in dividends today from which the taxpayers make substantial income-tax payments. They are making that payment without any withholding of dividends. On the other hand, the Treasury believes that there are about $2,000,000,000 paid in dividends which for one reason or another are not reported on tax returns. Presumably a part of that represents people who deliberately fail to make a return; another part is represented by those who through carelessness fail to make a return, and still a third part is represented by those people who do not owe any income tax, and do not file a return.

What this bill will do under the withholding provisions is to impose an obligation upon every corporation which pays any dividend whatever, to file with every dividend recipient a record of the payment, for the taxpayers' use in the tax return in order to get after that small group represented by the $2,000,000,000 which is not now reported. A part of this should not be reported. This bill compels every corporation to make this withholding return. It will entail a great cost. The cost could be borne by the Government whose duty it is to collect the tax; the cost could be borne by the corporations who pay the dividends, who are in effect made the tax collector; but the cost will probably run around $25,000,000 to $30,000,000 in order to collect at the outside $150,000,000 more than we are now getting as taxes on dividends.

It has been decided by the committee to impose that cost upon all of the corporations of the country, and not to place that burden on the Government. It is just another increase of cost to be borne by the consumer, the consumer who must pay all of the cost of production represented in our country so largely by the corporations.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. I wonder if the gentleman would comment briefly on this system as it relates to refunds to the individuals. How is the Government going to check on whether the individual is or is not entitled to a refund?

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. I shall be very happy to.

In the first place, every penny the Government gets its hands on, it will hang onto unless the individual claims a refund. There are many people who receive dividends who do not have to file income-tax returns. In the case of many the amount they receive as dividends would be so small that they will not take the trouble to file a return, and on those the Government will be in the position of taking money to which it has no right under existing law. The Government will not know what to refund; when the individual claims a refund, the Government will be placed in the position of having to determine in one manner or another whether that individual who claims relief is entitled to it, in order to have proper book accounting. How they will do it I do not know.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. In view of the fact that it is not contemplated that there will be a form similar to the W–1 and W–2 that are presently issued by the employers in connection with the wage withholding which certificate has to be filed with a tax return requesting a refund, how is the Government going to reconcile its bookkeeping and its accounts to determine whether or not a refund is actually due? Or are they just going to take the taxpayers' word for it in each instance?

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. I know of no mechanical way by which they can check it, and certainly it will not be accurate. Presumably they will look over the returns and if the request looks all right they will authorize payment. Knowing the interest of the Treasury Department in proper administration, I cannot conceive of their doing that; consequently I conclude there will be many millions of dollars each year paid in through withholding on dividends to which the Government is not entitled, but which the Government cannot prove are due the taxpayers.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Either they are going to trust the word of the taxpayer as to whether or not he is entitled to a refund or they are going to have to go into this very involved process of checking, which is going to delay considerably the payment of refunds. So that I think the analogy that is made as to the speed with which these refunds can be made compared with what is done in connection with the withholding of wages is not comparable.

Mr. JENKINS. I think the gentleman is going to discuss the difference between withholding on wages and withholding on dividends with reference to the procedure by which that is done. I would like to make the observation that the wage earner is at the plant every day. When he gets his monthly or weekly wages showing the withholding he knows then what is withheld. If it is not right he can go into the office and correct it at that time.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Yes, and the Government knows he will owe some income tax. With respect to some of the persons from whom withholdings of dividends are made, the Government cannot know that the individual owes any tax; therefore it is wrong to withhold.

Mr. Chairman, I want to talk a bit about excise taxes and the committee's action thereon. While I am very happy to have the Republican Party get credit for reduction in excise taxes, I must point out that the American public is not going to be completely happy with the bill which the committee has presented to them. In the first place, as it was pointed out earlier in the day, we now have the need for removing excise taxes because they are permanently in the law. The bill imposing them permanently was supported substantially by both sides of the House. It was signed by a Democratic President. The bill has never been repealed, yet the Democratic Party has been in power ever since that bill was passed. Now is their chance to do so and they fail.

The gentlemen who have spoken earlier criticizing the fact that excise taxes are now paid on various things will be the last ones to rise here and introduce a bill for the repeal of the excise taxes; indeed, they are the ones who would not support many of the proposals for excise tax reductions which were made in the committee.

The excise cuts which are now before you will not satisfy all of the American people. Presumably those who will be satisfied are those who want to buy items upon which the tax has been entirely removed. There are a number of those—ladies' handbags, the cheaper watches and clocks, baby oils, rebuilt automobile parts, children's toys, cooking stoves, water heaters and certain electric devices. On those, many of which are once-in-a-lifetime purchases, people will be pleased because they will have no excise tax to pay. But the people who ask for the elimination of the tax on transportation will not be pleased. There will be $340,000,000 to pay in excise taxes for the transportation of persons and property remaining after this bill is passed. Those using the telephone and the telegraph will have to pay $463,000,000 in excise taxes; on manufacturer's excise taxes $356,000,000 will have to be paid each year. On admissions $233,000,000, and on the retail excise tax $183,000,000 remains to be paid each year after this so-called tax reduction bill is passed.

Mr. VURSELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. VURSELL. I have not had a chance to study the bill thoroughly. Will the gentleman now speaking tell me how much reduction has been made percentagewise on transportation and telephones?

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. On transportation for persons the tax has been reduced from 15 to 10 percent. On transportation of coal from 4 cents per short ton to 2 cents per short ton, and on others from 3 to 1½ percent. On communciations there are a number of cuts, and I would refer the gentleman to the hearings.

Mr. VURSELL. In other words, the cuts were not substantial.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. The cut on communications, telephones, is from 25 percent to 20 percent. The telephone, which is necessary and which goes into most homes of the Nation, bears one of the smallest percentage-wise cuts. My point is that even after this bill becomes law, those who asked substantial relief in excise taxes will not have it. The committee, in considering where to place cuts on articles covered by excise taxes, could have adopted a policy of a straight-across-the-board cut; that might have been rather fair. On the other hand, it could have picked out certain items in which individuals of the committee or of the Congress were interested. Perhaps it did that to some degree. Perhaps a fairer and a better way to have done it would have been to have picked out the items where there was a real hardship either in the purchasing public's mind or in the industry which was manufacturing the article on which the tax is now applied.

As you look through the bill you will find generally that all those methods were used, though there are some mystifying omissions of certain articles, where the industries are being adversely affected and where no relief whatever is being given.

Then there is one other great group in which this Congress should be interested when it comes to the cutting of excise taxes or of giving any relief. That applies to those industries where in recent years, the Department of Justice as a division of the Government, has seen fit to take proceedings against the larger manufacturers in those businesses. This is to provide more competition, to break up monopolies, to encourage private enterprise to get into those particular fields of business, with a view to broadening competition, and to permit free enterprise to develop in those particular areas.

There are in this bill two great omissions of certain articles of very wide consumption in the United States used by the little individual. In these fields the Government is taking steps right now against the industries concerned because of alleged monopolistic practices, but the committee has failed to give relief to the small competitors who appeared before the committee and, in effect, stated that unless given relief they would not be able to continue operations and would, in all likelihood, be removed. Each of those items was written into the bill by the committee after due consideration. They were written in, and they remained in the committee bill for a long time, and each of them was finally taken from the bill. The items concerned are, number one, electric light bulbs and tubes and, number two, an item called the economy cigarette, which simply is a cigarette that sells for a lesser price than does the so-called standard brand of cigarette.

With respect to electric-light bulbs, the committee voted to remove them from the bill regardless of the fact that perhaps 90 percent of the families in the United States buy this item every year. It is a household expense. Relief should be given to the American people upon that item, but under this bill there is no relief.

At this very moment the Department of Justice is in the process of determining whether the larger manufacturers of electric light bulbs are in effect a monopoly, are in fact by their practices hurting the small manufacturers. Within the very recent past they have issued orders which would tend to help the smaller manufacturers.

Honesty compels me to admit that the large manufacturers did not, as far as I can tell, fight this bill in any way. On the contrary, I have reason to believe that as the tax would be reduced for both the larger and smaller manufacturers, they want the tax reduced. This makes it all the more mystifying why a committee of this kind would remove from the bill one of the two items wherein monopoly has been charged, and where the Government is undertaking to break down an alleged monopoly today. That item has been taken from the bill. It involved a relatively small amount of revenue. It should be included in the bill, and I hope the other body will, because of the millions and millions of our citizens who buy light bulbs give one bit of tax relief where virtually every family will benefit.

Item after item is given tax relief where the relief does not apply to any greater number of our citizens. Higher priced jewelry? No. Fur coats? No. Communications, where we get a 5-percent reduction? Yes, to a vast number of our people, but the percentage is small. Admissions to theaters, and so on? That is cut in half, but if you or I think the young person who has occasion to go to a movie theater and has to pay only half the amount of tax will be pleased, you are wrong. If you think cutting the tax in half will cause the motion-picture-theater operator within your congressional district to be happy because attendance will greatly increase, you are wrong. No, what we need in this bill is something, and I suggest electric-light bulbs as one of the items, which will give every American citizen some benefit as the result of this reduction.

The other item, namely, the tax now proposed on economy-brand cigarettes manufactured, as they are, by very small companies, comes within the same category of an item which was in the bill and was taken out at the very last moment, and it involves another alleged monopoly. The several companies that manufacture the so-called standard-brand cigarettes, which sell for roughly 17 cents a package, spend millions of dollars annually for advertising by newspapers, mail, radio, and television. So far as I know, these companies did not in person fight this proposal. The proposal was taken from the bill, although the proposal would simply have taxed cigarettes on the basis of the price at which they were sold by the manufacturer, just the same as every other item in our country is taxed with the exception of gasoline, gasoline being taxed at the same rate upon any and every gallon. But cigarettes, regardless of the price at which they sell, are taxed exactly the same amount. The proposal was to tax cigarettes selling for 12 cents a package at the same percentage rate as cigarettes selling for 17 cents a package.

This was an effort to correct the present unequitable flat tax which was driving small business from the field.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman knows very well that the reason they do not sell over 1 percent of the cigarettes is because of the low grade, poor cigarettes which the consumer will not buy. The gentleman knows furthermore that the application with reference to this differential did not come from the consumer, it came from just a few manufacturers.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. It came from small business.

Mr. DOUGHTON. In all of our testimony, there is not one word of testimony of a single consumer in the United States who pays the taxes asking for this. The gentleman knows further that this would cause the loss of revenue of about $90,000,000. He forgets, or omits, to state that.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Permit me to answer the three statements which my distinguished chairman has made. No. 1: The gentleman says the American public does not want to buy the cigarettes and consequently there is no need to reduce the tax rate. Then in the same breath he says there will be a $90,000,000 tax loss which he knows is based upon the estimate of 25 percent of the American people wanting to buy the cigarettes. I say that if 25 percent of the American people want to use any cigarette, the Congress should not, by its taxing system, deny them the right to buy that cigarette.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Why did not some of that 25 percent appear and testify in behalf of the differential? Not one appeared, as the gentleman knows. Not even 1 percent, let alone 25 percent.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. If I may proceed with my remarks, the gentleman has a great deal of time, and I know he can answer in his own time. I know he is interested in this particular subject. I simply want to make the point that in order to provide competition in an industry controlled now by three, four, or five mammoth companies, all I ask is that the little industry, the little factory in Pennsylvania, which for years has provided jobs for, let us say, a thousand men and now is being forced to shut down, all I ask is that that industry have a right to give the American public what the American public wants.

I say that when the committee knocked this provision out of the bill, which provision, I might add, was knocked out after long and careful discussion and consideration, I want to make the point that by doing so the committee once again said to the American public: "A monopoly in the cigarette industry seems to be all right." The committee is saying, "We do not want any more competition in this field.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Is not the place to fight a monopoly in the Department of Justice, and not in the Congress? If there is a monopoly, why does not the gentleman take his case to the Department of Justice. That is the proper place to take his case.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Where the Department of Justice recognizes there is a monopoly, as is evidenced by the cases they have brought to court, and where the Congress, as a result of its tax legislation, makes it impossible for the Department of Justice to perform what it is trying to do to break up a monopoly, then it is time for the Congress to act and change the law to strengthen the hands of the Department of Justice.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman is familiar with the fact that this whole question of differential on the cigarette tax was gone into at length by a subcommittee that spent months investigating it, a subcommittee headed by the distinguished gentleman who is now Chief Justice of the United States.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. In what year was that, sir?

Mr. DOUGHTON. They reported adversely against the differential.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. In what year was that, sir?

Mr. DOUGHTON. It is no matter what year it was, the principle is the same. The gentleman knows the principle is the same.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. It does make a great deal of difference what year it was. That was 15 years ago.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The principle is exactly the same. The principle has not changed one iota.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. The principle is not at all the same. The bill considered 15 years ago called for an entirely different basis of taxation, as the gentleman will see if he reads the subcommittee report.

Mr. Chairman, let us look at this $90,000,000 loss estimate by the Treasury. For this to be true, 25 percent of the people in this country who smoke standard-priced cigarettes would have to change to economy cigarettes. Dr. Harley Lutz, of Princeton University, and Dr. Lewis H. Kimmel, of Brookings Institution, say this is pipe-dream forecasting. Dr. Kimmel says the most these little manufacturers can hope for is perhaps 5 percent of the total business—which might cost the Treasury $2,000,000 to $6,000,000. It seems to me that this Congress should concern itself more with fairness to small business and to the consuming public than with this trifling loss.

Mr. Chairman, for 16 long years the small manufacturers—little business, if you please, about which this administration talks so much but does so little—have been seeking relief at our hands. They came before our committee with a case of extreme hardship, a threat of extinction, and we turned them down.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Although I would like to yield to my distinguished chairman, as long as he wants me to, I must yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FULTON. In Pennsylvania, as the gentleman knows, there are many fraternal clubs and beneficial organizations or nonprofit associations which are many times incorporated for the best interests of their members and the community. Could you inform the House just what effect this bill will have upon those clubs or beneficial associations?

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Having finished with tobacco, I now turn to this question of charitable institutions.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. We all know there have been gross breaches of the law under which charitable and educational trusts and foundations have been given tax exemptions under certain circumstances. Those breaches generally resulted in a situation where the unit concerned would, in effect, sell its tax exemption, and would go into some business unrelated entirely with the purpose of the trust, and make money in competition with private industry. The committee has quite properly made changes in this law which will have the effect of taxing those exempted organizations under certain sections of the Internal Revenue Code on those unrelated businesses which they operate.

Specifically, having in mind what you asked me, a fraternal organization would not be subject to tax under the changes made by the pending bill.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. EBERHARTER. There has been some fear among beneficial and fraternal organizations in the State of Pennsylvania that they would be taxed. I think that fear arose by reason of some press reports which just carried the statement that charitable and fraternal organizations would be taxed. I think I am correct in stating that no fraternal organization in Pennsylvania need fear taxation, because the committee report on page 36 states expressly that fraternal beneficiary societies are not affected.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. I am sure the gentleman has stated the committee wishes correctly. For example, if one of the organizations to which you or I belong should engaged in something entirely outside of that for which it was planned, you and I would anticipate being taxed, and should be taxed.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. FULTON. Would the operation of a beneficial fund by a fraternal organization be taxed in any way under this bill?

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. It is not.

Mr. FULTON. Under the insurance provisions or the ill-health provisions, they would not be taxed?

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. No.

Mr. FULTON. Suppose there are entertainment facilities within a club, such as a bar or pool tables or bowling alleys. What happens under this bill? Does this bill allow taxation?

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. My understanding is that they are not taxed.

Mr. FULTON. The alcohol tax. But this bill does not increase the tax, for example, on a bar or an entertainment in a bar of a Pennsylvania club, does it?

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. It has nothing to do with that. No.

Mr. EBERHARTER. If the gentleman will yield further?

The charters of these various organizations state their purposes—social, educational, fraternal, mutual benefit, payment of certain sick benefits, and so forth. Anything that the organization operates in accordance with the purposes set forth in their charter, their taxes are not affected in any way whatsoever by this measure.

Mr. FULTON. One more question, if the gentleman please: But if they were renting a storeroom not in conjunction with the club, what then?

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. If they were running a separately incorporated grocery store, a haberdashery, or similar business they would be taxed on that as an unrelated business; and I think they should be.

There is one other subject about which I want to talk. There are what I consider excellent provisions in the bill which should eliminate the wrongful use of tax exemption granted to educational and charitable organizations. The abuses by some of these organizations result from their engaging in businesses which are unrelated to the purpose for which the tax exemption was granted by the Congress. In some extreme cases charitable trusts and foundations have been created for the purpose of conducting tax-exempt businesses and no provisions whatever were made requiring payment of any part of the earnings to education or charity. The bill, by providing that income from these unrelated sources be taxed at the prevailing corporation rate and by denying the right to unlimited accumulation of reserves, should wipe out this loophole which permits tax avoidance.

However, in plugging this loophole, I believe the committee bill goes too far when it denies a deduction to a donor for bequests or gifts made to a trust or foundation by members of a family-owned business to a family-controlled trust or foundation.

Under the bill the tax exemption would no longer be available for creation of foundations such as that established by Ford, or Rockefeller and hundreds of others. Under this type of foundation, the family which has made the business a success is now able to retain control of the business and the dividends paid annually to the foundation are distributed to charity or education, as the case may be.

The mere fact that members of a family control the distribution of funds of the foundation does not make the creation of a foundation objectionable. Rather it insures proper distribution in accordance with the purposes of the trust. It should be noted that tax exemption would be available to the donor if he made a gift to some foundation controlled by strangers. Therefore it is fair to conclude that the real purpose of the Treasury, which offered this section of the bill, is to eliminate family-owned corporations. I believe this is not a desirable purpose and regret that the bill contains a provision which would have this practical effect. I hope the other body will examine the matter with care and agree with me that this provision which seeks to bring to pass a New Deal social policy has no place in a tax bill and should be removed from the bill.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LYNCH].

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Chairman, this is a good tax bill and, in my judgment, merits the overwhelming support of the House. I wish to congratulate our great chairman, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] for his skill in piloting this bill through the many months of public hearings and executive sessions. He has done yeoman work for his country and merits the appreciation of every right-thinking citizen for the tremendous task he has accomplished. In that task he has had the splendid cooperation of his colleagues on the committee, both Democrats and Republicans alike, and while, of course, we of the majority shall take credit for the passage of the bill, our Republican colleagues may likewise take some credit for many of the valuable suggestions which have been written into the bill and for their fair-minded approach to the problem.

I think I should state that no small credit for this bill is due to the tact and diplomacy of Speaker RAYBURN and Majority Leader MCCORMACK, who in the last few days gave us the lift that was necessary to get the bill into final shape.

I understand from the newspaper reports that before we vote upon a bill which the President will sign, we will have to vote upon a proposed amendment which, if it were to pass, we all know the President would not sign. When that issue has been determined, I am quite confident that the majority of the Republicans will vote in favor of this tax bill. When that is done on Thursday the Ways and Means Committee will, I believe, feel at liberty to take a rest, except the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON], who will be at his office at 6 o'clock Friday morning ready for any new or unfinished business.

This bill is particularly appealing to me for the reason that coming from New York City, I have been greatly concerned with the falling off in business and the consequent unemployment that has developed in certain of our industries. I feel that the 50-percent reduction in the excise taxes on jewelry, leather goods, and furs will stimulate activity in these lines of business, with the result that many of our presently unemployed will be called back to work. It is my belief that the 50-percent reduction in the admissions tax will likewise stimulate attendance at the moving-picture theaters and at other places of entertainment. Certainly, we have been assured by the businessmen that they needed a reduction in their excise taxes and that if such reduction were granted it would immeasurably aid their business and consequently aid employment. I shall not dwell further upon the excise taxes as that point has already been well covered by previous speakers.

I shall dwell rather on the closing of loopholes in our present tax law by which some $100,000,000 will be recouped by taxing income derived by charitable trusts and nonprofit institutions, such as colleges and universities, from the operation of businesses wholly unrelated to the purposes for which the charitable trusts were established and for which the colleges and universities and similar organizations were chartered. Under this legislation it is not intended to in any way disturb the traditional tax-exempt status of our religious or educational institutions. We believe, in fact, that by taking the course which this bill provides, the tax-exempt institutions and charitable trusts will be safeguarded and protected by nipping in the bud the abuse which threatens the continuance of their tax exemption. There is no possible connection between some of these operations and the normal activities of these institutions. I am informed that one of these institutions by the operation of various unrelated businesses—in competition with tax-paying businesses—has had an income in 1 year equivalent to the income received by Harvard University over the same period from its endowments which have accumulated over the years.

It is my considered opinion that the profits derived by charitable trusts and educational institutions and other similar organizations from the direct operation of businesses not related to the purposes for which the trusts or institutions were founded should be taxed in the same manner as similar businesses in the competitive field.

The bill before you succeeds, in my opinion, in steering the sensible middle course of exempting the bona fide charitable and educational activities from taxation on their income from related activities and, at the same time, correcting the abuses which have received so much unfavorable comment and righteous denunciation. The committee has striven hard for a reasonable solution and I believe has found one.

One of the most important reforms contained in the committee bill is the revision of the income-tax treatment of the charitable, educational, and other organizations now exempt from income tax. Organizations of these types have been exempt throughout the history of our income tax and the reasons for their exemption are so strong as to require no explanation here. Above all, it is desirable that the activities carried on by these institutions remain in private, philanthropic hands and their private financing be encouraged in every reasonable manner by the Federal Government. However, evidence has been found that some of these organizations are abusing their tax-exempt privilege. If this is allowed to continue unchecked, it is likely to result eventually in the loss of the tax privileges to all of the legitimate organizations. The provisions in this bill eliminate this possibility.

Your committee has made a detailed investigation of the problems involved and has reached the conclusion to impose taxes in certain conditions only after being certain that no harm would be done legitimate operations. The staff of the committee, together with the Treasury Department, has been working on these problems for several years. Hearings have been held by your committee on this subject not only this year, but also in 1947 and 1948. In addition, a subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency has printed a report on the intricate financial manipulations which have enabled Royal S. Little and some of his associates to build up a $40,000,000 textile business in the last 10 years. This report has been useful to your committee in its investigation.

It is extremely doubtful whether Mr. Little could have carried through this ambitious scheme without the repeated use of the charitable foundations which he created and used to buy textile mills which were resold to interests in which he was involved. It, in any case, appears clear that the foundations furnished an important part of the funds for the expansion of firms in which Mr. Little was interested. Through the use of these trusts, Mr. Little was able to create a tremendous financial reservoir which apparently was on tap whenever his financial ventures were temporarily in need of funds. All of this was done in the name of charity, although the record to date shows only negligible payments out of these rich trusts to their charitable and educational beneficiaries.

Another area of abuse has grown up through deals in which tax-exempt universities cooperate with private businesses by purchasing the real estate of these businesses and then immediately leasing it back to the original owners under leases for long periods. Often the tax-exempt institutions borrow all the money to finance the purchases and then agree to apply all or practically all of the rents they receive toward repayment of the indebtedness. Since the rents are received tax-free, the mortgages can be paid off at a rate which would be impossible in the case of any private investor.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LYNCH. I yield to the gentleman from New Mexico.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Has the committee given consideration to cases in which some of these colleges have gone in and invested some of their moneys in properties which are payable out of the revenue and which now, when the exemption is taken away from them, it will be impossible for them to pay out, and thereby a great loss will be sustained by them?

Mr. LYNCH. The committee bill does not affect the taxability of the unrelated business activities of these institutions for the years prior to 1951. The tax status of institutions for years prior to 1951 is not affected by this bill but is left to interpretation of existing law. In the case of rents derived from leased property the committee under this bill has no intention of in any way affecting the moneys or investments of these universities where they use their own money, but where these colleges or universities use their tax-exempt status for the purpose of loaning or selling to some business institutions that may derive benefit from it, those are the cases that we have in mind and which we intend to see are taxed. The mere investment of regular funds of the universities in the purchase of real estate is not considered one of those parts of the so-called tax-avoidance racket.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. I had in mind cases where an institution donated money and they used that money to purchase rental property, for example, which they can purchase and pay out because of the fact they are exempt from the income tax, but if, under this bill, as I understand it, it puts them into the nonexemption category, they are going to have a hard time paying out for those properties which they bought in reliance on the fact that the income from them would be free.

Mr. LYNCH. The income on such investments would be free of tax where they have used their own money; that is, where the funds to buy the property were not borrowed either from some bank, either wholly or largely, or borrowed on the property itself.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. They would still continue to be exempt.

Mr. LYNCH. That is right.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. GRANGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LYNCH. I yield to the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. GRANGER. Would the same explanation given to the gentleman from New Mexico apply to charitable organizations?

Mr. LYNCH. Yes.

Mr. GRANGER. Is there a definition in this bill of what is a charitable organization?

Mr. LYNCH. No; there is no specific definition in this particular bill of a charitable organization.

Mr. MILLS. If the gentleman will yield, there can be no possibility, however, I think the gentleman from New York will advise the gentleman from Utah, of any misunderstanding on the part of the Internal Revenue Bureau as to the charitable organizations which are included within this section of the bill.

Mr. LYNCH. There can be no misunderstanding about that whatsoever.

Mr. MILLS. They are clearly set forth in regulations and other laws.

Mr. GRANGER. It does not disturb that at all?

Mr. LYNCH. It does not disturb it.

In some cases the businesses which rent the real estate from the universities even have options to repurchase at the end of the rental period. As a result, huge rental payments are taken out of the scope of the income tax in lease-back deals which are so favorable to the private businesses involved that no private investor could hope to offer the same terms. Since all the tax-exempt institutions need supply in one of these transactions is its tax-exempt privileges, it is apparent that these are examples of tax-exempt organizations going into the business world and selling their tax exemption to the highest bidder. These deals have mushroomed in the last few years. Many of the best names in the college world and in business are involved. The committee feels that the tax-avoidance racket involved in the sale or lease back of the tax-exempt status of these institutions must stop.

Possibly a more flagrant example of the use of tax exemption privileges for purposes never contemplated by Congress are those cases where tax exempt organizations enter directly into active business in competition with taxable private businessmen. There are instances where universities or their tax exempt subsidiaries have engaged in active business enterprises which are totally unrelated to the educational functions for which their exemption was orginally provided. For example, subsidiaries of one educational institution, which has received consideration publicity, are today operating a macaroni company, a piston ring manufacturing company, a leather company and a chinaware company. I can assure you that there is nothing in the charter of that university, nor is there anything in its curriculum that is even remotely connected with the manufacture of spaghetti or the other commodities that are produced by the businesses it owns and operates. These colleges have a tremendous advantage over their tax paying competitors since 100 percent of their profits are available for business expansion and since they may charge lower prices and still have a higher net rate of return on their investment than private businessmen can have after payment of taxes. I can see no reason in justice to permit an educational institution to operate a spaghetti factory, a department store or any other business under the cloak of tax exemption, while competitors in the same business field are presently subject to a 38 percent tax and will under this bill be subject to a 41 percent tax on their income.

Personal tax saving considerations have also invaded the field of charity in connection with the income, estate and gift tax deductions from charitable contributions. Many individuals have discovered that under the liberal terms of the tax laws it is possible to take deductions for contributions to charity merely by placing some of their assets in private trusts or foundations which they control. In some cases, after the tax deduction has been taken, the so-called charitable contributions are still available to the donor of the members of his family to almost as great an extent as if the gift had never been made. If the so-called gift consists of stock in a family business, the business may still remain under the complete control of the family. Property may be bought from the private trust or foundation or sold to the private trust or foundation with little or no public scrutiny of the terms of these transactions, convenient salaries may be paid to relatives the donor would otherwise be required to support, and funds are available for loans in case the donor's business needs financial assistance.

The provisions of this bill relating to exempt organizations are designed to limit the tax exemption of the charitable and educational organizations to their original purposes; and to make sure that private donors will not receive the tax advantages of being philanthropists without actually giving their money away.

The first provision provides that where a charitable or educational organization goes into the business world and engages in active competition with private business, it is to be taxed at the ordinary income-tax rates on the income from that business. Their tax-exempt status as far as their other activities are concerned is not touched. This provision also applies to the labor, agricultural, and horticultural organizations and to the trade associations and business leagues.

The tax does not apply where an exempt organization engages in a business which is substantially related to the charitable or other functions for which the organization is exempt. Nor does it apply if the work in carrying on the business is performed without compensation as where an institution holds a bazaar without paying anyone for the work done. In the case of the charitable and educational organizations, income from an active business will also be exempt if the business is carried on primarily for the convenience of its members or students. This, for example, would exempt from tax a student restaurant run by a school.

The receipt of interest, dividends, and royalties does not constitute carrying on an active business. In general, the receipt of rent is also considered a proper activity for these organizations and is not taxed. Historically, the colleges and other exempt organizations have often invested their endowments in rental property—and the bill does not tax this.

Mr. COMBS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LYNCH. I yield to my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. COMBS. In two places in the bill there is an exemption of rents and royalties and things of that nature from the restrictions which would class them as unrelated income.

Mr. LYNCH. That is interest, dividends, and royalties.

Mr. COMBS. That is of tremendous importance to colleges and charities in my State, as well as in every other State in the Union.

It is frequently the best investment that these schools can make to invest in oil royalties. In some instances, the Treasury has seen fit to make a distinction between a royalty and an overriding royalty, although in our concept there is no material difference. Neither participates in the management, of course, of the producing concern.

I ask the gentleman if it is not true as stated in the report on page 110 and page 117 that it is the unanimous thought of our committee that royalty is royalty and that includes overriding royalty?

Mr. LYNCH. There is no question about that. It was the intention of the committee to include the overriding royalties in the general classification of royalties, as we have set forth in the report on page 110, and as you have indicated, also on page 117 where it says royalties include overriding royalties.

Mr. COMBS. In other words it will include overriding royalties carved out of the working interest, is that correct?

Mr. LYNCH. That is correct.

Mr. COMBS. I believe the Treasury also has something to say on it.

Mr. LYNCH. I have a copy of a letter which the Treasury Department sent to the chairman of the committee under date of June 27, 1950. It reads as follows:

> MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The Department has been asked whether in the course of the administration of H. R. 8920 in its present form overriding royalties would be included within the term "royalties" in the determination of amounts to be excluded from unrelated business income and in the computation of accumulated investment income with respect to certain charitable, etc., organizations under title III of the bill. Based upon the bill in its present form and the pertinent interpretations thereof on pages 110 and 117 of the accompanying report of the committee (H. Rept. No. 2319), it is the view of the Department that overriding royalties would be included within the term "royalties" for such purposes.
> Sincerely yours,
>
> THOMAS J. LYNCH,
> Acting Secretary of the Treasury.

Does that answer the gentleman's question?

Mr. COMBS. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LYNCH. I yield.

Mr. ALBERT. I have an inquiry from a foundation which does work on handicapped children, particularly with reference to cleft lips and cleft palates. May I read just a sentence from the letter:

> Our institution is maintained principally by investments, although occasionally we have a contribution of a pretty good size. We are anxious to continue working.

Would this bill in any way affect the profits for the purpose indicated here?

Mr. LYNCH. As I understand the question, the income of this organization is derived from investments and from work in which those people are engaged and is directly connected with the exempt purposes of the organization. That is, to supply outfits of some kind for the physically handicapped.

Mr. ALBERT. That is right.

Mr. LYNCH. Under those circumstances, definitely this bill would not in anywise affect them.

However, in order to correct abuse where some of the universities have purchased real estate with borrowed funds and leased it back the bill requires the educational or charitable organizations to include in with their taxable business income, which I previously described, the rents they received on these leases to the extent of the indebtedness outstanding against the rental properties. In other words, this bill does not affect a university which receives rents as a result of investing its endowment funds in rental property. However, it does tax a university which borrows on its exemption to buy property in an attempt to receive tax-free rents.

The fact that charitable organizations are presumed to be using their tax exempt income for desirable purposes represents the basic reason for granting them income-tax exemptions. If an organization fails to use its income and simply accumulates it instead, there is no social reason why the Federal Government should provide an income-tax exemption. There are a tremendous number of private trusts and foundations, however, which claim exemption and which fail to distribute their income for any of the useful purposes for which their exemptions are provided.

Therefore, the bill provides for a tax on the investment income of these organizations to the extent that it is accumulated. This provision does not apply to publicly supported charitable institutions, to schools and colleges, or to churches and other religious organizations. It does apply, however, to private foundations and to all trusts. The tax is limited to these latter types of organizations because the committee believed that the publicly supported charitable organizations, the colleges and schools, and the religious organizations are spending their income for exempt purpose on a fairly current basis.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LYNCH. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. May I ask the gentleman this question: Suppose the University of Michigan has a lease on a commercial airport at Ypsilanti, Mich., which airport is used by all commercial carriers, freight, express, and human beings; and from that lease and concessions granted it derives a substantial profit, would the University of Michigan be taxable on that income?

Mr. LYNCH. Is this a lease—where the university just leases the airport?

Mr. CRAWFORD. It is where the university leases the airport.

Mr. LYNCH. And derives income from the operation of the leased property?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Derives income from the lease.

Mr. LYNCH. I should say that it would not be included in the provisions of this act. State institutions, being regarded as political subdivisions of a State are not covered by the bill.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LYNCH. I yield.

Mr. MILLS. Would it not depend entirely upon whether there was an indebtedness owed by the university on the airfield which it leased?

Mr. CRAWFORD. The university leases the airport.

Mr. MILLS. And there is no indebtedness owed by the university on the property?

Mr. CRAWFORD. No. The university does not purchase the airport. It leases the airport and in turn makes arrangement with commercial planes to bring their craft in there, to land, and to give service to the people, freight, express, passenger, and so forth, and grants concessions or sells concessions and draws income. If there is a net profit in the whole proposition, is the university subject to tax?

Mr. MILLS. The university does the entire operation itself, through concessions?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes.

Mr. MILLS. Well, since it is a State institution, it is not covered by the bill.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is what I am getting at.

Now, another question. Suppose Society Aid, which is a society which promotes good music and entertainment, and has a symphony orchestra, and collects funds over a period of years, and buys a piece of business real estate on the main street of a town and leases those business buildings, for instance to Sears, Roebuck or Montgomery Ward, on a 5, 10, 20, or 50-year lease, from which it draws a very substantial net income after paying its taxes, would that income be subject to taxation?

Mr. LYNCH. Did the society invest its own money?

Mr. CRAWFORD. The society invested its own money in the ownership this time, not leasing.

Mr. LYNCH. Where it invests its own money, and did not borrow money for that purpose, it would not come under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In other words, the income would not be taxable.

Mr. LYNCH. That is right.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Suppose the University of Michigan, a State institution, we will say, buys a building, equips it with machinery and machine tools and manufactures and sells automobiles, radios, clothing, cultivators, tractors, and so forth, and earns a profit thereon; is that income taxable under this bill?

Mr. LYNCH. As a part of the State, as has been indicated before, it would not be taxed, because State institutions are not taxed as such under the bill; but it seems to me that the University of Michigan would not engage in the business of manufacturing automobiles.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am not saying they will do it.

Mr. COMBS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LYNCH. I yield.

Mr. COMBS. I will ask my colleague from New York if this is not true: That if this activity to which the gentleman from Michigan referred is carried on as a part of the instruction given by the institution, whether it be private or otherwise, such, for instance, as training technicians, and that is only an incident——

Mr. LYNCH. That is not the question the gentleman from Michigan put.

Mr. CRAWFORD. May I say that I understand that the University of Michigan does have a school of aerodynamics that is located in a building on the airport.

Mr. LYNCH. That would be clearly connected with its educational facilities and would not under any circumstances be taxed. But this bill will impose no tax on the University of Michigan as it is a State university.

Mr. COMBS. In other words, it would not be an unrelated activity.

Mr. LYNCH. That is right.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LYNCH. I yield.

Mr. MILLS. The gentleman from New York, I am sure, has already pointed out in his fine statement that this unrelated business income about which we are talking applies only in cases of institutions exempt from tax under sections 101 (1), (6), (7), and (14) of the Internal Revenue Code, and organizations exempt under section 162 (a).

Mr. LYNCH. In general tax-exempt educational and charitable institutions.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LYNCH. I yield.

Mr. OHNSON. I would like to ask this question about semiprivate schools: Christian Brothers, a Catholic order, has a winery and vineyard and a lot of other agricultural operations out in my district, and they sell their products throughout the United States; do they come under this provision, or are they tax-exempt?

Mr. LYNCH. This bill does not apply to churches. It does apply to charitable and educational institutions organized under church auspices that engage in unrelated business activities. I do not know whether the Christian Brothers to whom the gentleman refers maintain a college in that area or not.

Mr. JOHNSON. They have a college.

Mr. LYNCH. I would assume that if they maintained a college and taught the liberal arts and went into the business of manufacturing wine—I can see no connection between the two—and entered into competition with other wineries, they would be taxed.

Mr. JOHNSON. Let me ask the gentleman another question: They do own

St. Mary's College where they teach liberal arts, engineering, and many other subjects, but they also have a farm in Napa County, a school to train the brothers. In connection with that they have all these agricultural operations, including a winery.

Mr. LYNCH. If it is in connection with the school that has to do with the development of agriculture, under those circumstances I would say that it was not taxable. If, on the other hand, there was a school there for the purpose of training the Christian Brothers and they engaged in this outside work of wine production, having no relation to the school, it seems to me under those circumstances they would rightly be taxed.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LYNCH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. RABAUT. If wine is produced for the purpose of religious services, use in the mass, for instance, would it be taxable?

Mr. LYNCH. Under those circumstances I do not believe it would be taxed, but that is a point of administration really for the Internal Revenue Department to determine, whether the wine is being produced for religious purposes or, as I see the advertisements in the cars and hear them over the radio about this Christian Brothers wine, it seems to me they are in the competitive wine business.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LYNCH. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I may say in answer to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. RABAUT] that this bill in no way affects the present taxation on fermented liquors or anything of that sort; so the present law with respect to religious wines remains the same. It would have no effect on that.

Mr. LYNCH. I understood the question was as to whether the profit derived from manufacture might be taxed.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LYNCH. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. REED of New York. In connection with the discussion of the competition of the Christian Brothers so far as wine is concerned, they are getting competition from other sources. For instance, the ECA has spent several hundred thousand dollars to develop a quality of wine that will be pleasing to customers in this country, which is affecting the wine people up in northern New York.

Mr. LYNCH. I know the gentleman from northern New York is well able to protect the people in his district who raise the grapes that make the wine.

Mr. EBERHARTER. May I say, in answer to the gentleman from New York, that perhaps that is an unrelated subject, and I refer to the ECA.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LYNCH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. With reference to the gentleman's comment that the Bureau of Internal Revenue will determine the question, will not the Bureau of Internal Revenue look to the intent of Congress as to what we intended to tax or not to tax? Perhaps it ought to be clarified in the bill because of the question the gentleman from California has raised.

Mr. LYNCH. It is not possible to define in the bill exactly every case that is going to be covered. We have drawn it so that there is a certain amount of discretion for the determination of questions of fact as to whether or not a certain matter comes within the purview of the bill.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield.

Mr. LYNCH. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. MILLS. It might be interesting to those who raise the question with regard to this section to say that there is a full discussion in the report on pages 36 and 37 and in the section of the report on the analysis of the bill beginning on page 109. It might further be of interest to the committee if the RECORD would show that the majority members of the committee asked the gentleman from New York to discuss this particular phase of the bill because of the deep understanding of the gentleman from New York in these problems. The RECORD should also show that what the gentleman from New York has said reflects the intention of the majority members of the committee with regard to this section of the bill.

Mr. LYNCH. The purpose of the provision which I referred to before the questions were asked is quite simple.

It is to make sure that the trusts and the private foundations actually do spend their tax-exempt income for exempt purposes within a reasonable period of time after the income is received. If they do this, no tax is imposed. If they do not, the foundations are subject to the ordinary corporate income tax on so much of their current income as they accumulate. In the case of trusts, the provision is the same except that they are subject to the individual income tax on the income that they accumulate.

Your committee has devoted a great deal of attention to making sure that this tax on accumulated investment income will work no hardship on the charitable organizations. For this reason the bill provides that each of these organizations may accumulate tax-free an amount equal to 1 year's investment income. This is what might be called a contingency fund. The committee has also taken account of the fact that some of these organizations may find it desirable to accumulate their income over a short period of time to accomplish a project which cannot be financed from 1 year's income. For this reason the bill provides that no tax shall apply to income of one of these organizations which is placed in a special, independent trust, if the assets of the trust are required to be used on a specific project within 5 years.

Furthermore, your committee felt that a person might legitimately provide by will that his property be left in trust to accumulate income over a reasonable period to accomplish some charitable or similar purpose. Consequently the tax on accumulated investment income does not apply in the first 25 years to income accumulated in trust on property left by a decedent. Also, in order to avoid hardship in the case of existing trusts, the bill provides that where the terms of a trust already in existence require income to be accumulated, no tax shall apply to the accumulated investment income.

A special abuse of the tax-exemption privilege has been permitted under some court decisions which hold that an organization is entitled to income-tax exemption even though it does not actually engage in any of the activities for which exemption is provided, if the organization's income is paid over to another exempt organization. These court decisions have resulted in particular business organizations obtaining income-tax exemption simply because their profits go to exempt organizations. This result was not anticipated when the section 101 exemptions were originally provided. An exemption to this type of organization is specifically denied by a provision in this bill which states that an organization engaged primarily in business for profit shall not be exempt merely because it is a so-called feeder organization, whose income goes to an actual exempt organization. This provision of the bill is not intended to have any implications with respect to the tax status of these feeder organizations in past years.

There are also a number of trusts with charitable, educational, and religious beneficiaries who, although not specifically exempt, in effect receive an income-tax exemption through the operation of a deduction for charitable, and so forth, contributions which is provided for in the sections of the Internal Revenue Code relating to trusts generally. Virtually all of the abuses which have been found among the exempt organizations have also been found among these trusts. The bill, therefore, provides substantially the same treatment for these trusts as it provides for the exempt trusts and private foundations. They will no longer be permitted a deduction for charitable contributions unless they actually make contributions; they will be taxed on their active business income, including their rental income from lease-back deals; and their charitable contribution deduction will be limited to 15 percent of their income if they engage in financial dealings with their donors or trustees.

Evidence has been found that in certain cases trusts or foundations have been used to permit donors or trustees to borrow funds from the exempt organizations and pay abnormally low interest rates considering the risk involved to the exempt organization. There is also evidence that trusts and foundations are paying excessive salaries to those who have set up the foundations or trusts or to their families. There are still other cases where services performed by the trust or foundation are given on a preferential basis to those establishing the trust.

To check these abuses this bill denies income, estate and gift-tax deductions for contributions to trusts or private foundations unless the charter or trust instrument of the organization to whom the funds are given stipulates that; first, no part of the organization's assets may be loaned to those setting up the organization or members of their families; second, only reasonable compensation for services actually rendered may be paid to such persons; third, the services performed by the organization may not be made available to the founders and members of their families on any special basis; fourth, the assets of the organization may not be used to purchase securities from the founders or members of their families; and fifth, no substantial part of the property of the organization may be sold to the founders or members of their families. Also trusts and foundations which actually engage in any transactions of this type in the future will be denied income-tax exemption.

It is recognized that time will be required for the organizations involved to amend their charters or trust instruments to include these stipulations. Therefore, the provision denying deductions to donors in certain cases is not made effective until June 30, 1951. The question has also been raised as to how a trust already in existence can meet these requirements. The answer is quite simple. Anyone desiring to make a contribution to a trust already in existence would make his contribution to a new trust containing these stipulations, but having the same trustees and the same beneficiaries as the old trust.

The last provision of the bill relating to trusts and foundations deals with the loophole which now allows a wealthy family owning a family business to obtain a charitable deduction by giving part of the stock in a family business to a foundation which the family controls. Under present law this meets the test of a charitable contribution for income, and more particularly, for estate and gift tax purposes. Nevertheless, it is quite obvious that the family in such cases has not really parted with control over the so-called gift. The family still retains the right to vote the stock held by the foundation and continues control of the family business in much the same way as before the foundation was established.

Because the donors have not actually parted with the property they are supposed to have given away in these cases, this bill provides that for income, estate, and gift tax purposes no charitable deduction shall be allowed where both of the following conditions exist:

First. The contributor or members of his family control the trust or foundation to which the contribution is made, and Second. The contribution consists of stock in a family corporation which the contributor and his family control.

This provision is more lenient than it might at first be supposed. A deduction will still be granted with respect to a gift of stock in a family business given to a trust or foundation which the family does not control. Moreover, a deduction would be granted even where the family does control the trust or foundation if the stock in a family business is sold and the cash is turned over to the foundation.

I have noticed in the minority report that exception is taken to the closing of this loophole. I recognize, of course, that our top estate tax rates are high and that, as a result, some families may lose control of a family business upon the death of the principal owner. As long as the existing estate tax rates continue, however, I do not see why those who are in a position to establish foundations or trusts should receive more favorable estate or gift tax treatment than others not in such a position.

Nor do I see any reason why some should be allowed to avoid estate or gift taxes on a part of their family business by making contributions to a foundation they control and yet control the stock turned over to the foundation as effectively as if it were still in the family name.

The committee in working out the provisions of this bill relating to educational and charitable organizations has done so with full appreciation of the splendid work they have done and are doing in their respective fields. We desire that they should continue their great contribution to the public good and feel that this can best be accomplished by enacting the provisions in this bill. We frankly fear that if nothing is done at this time to correct palpable abuse and definite misuse of the exemption, the invasion by a few of those tax-exempt educational and charitable institutions into competitive business fields in these days of high income taxes will result in stronger counterattacks by already heavily tax-burdened business against exemption for any of the now exempt institutions.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN].

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Chairman, by no stretch of the imagination can this bill be called tax relief. It is merely a tax-shifting bill. The only hope of getting real tax relief is economy in Government and a real desire by President Truman and the Congress to eliminate extravagance and waste.

There are some good things in this bill and there are some bad things. What we who have the responsibility of voting must decide is—does the good outweigh the bad, or vice versa.

Certain excise taxes are reduced or repealed—some of which have been very burdensome and some of which are certainly unfair.

The Democratic majority should never have put a tax on baby oil, and surely they have waited a long time to remove the tax on women's handbags, and on such cost of living items as cooking stoves, the tax on which was imposed in 1941 to conserve scarce material needed for the war effort.

The bill plugs up certain loopholes, some of which I have been calling to the attention of the Treasury for several years. I am pleased that at long last the Democratic majority have seen fit to do something about them.

I believe I was the first in the Congress to introduce legislation to deal with some of the phoney charitable trusts.

I also called attention several years ago to the methods used by certain speculators who, through short selling, were changing what really were short-term profits into long-term profits and thus avoiding their fair share of taxes.

The bill also plugs up a loophole which some municipal bond dealers have taken advantage of since last October by which, as dealers, they were able to write off against their earnings large premiums through placing a high coupon rate on near maturities of issues which they bought.

It also plugs up a loophole which was opened up a few weeks ago by a Supreme Court decision which granted to holders of convertible bonds the right to write off the premium to the call price.

By the change in the notch provision for small corporations, it certainly makes more understandable and fairer the taxes on corporations with net income between $25,000 and $50,000, and the bill reduces the taxes on corporations whose net income is between $5,000 and $166,000.

Those corporations with a net income of $50,000 get a real benefit—their taxes being lowered from $16,350 to $13,450; for those with incomes over one hundred thousand the benefit is comparatively small. But for those corporations which provide 70 percent of the goods sold, there is approximately an 8-percent increase in the tax—amounting to $708,000,000.

The rate on these corporations goes to 41 percent, which is a higher rate than Congress saw fit to impose during the war when every segment of our economy was rightly asked to make heavy sacrifices.

Of course, large corporations have few friends and this is perhaps an easy way for the political-minded to increase the revenue. But everyone knows that in the long run it is the consumer who will pay most of this added burden in higher costs of the goods which he purchases, for taxes are as much a part of the cost of manufacturing an article as is the price of labor and materials that must be purchased.

Prices are set to make an over-all profit for the stockholders after all costs have been considered when competitive conditions allow.

It is particularly easy to understand this in the case of a public utility. I think in all States these companies are regulated by commissions and the utilities are allowed rates which will give their investors a fair return on their prudent investment in the business. Usually this is a figure which is calculated to be enough to make possible additional investment in the company if expansion is needed. The rate differs among various States. Here on the east coast it is usually now about 5½ percent.

The lowered net income resulting from this tax will be one of the factors which these utility companies may use in requesting higher rates, and ultimately increased rates will be granted and passed on to the user of gas for cooking and heating, and the user of the electricity.

The revenue of all the utilities in this country is $1,500,000,000. So that the impact of this tax will be felt by the consumer, who, in the long run, will pay $45,000,000 more annually for these essential services.

The direct impact of the tax is not so clear on companies not subject to regulations, but they will inevitably pass most of it on to the consumer.

A large proportion of the meat and groceries purchased by the average man now are sold by the chain stores. These will bear the increased tax, and it will ultimately be added to their prices. Even the corner grocer buys most of his supplies from large corporations, which must add to the price of these articles.

As I said before, it has been estimated that more than 70 percent of the entire business in this country is done by these corporations whose Federal taxes will be increased by this bill.

So let us see what we are really doing here:

By lowering many of these excise taxes we are taking some of the cost off nonessential items which the general public may want to buy, and at the same time we are placing this tax on the cost of living items which they must buy.

There certainly are some areas in the excise-tax field which need a reduction at the present time, but to reduce the taxes for one who chooses to buy a diamond necklace or a mink coat or a ticket to South Pacific, and replace this with a tax on such cost-of-living items as groceries purchased from the A. & P., milk from the Borden Co., or gas for cooking from the neighborhood utility company does not seem to me to be helping those who need help most.

Of course it may be good politics to substitute a hidden tax which the general public will not know they are paying for a retail excise tax which people know they are paying and object to, but it certainly is not helping those in the lower income group.

Today it is those people who are suffering most from the high cost of living.

If the President's policy of large deficits continues, it is inevitable that the cost of living will go higher and higher, and this bill will give it an added push.

Some have argued that this tax will be taken out of the dividends which these larger corporations will pay. Of course this is not true in the long run, but it might be true the first year or so.

Say that it is true. It is a well-known fact that the larger the corporation, the more small stockholders it has. The Ford Co. may be said to be the exception that proves the rule.

The small corporation which will benefit from this bill usually has not more than a half dozen stockholders, but the large corporations which will bear the additional tax often have hundreds of thousands. For instance, I am told that over half the stockholders of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co.—in fact, 350,000—hold five shares or less. So that if the impact of this increased tax results in lower dividends most of those who will suffer will be the small stockholder: the little man you Democrats claim you are trying to help, but actually rarely do by the legislation which you pass.

A representative of the Treasury when asked in committee where this money was coming from said it would come out of the reserves of these corporations. This, of course, is nonsense and showed a complete lack of experience by these people in ever meeting a payroll or running a business, for no business keeps at any time on hand any more reserves than are absolutely necessary. They, like all of us, want to put any money which is available to work as promptly as possible.

So this additional $708,000,000 tax will definitely be paid by the consumers when they purchase the products of these corporations.

We must remember that it is usually the sizable corporation which through its methods of mass production and efficiency is able to produce goods attractive to the average pocketbook.

I quote from an editorial in the Newark Evening News, a leading newspaper in New Jersey:

> The marvels of American mass production and the American spirit of initiative find spectacular expression in large corporate operations. Those are the aspects of the American system that are being penalized in the Ways and Means Committee's superpolitical tax recommendations.

There are other portions of the bill that may well be questioned. Under the amendment to section 117 (j), which gives capital treatment to both gains and losses of business property, a businessman when times are bad may never be able to take a loss on property on which he may have a heavy loss, as capital losses can only be taken against capital gains. This is manifestly unfair.

Another bad feature is that which provides that deficiencies will bear a 6 percent rate of interest, while refunds bear only 3 percent. Certainly if an individual deliberately understates his tax liability he should be charged 6 percent, but there is already a 5 percent penalty for negligence and most arguments between a taxpayer and the Treasury are a result of an honest difference of opinion of interpretation of the very complicated tax laws. Often the agent is seeking to get money to which the Government is in no way entitled.

Before a case is finally settled several years may elapse. A credit of only 3 percent interest if the Government has been entirely wrong in its interpretation of the law, and a charge of 6 percent interest if the taxpayer has misinterpreted the law, is decidedly unfair.

Then we have the so-called Mills plan. This was originally conceived as a scheme to lull the people by making the Federal deficit seem smaller. Now it is proposed as a reform.

There are plausible arguments to back it as a reform, for why should corporations have the use of the money which they owe the Federal Government when an individual must pay his taxes currently.

This plan might well be included in some future tax revision bill, but that the reason why it appears in this bill is still phoney may be shown by the fact that the Democratic majority still allow corporations to pay taxes in two installments—on March 15 and June 15—and that both these dates come within the last part of the fiscal year. If there are to be two installments—and why should there be—why not have them April 15 and July 15, or March 15 and September 15?

It is very evident that the purpose of placing this change in the bill is not reform but a desire to fool the people as to the size of the Government's deficit in the next few fiscal years.

While owing to President's Truman's extravagances, we are spending $5,000,000,000 more than we are taking in, I doubt the wisdom of reducing excise taxes on nonessentials by such a figure as $1,000,000,000.

If we are to go nearly all across the board, why would it not be fairer to make an equal percentage decrease in all excise taxes which were increased owing to the impact of war, while removing entirely those which were imposed not to bring revenue but to conserve scarce material?

We have just been informed that the cost of living for the past month has had a sharp rise, the sharpest in 22 months. I am very much opposed to increasing the cost of living by adding $708,000,000 of additional taxes to those businesses which provide 70 percent of the goods which the average man has to purchase to live. This will be a heavy burden on the consumers in my district.

It seems to me that the bad things in this bill exceed the good ones. Therefore, I expect to vote against it on final passage.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEAN. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. EBERHARTER. The gentleman mentioned that the tax rate set in this bill for corporations making more than $167,000 a year profit was higher than the tax rate during the war. The gentleman does not fail to mention that we had an excess-profits tax during the war.

Mr. KEAN. Certainly we did, and I am very glad we did.

Mr. EBERHARTER. In addition to that we also had the Renegotiation Act so that these tremendous profits were siphoned back into the Treasury. Right now we are having a very successful business activity among certain corporations. This bill will just siphon a little of that excess profit into the Treasury which so badly needs it.

Mr. KEAN. This is a high tax; this is a higher tax on the corporation which does not make excess profits than the tax which applied during the war. There are lots of corporations that did not have to pay any excess-profits tax. There were lots of corporations that did not have the fine technique of getting Government business; maybe they did not have friends on the gentleman's side of the aisle.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I would say that most of the revenue coming by reason of this 41-percent rate would be classified under the War Act as excess profits.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEAN. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. I wonder if the gentleman would comment on this matter of bigness as it relates to corporations as a test of ability to pay. It seems to me that although we do use the size of income as far as individuals are concerned as a test of ability to pay, there is a distinction and a difference between individuals and corporations which certainly does not take into consideration any of the factors of investment or earnings on investment or even the size of the income of the individual; nor, as the gentleman pointed out in his description of the number of stockholders and the distribution of money as between so-called big corporations and small corporations.

Mr. KEAN. The gentleman is entirely right. The graduated income tax as far as the individual is concerned I think is perfectly justified on the ability to pay principle; but, as I said, the larger the corporation, the more little stockholders it has; and the penalty in putting a graduated tax on the size of the corporation is on the little fellow. It does not penalize, except perhaps in rare instances like the case of the Ford Corp., the very wealthy stockholder.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. If this rate is going to be based upon ability to pay, as far as corporations are concerned, it would seem to me you would have to take into consideration the question of the investment in the company.

Mr. KEAN. Surely.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Not the plain item of income.

Mr. TOWE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEAN. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. TOWE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN] has made a very accurate analysis of this bill. It shows that it really is not in the interest of the great majority of the people of this country. I would like to compliment him and to say that I am in complete accord with his viewpoint.

Mr. KEAN. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEAN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. On this matter of investment and the reserves of corporations, said reserves coming in through the setting up of corporation employees' pension funds, I think the gentleman quoted somebody to the effect that these new taxes are to be paid out of corporation reserves.

Mr. KEAN. That is what the Treasury Department thinks.

Mr. CRAWFORD. All right. What, then, would happen to an industrial pension program that is being set up under these collective-bargaining agreements if those reserves are used for the purpose of paying corporation taxes?

Mr. KEAN. These people in the Treasury who have had no experience in business in any way think a surplus is cash and that all reserves of corporations are just sitting around doing nothing. They do not realize, as I said, that no corporation or no individual ever lets any money sit idly by if he can help it. The gentleman would not have ten or fifteen thousand dollars sitting in a bank doing nothing. He would want to invest that money. He would want a return on it. So do these corporations. You might have an extraordinary case right at the moment when some corporation has a high earning period like General Motors when it might have excess reserves, but normally the reason that company balances are kept in the bank and the reason they are kept in cash is that the company may want to borrow from that bank some day and by keeping its deposits up and the good will of that bank they will be able to borrow money.

Mr. CRAWFORD. There is another reserve showing up on corporation balance sheets and that is where the corporation carries its own insurance and sets up the same amount of insurance reserve that it had previously paid to insurance companies. Many corporations are doing that. Although that reserve might or might not be taxable as taxable income, the corporation not having spent it, and being permitted to deduct only that portion which is actually paid out for loss, to dissipate that reserve through the payment of taxes is to completely demolish the insurance scheme of the corporation; is that not true?

Mr. KEAN. Neither of the things which the gentleman from Michigan has mentioned is available to pay taxes to the Treasury.

Mr. CRAWFORD. May I ask another question? Under the collective-bargaining agreements now being made, which provide for industrial pensions we will call them, are those reserves thus created deductible in arriving at taxable income, whether tied in to the collective-bargaining agreement as a part of the wage consideration paid to the employee or not?

Mr. KEAN. Frankly, I do not know.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I wonder if the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means or the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER], could answer that question?

Mr. KEAN. I think that would be subject to an interpretation by the Treasury.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The question is this: Where an industrial corporation makes a collective-bargaining agreement with organized labor, and that agreement provides for an employee pension fund and becomes a part of the wage schedule, are those deductions made by the corporation and put into the reserve to meet obligations hereafter deductible in arriving at the taxable income of the corporation?

Mr. COOPER. If they can qualify and establish an employees' pension plan under the Internal Revenue Code that would be true.

Mr. KEAN. I think they have to go to the Bureau of Internal Revenue and get clearance on the type of fund, and if it is set up in a certain way, I think they allow a deduction.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEAN. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. HOLMES. I think you will find that they will have to get an administrative ruling in relation to the character of the fund.

Mr. CRAWFORD. To that extent it goes into the collective-bargaining agreement and is not cleared. That reserve then, which is a liability to the employees under the collective-bargaining agreement, might also become a liability for the payment of corporation income taxes.

Mr. COOPER. I think it is section 165 of the Internal Revenue Code which provides the basis upon which they must qualify.

Mr. CRAWFORD. As these pension funds provided for in the collective-bargaining agreement get clearance from the Bureau of Internal Revenue, they will begin to grow, and within a few years they will involve literally billions of dollars. I have been discussing this with a great many corporation officials during the last 3 weeks, and they are now wondering in what they will invest those funds, and then later on, how far they must go. Now, there might be such a thing where these funds some day will be invested in FHA mortgages, for instance. So, we are now starting on a movement, good, bad, or indifferent—I am not discussing that, but it gets into this question of our reserves where, through these agreements, we will build up enormous funds which will be invested somewhere for the protection of the employees.

Mr. KEAN. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF].

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Chairman, the delay by the Democratic majority in providing excise-tax relief has been unconscionable. The relief provided in this bill is pitifully inadequate, and the deceit on the public by shifting some of the excise taxes to a higher corporate levy makes this bill a travesty on sound tax legislation.

For months the Democratic majority has delayed in reporting excise relief legislation to the House. Now it may be too late. In any event, it is too little.

Three times the Republican minority on the Ways and Means Committee tried to force the Democratic majority to report excise-tax-relief legislation to the House. Each time we were defeated on a straight party vote. Typical of the resolutions offered by the Republican minority to force immediate action is the following resolution which I offered on behalf of the Republican minority on February 3 and again on March 13, 1950:

> Whereas public hearings have revealed many areas in which certain excise taxes are causing serious hardship by reason of consumer resistance, production cut-backs, and unemployment; and
> Whereas public hearings have further revealed that it is essential to relieve this condition at once, I move that the committee immediately prepare excise-relief legislation providing for the reduction and/or elimination of excise taxes to relieve this condition and report such legislation to the House forthwith prior to consideration of other revisions of the Internal Revenue Code.

As a peacetime measure the excise-tax relief provided in this bill is wholly inadequate. Only a few of the wartime excise taxes imposed or increased under the Revenue Acts of 1941, 1942, and 1943 have been reduced or eliminated by this bill. Even the excise taxes imposed or increased in the Revenue Act of 1943 have not all been eliminated. You will perhaps recall the Democratic charge that the Republicans kept these taxes on after the war; that the Democrats were in favor of removing them. In view of this, would you not think that the majority would now do what they promised and repeal the taxes imposed or increased by the 1943 act? You might think so, but now that they have their chance, the Democrats have refused to fulfill their promise. To cite just a few examples, I call your attention to the fact that the 20-percent tax on electric-light bulbs imposed by the 1943 act has not been reduced at all in this bill; the 20-percent tax on dues and admissions has not been reduced; the 8-percent tax on wire equipment service has not been reduced.

The revenue raised by excise taxes has increased from approximately $500,000,000 in 1932 to $7,500,000,000 today.

All of the existing excise taxes have been imposed or increased under Democratic Congresses.

Among the unfortunate omissions in H. R. 8920 is the failure to provide for a lower tax on cigarettes manufactured to retail at not more than 12 cents per package. I have introduced a bill to achieve this by reducing the present $3.50 tax per 1,000 on cigarettes to $2.45 per 1,000 on cigarettes manufactured to retail at not more than 12 cents per package. This tax reduction for economy-brand cigarettes would be passed on to the consumer.

As the result of the noncompetitive prices in the cigarette industry, persons in the lower income groups have nevertheless to pay the same amount of tax on their cigarettes as the more prosperous segment of our population pay for their high-priced cigarettes. This is most unjust. However, an ad valorem tax on cigarettes, for which there is ample precedent in the tobacco industry, would give an opportunity for smaller cigarette manufacturers to continue in business and for new manufacturers to enter the cigarette production field.

Year after year all the executive departments of the Government have consistently favored the principle of a graduated tax on cigarettes, and the failure by the democratic majority to provide for this in this bill is an indication of the democratic affection for the big cigarette monopoly interests of the country. Party contributions have obviously been put ahead of cheaper cigarettes for the people.

Instead of raising corporate taxes and thus in effect providing only token excise tax relief, Federal expenditures for domestic programs must be immediately reduced before it is too late and the tragedy of inflation has been unleashed. It may already be too late. If this had been done, as the Republicans urged, the people of the country could have real tax relief. But, instead, at the end of today and every day the Truman administration will have sunk the country $15,000,000 deeper into debt as the result of siphoning from the people approximately $104,000,000 per day and spending at the exorbitant rate of $119,000,000 per day.

In 1945, when we were fighting the war and had over 11,000,000 men under arms—Federal, State, and local governments collected $52,500,000,000 in taxes from the people of this country, and yet this year these three taxing powers are collecting $55,000,000,000, or about 25 percent of the national income and more than the entire national income in 1932, 1933, or 1934.

Just 20 years ago the total budget was only $3,000,000,000. For the new fiscal year the President asked for over $42,000,000,000 and the sudden turn of world events may call for much more.

Just 20 years ago the Government had less than 600,000 civilian employees. Today there are more than 2,000,000.

Even worse than the appalling and shocking increase in Federal expenditures, which has amounted to almost $10,000,000,000 per year since only 1948, has been President Truman's demand for increased spending for domestic programs which, instead of strengthening the solvency of the Nation during peacetime, would force us into bankruptcy.

President Truman has asked the Congress for, and is urging, domestic programs unrelated to national defense which will increase Federal expenditures by $7,000,000,000 in the next year, and $25,000,000,000 per year within the next 4 or 5 years.

We must immediately return to fiscal sanity and sound tax legislation. Unfortunately President Truman has ill-equipped this Nation for emergency and his fiscal and tax policies since the end of World War II have already brought us to the bring of a financial crisis.

We cannot spend ourselves into prosperity. Prices are rising and the dollar is shrinking. Already the real value of savings, pensions, annuities, and insurance has been cut almost in half. A 10-cent dollar is fast approaching. Taxes are eating at the foundation of our free-enterprise system; are stifling the incentive and ambition to produce; and are enslaving the American people by depriving them through excessive taxation of their right to spend their own money. Instead of strengthening the economy, President Truman's extensive spending and taxation have weakened our capacity to meet the demands on our productive capacity which we may be called upon to meet.

RAISING THE CORPORATE RATE

In 1945 the President endorsed the $3,000,000,000 reduction in corporate excess-profits taxes, although there was a deficit for that year of $20,000,000,000. Then, on January 7, 1948, he recommended the reimposition of this tax, and in 1949 he proposed to increase corporate taxes by $4,000,000,000, or $800,000,000 more than he proposed in 1948. In the summer of 1948, however, he withdrew this proposal. But a few months later he intimated that he was in favor of increasing them. In his special tax message of January 23, 1950, to the Congress he proposed to increase corporate taxes by a billion dollars despite the fact that the combined net income of all reported companies in 1949, after taxes and after deducting deficits, amounted to $10,400,000,000 as compared with $11,800,000,000 in 1948.

That the President and his tax advisers do not understand the true nature of the corporation tax is clear from the above brief account of their hit-and-miss tax recommendations. What apparently they do not understand is that a corporation is only a legal fiction and that corporations do not pay taxes—they only act as collecting agents for the Treasury, their stockholders and their management, and the public. In the end it is the people who always pay.

Economists may disagree as to the proportion of corporate taxes which are borne by stockholders or passed to the general public, but there is no disagreement that higher corporate taxes mean a combination of higher prices, reduced purchasing power, and curtailed business expansion.

Aside from the fact that this bill only shifts taxes and does not provide any real tax relief, raising the top corporate rate from 38 percent to 41 percent is unwise tax legislation—particularly in this period of sudden national crisis, when every effort should be made to maintain the delicate balance between the forces of inflation and bust and a stable expanding economy capable of increased production. It is imperative for the Congress to stop, look, and listen. Any other step will only increase the financial upheaval which has hit the stock market in the last 2 days, resulting in the precipitous drop and fluctuation of the securities and commodities market.

The people of America are alarmed. It is our duty to assure them that the Congress will not place partisan politics above the best interest of our Nation. Any new tax legislation should be framed in the light of the change in world events and not in the light of the November elections.

WITHHOLDING ON DIVIDENDS AND PATRONAGE REFUNDS

There is absolutely no need to impose a new withholding tax on the American people. This bill already contains two provisions which will meet the problem of leakage of dividends and patronage refunds from the income tax. These two provisions are:

First. That all corporations and cooperative organizations be required to file information return Form 1099 on or before February 28 showing the aggregate amount of dividends or patronage refunds paid to any individual, trust, or estate, and the date of such payment.

Second. That all taxpayers be required to itemize the amount of each dividend and patronage refunds received, together with the name of the payor corporation.

Under existing law, corporations are now required to file a 1099 information return showing the name of the taxpayer and the amount of dividends paid, only in those cases where the amount of the dividends paid is $100 or more. By requiring corporations and cooperatives to file this form on all dividends and patronage refunds, irrespective of the amount, the Bureau will be advised of the name of every recipient, and not just those who received $100 or more from any one company, together with the amount received.

The second provision requiring every taxpayer to furnish an itemization of each dividend and patronage refund received will eliminate errors of computation and omission which account for most of the leakage of the items from the income tax. Under existing law, dividend and patronage-refund recipients report these distributions only as a gross amount in their annual income tax returns.

Taken together, these two proposals will furnish all the information needed by the Bureau and will just as effectively achieve the desired result.

The Democratic majority will undoubtedly claim that by not adopting the complex inequitable withholding, the Government will not obtain the additional $170,000,000 which they allege will be collected under the withholding scheme. This, of course, is pure politics.

In addition to the fact that the initiation of a flat 10 percent withholding system is entirely unnecessary, it will—

(a) Impose a hardship and inequity on millions of taxpayers by arbitrarily depriving them of 10 percent of their investment income, however small, and by withholding a tax against thousands of persons who owe no taxes whatever.

(b) Impose an expensive and difficult administrative burden on all corporations and cooperatives, particularly those which cannot afford the expense necessary in order to make the detailed computations.

(c) Be confusing to the ordinary taxpayer and difficult to apply equitably.

In the case of withholding on wages and salaries, established in the Current Tax Payment Act of 1943, the amount withheld from an employee is related to the number of the taxpayer's dependents and consequently an attempt is always made and an opportunity available to adjust the amount withheld to the taxpayer's actual tax liability.

The new flat arbitrary 10 percent withholding on all dividends and patronage refund payments will be made, however, without regard to the number of the recipient's dependents or his tax liability, if any, and as the result claims for refunds will have to be filed in literally hundreds of thousands of cases.

Some large companies will, of course, be able to afford the expensive equipment needed to comply with the complex withholding provisions. This will not be the case with small companies and cooperatives, however, and a substantial amount of paper work and red tape will have to be set up and met through additional personnel. In addition to complying with the law, it can be expected that stockholders of all companies will constantly be demanding additional or supplemental information for purposes of computing their tax credit and meeting their own requirements imposed by the new withholding.

In an attempt to apply the new withholding tax equitably, a complicated series of credit devices has been devised. This is necessary not only for the ordinary taxpayer, but because substantial proportion of stock is registered in names other than those of the actual owners. For example, stocks are frequently registered in "street" name, in the name of a "nominee" or in the name of business organizations operating as a partnership. Also, of course, stocks are held by various estates, trusts, guardian, custodian, and deposit accounts and the actual owners of which are scattered all over the world. Many of the actual owners may already be subject to various amounts of withholding. These problems are typical of the new complexities which the majority would impose upon the long-suffering public.

ACCELERATION OF CORPORATE PAYMENTS

To accelerate the time of corporate tax payments under normal conditions would be unwise—to do so now might be calamitous. By adopting this provision in the bill the Congress would be removing the last remaining cushion against subsequent sharp decline of revenue, and rather than stabilizing and equalizing the amount of receipts, the effect would be to widen inflationary and deflationary movements. Nothing could be more unwise at this time when the whole balance of our economy may hang in the balance.

REDUCTION OF INTEREST RATE ON REFUNDS

Section 602 of the bill reduces the interest rate on refunds to the taxpayer from 6 percent to 3 percent, thereby establishing a differential of 3 percent between the interest rate on refunds and deficiencies.

A differential between the interest rate on refunds and deficiencies is basically inequitable, and particularly a differential of 3 percent. There is no reason why the Treasury should extract 6 percent interest on the amount of a deficiency assessed against the taxpayer and at the same time pay only 3 percent in overpayments erroneously collected by the Treasury and withheld from the taxpayer. In both instances the mistake is generally the result of an honest difference of opinion between the Treasury and the taxpayer resulting from the complexity of our tax laws. A differential was attempted once before, but was repealed retroactively by the succeeding Congress as the result of the patent inequities which it produced. Take, as an example of the unfairness of the majority proposal, the case of a family partnership where the existence of a valid partnership for tax purposes is assumed by the members of the partnership. Several years later the partnership is held invalid for Federal tax purposes by the Bureau and as a result one member of the partnership will have a sizable additional assessment on which he must pay 6 percent interest, while the other members of the partnership will be entitled to refunds on which their interest will be only 3 percent. This is palpably unfair.

In effect the present high rate of interest is a penalty on both the Government and the taxpayer, and there is no justice in reducing the Government's penalty and continuing it against the taxpayer, against whom there is already a civil penalty of 5 percent for failure to file the return and a 5-percent penalty for negligence.

It does not take any familiarity with tax practice and procedure to recognize this proposal for what it is—a desperate effort to grab a little additional revenue, regardless of the inequity involved.

PROVISIONS AFFECTING SMALL AND NEW BUSINESSES

I have long recommended and urged that the 53 percent marginal rate on corporate income between $25,000 and $50,000 be adjusted. This has been done in this bill by substituting a flat 21 percent normal tax and a flat 20 percent surtax rate with a $25,000 surtax exemption. Although the effective rate on income under $50,000 is always less than 38 percent, the marginal rate of 53 percent in the area between $25,000 and $50,000 discourages the earning of additional income above $25,000.

The bill also amends existing law by providing for a 1-year carry-back and a 5-year carry-forward, thereby extending the period over which business income may be averaged from 5 to 7 years. This is a desirable change which I have long recommended, but in addition the majority should have redefined the definition of statutory net income for carry-over purposes in order to eliminate the existing discriminations against businesses with fluctuating incomes imposed by the 1942 act.

As a result of the technical limitations imposed by the 1942 act on the definition of the net operating loss for carry-over purposes, many taxpayers are unfairly deprived of carry-forward or backward of their actual losses. I believe that the statutory concepts of statutory net income used to determine the tax liability of a single year should also be used for carry-over and carry-back purposes. For example, under existing law a taxpayer in computing income subject to a tax in a given year includes only 15 percent of intercorporate dividends received, is allowed percentage depletion where applicable, and excludes tax-free interest. Section 122 of the code, however, permits none of these allowances in determining a net operating loss for carry-over and carry-back purposes, and the result is in effect to deny in part the benefits of tax exemption, percentage depletion, capital gains and loss provisions, and the credit for intercorporate dividends.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD].

Mr. FORD. Mr. Chairman, this tax bill is not altogether pleasing to me for it goes too far in some instances while in other cases the relief is inadequate. However, under the circumstances and despite the proposal's lackings, I feel the committee's bill should be approved. I intend to vote for H. R. 8290 on final passage but it is also my intention to support the motion to recommit providing, of course, such a motion contains the provisions heretofore released to the members of the minority.

This legislation undoubtedly will not be entirely satisfactory to many citizens in Kent and Ottawa Counties. By the time this bill becomes law, if it does, the tax relief may be "too little and too late" to save many enterprising small-business men who have been combating price resistance in the retail business for many months. It is regrettable that the administration leadership has stalled off until this late hour excise tax relief when it was perfectly obvious that various manufacturing concerns and their workers were suffering because our citizens throughout the Nation could not afford to pay the cost plus the prohibitive Federal excise taxes on the affected merchandise and services wanted and needed. The wartime-imposed excise taxes should have been reduced or repealed early in 1949 during the first session of the Eighty-first Congress. The Republican members of the House Committee on Ways and Means on at least two occasions attempted to force such legislative action but on each occasion were rebuffed on a straight party vote with the Democratic Party members on record against immediate excise tax relief. As a consequence of the majority party action, or lack of action, irreparable harm has resulted to our economy. Workers have lost jobs, businesses, both retail and manufacturing concerns, have gone out of existence or have suffered tremendous losses because of the continuation of these excessively high consumer taxes. In addition, consumers have foregone purchases because they just could not pay the prices with these prohibitive taxes included. The blame for this delay falls squarely on the shoulders of the majority party leadership.

One of the tragedies of this tax-revision bill is the failure of the committee to include a provision similar to a bill introduced by me in January 1950, namely, H. R. 6815. Under our existing Federal tax laws, home owners are severely penalized if and when a residence is sold. In other words, today if a home owner sells at a price above his cost, he must pay a tax on the gain; but if the same home owner sells his residence for a loss, he gets no credit for this loss on his income-tax return. There is no justification whatsoever for the continuation of this unfair and inequitable treatment of such transactions.

This provision in our tax code has actually contributed to the housing shortage throughout the Nation. The following excerpt from a letter received by me sets forth what has happened because of the existing law in this regard:

> Here is our problem: We bought our present home in 1919 for $4,200. It is an eight-room house, much too large for us, since our children have left. We are in urgent need of a smaller home, as an aged sister has come to live with us who is suffering from an incurable disease.
> We could sell our home for around $9,000, and it will cost us all of that to buy another. But the Government says the difference between what was paid and what it sells for today is profit, and takes a huge slice as a capital gain.
> I am sure that there are many folks of our age—we are both 65—who are having the same problem and would be glad to let folks with growing families have their too-large homes to bring up their families in.

In addition, many other citizens are penalized through no fault of their own when they are forced to move from one city to another for business reasons. For example, if a man lives in Chicago where he owns a home for which he paid $10,000 and he is transferred by his company to Grand Rapids, he must sell the Chicago residence. Assume that he sells for $12,000. Under the present tax laws he is liable for a capital gain on this transaction. When he comes to Grand Rapids to establish a home for his family he must again buy a residence. If he pays $12,000 for his new residence, he is inequitably penalized taxwise, even though, in reality, he is simply exchanging one home for another. This obvious injustice is compounded and made far worse when you realize that if he eventually is forced to sell for a loss no deduction is allowed in his subsequent tax returns.

H. R. 6815 or a similar provision will someday be a part of our Federal tax legislation. Its merit is such that it cannot be ignored for long. H. R. 6815 provides that if a taxpayer uses funds derived from the sale of his home for the purchase of another residence, no gain shall be recognized for tax purposes providing all money derived from the sale is used for the purchase of the new home. Any profit not used for the purchase of a new home, under the bill, would be taxable as before. It is difficult to see why such a provision was not acceptable to the committee.

In conclusion, I wish to go on record as favoring excise-tax repeal without any additional taxes of any sort. This procedure could have been followed if the President and his party leaders had made a sincere effort to reduce Federal expenditures. However, under the circumstances, where there is no alternative because of the gag-rule procedure, I shall support the pending legislative proposal inasmuch as the desirable good provisions far outweigh the bill's bad features.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. FORAND].

Mr. FORAND. Mr. Chairman, the question of excise tax reduction is of vital importance to the Nation. Over the past decade, we have come to rely more and more heavily on excise taxes for our Federal revenue. Excise tax collections for the fiscal year 1950 are expected to approach $8,000,000,000. This is more than has ever before been collected from this source. It is over four times as large as the $1,700,000,000 collected from the excises in 1940.

This vast increase in the use of excise taxation has not come about because we prefer excises and find inherent virtue in them. It has not come about because the excises are more equitable than other taxes in their impact on consumers and businessmen. Rather, it has come about because of the pressing needs of war finance. During the war the huge and unprecedented demands for revenue made it imperative to tap all available sources of tax revenue. The excise taxes were therefore summoned to bear their portion of the increased burden, together with the income taxes on individuals and corporations.

The shooting war has now been over for more than 5 years. When the wartime excise taxes were imposed, we wrote into the law a termination date for these war excises. They were to terminate 6 months after the President proclaimed the cessation of hostilities. Had no action been taken on the matter, they automatically would have terminated on June 30, 1947. But because of the financial needs resulting from the shooting war, the President asked the Eightieth Congress to extend the wartime excises for one more year. Instead of complying with the President's request, the Republican-controlled Eightieth Congress realizing that they could not permit the wartime excise law to expire and at the same time redeem their campaign pledges of reducing the income taxes, particularly those in the high brackets, passed a resolution repealing the termination date and thus made the wartime excise taxes permanent law.

It comes with poor grace on the part of the Republicans now to pretend to be champions of excise tax repeal when in fact they are responsible for making them permanent.

To call this tax bill a phony, as was done a few days ago by the leader of the Republican Party in this House, is, to my mind, a sham, and an attempt to mislead the public.

If ever there was a phony tax bill, it was the income tax reduction bill passed by the Republicans in the Eightieth Congress. That bill reduced income taxes by some $5,000,000,000. It gave 36.9 percent of the relief to 4 percent of the taxpayers; all of them with incomes of over $5,000 a year, and distributed the remaining 63 percent of the benefits in dribs and drabs to the remaining 96 percent of the taxpayers. I repeat if ever there was a phony tax bill, that was it.

Naturally, we cannot afford to eliminate all the excise taxes at this time, in view of the budget deficit, but it is imperative that we make a start in this direction, within the limits of our fiscal ability. The bill before us, H. R. 8920, makes such a start. It cuts excises by more than $1,000,000,000, on a full-year basis, but practically offsets this decline in revenue by closing tax loopholes and by increasing the income-tax rates for large corporations.

The bill distributes the more than $1,000,000,000 of excise-tax reduction where it will do the most good. This can readily be seen by touching on some of its high lights. In terms of revenue loss, the largest relief, $240,000,000, would go to the transportation taxes. The tax on the transportation of persons would be reduced from 15 to 10 percent; the tax on the transportation of property would be cut from 3 to 1½ percent; and the tax on the transportation of coal would be reduced from 4 cents to 2 cents a short ton. It is not hard to visualize the benefits which would flow from such tax reduction. The present taxes on transportation increase the cost of production and hence the price of practically every commodity sold in this country. The reduction of these taxes would therefore accord substantial relief to business firms throughout the Nation.

The second largest portion of the tax reduction, or $236,000,000, would be spread over the retail excises on jewelry, fur, luggage, and toilet preparations. The rates of tax on these items would be reduced from 20 percent to 10 percent.

The retail excises have a strong claim to share in the tax reduction. The present 20-percent tax rates are higher than most excise tax rates, especially since they are based on the retail price which includes the mark-ups of retailers and wholesalers, as well as the manufacturer's price. It is also common knowledge that the jewelry, fur, and luggage industries have in recent years suffered great declines in sales. Thousands of workers in these industries have been unemployed for months. The reductions in the retail excises provided by the bill would help wage earners and businessmen in these industries, and would provide substantial relief for consumers.

Special mention must also be made of the complete elimination of the tax on the retail sales of ladies' handbags and baby oil. These provisions would benefit millions of women and families in low-income groups.

Reductions in the admission and cabaret taxes would account for $200,000,000 of the tax decrease. By far the larger part of this relief would be expended on reducing the tax on entertainments like movies and baseball games from 20 percent to 10 percent. The reduction of this tax will help the low-income group who patronizes these forms of entertainment. It will also provide considerable assistance to the movie industry, whose box-office receipts have fallen off greatly in recent years, partly as the result of the competition of television.

The bill also makes adjustments in a large number of manufacturers' excises, which altogether will reduce revenue by about $195,000,000. Beneficial reductions are made in the rates of several excises which will materially aid consumers who in the final analysis bear most of the burden of these taxes. These reductions cover a wide range of items—tires and tubes, automobile parts and accessories, musical instruments, refrigerators, business and store machines, photographic apparatus and film and matches.

Several articles which are especially necessary for consumers like electric, gas and oil stoves, water heaters, and flatirons would be completely exempt from the manufacturers' tax. Photographic apparatus and film of the types used for commercial purposes would be completely exempt instead of being taxed at the present high rate of 25 percent. Sporting goods, like baseballs and footballs, which are used predominantly by schools or by children, would also be exempt from the 10-percent tax on sporting goods. This would eliminate the administrative and clerical difficulties placed on the sporting-goods industry by present law, which exempts sales of sporting goods to public schools, on condition that exemption certificates are filed. It would also encourage the purchase of athletic goods for children and so encourage them to engage in wholesome and healthful activities.

Finally, the taxes on communications would be decreased by $117,000,000. The tax on local residential telephone service would be reduced from 15 percent to 10 percent, thus aiding the millions of families for whom the telephone has become a necessity. The tax on telephone toll messages costing more than 24 cents would be decreased from 25 to 20 percent, and the tax on domestic telegraph messages cut from 25 percent to 10 percent. Here too, it is not difficult to see the benefits that would accrue to large numbers of business concerns which use long-distance telephone and telegraph services in the regular course of their business. Moreover, the reduction in the tax on domestic telegrams would give substantial relief to Western Union which has been in acute financial distress in recent years.

As I review the impressive list of benefits flowing from the proposed excise-tax reduction, it becomes increasingly clear to me that we must approve this bill. Millions of consumers and hundreds of thousands of business firms are depending on us to give them the excise-tax relief contained in the bill. We must not fail them.

Mr. Chairman, I regret to note that our Republican friends are so devoid of argument that they have had to resort to preaching the doctrine of fear and also that apparently they have determined to fight the battle of big corporations rather than to look after the welfare of the country as all of us think should be done now. I say that they are preaching the doctrine of fear because of the statements made by my good friend, the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED], yesterday, when he opened his remarks here on the floor which you will find in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD which came to us this morning.

If you will turn to page 9283 of the RECORD you will notice that in beginning to discuss the tax bill we now have under consideration, my good friend from New York said:

> Today we in the House of Representatives are considering, and I fear on the verge of passing—

A little further down in the next paragraph he said—

> The bill before us today is one of the most dangerous measures ever to come before the House.

And so on throughout his discussion. I say they are fighting the battle of big business because of their condemnation of the majority of the committee for having a provision in this bill to increase the corporate tax rate. They dwell upon the fact that what we should do is eliminate the excise taxes, but ignore completely the necessity of picking up money to offset that which we would lose. Of course, that is not a bit surprising. It is the old political expediency idea. It is the idea of voting for all appropriations and against all taxes, ignoring the effect of such action upon the Federal budget and upon the revenue sources of this country.

Oh, they shout loud the claim that to the Republicans belongs the credit for any action taken by way of repealing or reducing excise taxes. I do not know of anybody that deserves more credit than the Democrats for attempting to accomplish this job.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORAND. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts, the majority leader.

Mr. McCORMACK. As a matter of fact, many of the excise taxes that are now being reduced were made permanent by the Eightieth Republican Congress, contrary to their promise. We fought it. Then, even after making them permanent, they promised to repeal them before the Eightieth Congress was over. Of course, that is another forgotten promise.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORAND. I yield.

Mr. REED of New York. May I say to the distinguished leader of the majority that I have the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD here, and of course he voted for that bill with great enthusiasm.

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes, the gentleman from Massachusetts voted for it because the President had recommended that they be extended for a year.

Mr. FORAND. One year, that's right.

Mr. McCORMACK. We had nothing else to do. Nothing else could be done. Otherwise they would have automatically terminated. The revenue had to be obtained. We could not offer an amendment. I have no criticism about that. They brought in a closed rule, which is all right. I have no criticism of that because that applies to both parties. But we were in a position where there was nothing else we could do. But they did make them permanent.

Mr. FORAND. The gentleman is absolutely right. The reason they did that, and the record will show it, was because in the previous election campaign the Republicans had gone up and down the country preaching to the public generally that they were going to reduce the individual income taxes; and they did. But they realized also that they could not do both. So, taking advantage of the fact that the President had recommended a 1-year extension, they brought in a simple resolution, and I do not believe 10 percent of the membership of the House knew what that resolution meant, just striking out the termination date.

Then what did they do? They brought in that iniquitous tax-reduction bill, sponsored by our former colleague, Congressman Knutson, reducing the income taxes by $5,000,000,000, pretending that they were going to be very liberal and give everybody a break. What happened? Thirty-six and nine-tenths percent of the tax relief in that bill went to 4 percent of the taxpayers, the taxpayers in the higher brackets. Then the remaining 63 percent was passed out in dribs and drabs to the rest of the taxpayers, 96 percent of them.

Mr. REED of New York. You have been in full power. If that is such an iniquitous law, so damaging, especially to the people that need relief, why do you not repeal it?

I have not heard an audible sound out of you on that score.

Mr. FORAND. The gentleman realizes we are trying to do a good job. What I am criticizing is the method of distribution of tax relief which was in the bill, where only 4 percent of the taxpayers receive 36 percent of the relief. That is my criticism. And I go still further and call your attention to the fact that it was because of this repeal of the income tax to the tune of $5,000,000,000 that today the budget is out of balance.

Mr. REED of New York. I disagree with the gentleman because the President recommended the expenditure of $5,000,000,000 in excess of the $10,000,000,000 that you are talking about.

Mr. FORAND. The gentleman has a perfect right to disagree with me, but he does not change my mind one iota.

Mr. REED of New York. I did not expect to, sir.

Mr. FORAND. The record tells the story and not my words or the words of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. REED of New York. I notice the majority leader says that there was nothing else you could do because the President had requested it.

Mr. FORAND. That is on the excise tax.

Mr. REED of New York. You are still being a rubber stamp.

Mr. FORAND. That was on the excise tax. Talk about being a rubber stamp, just take the report on this bill. Talk about your rubber stamping—two of your members in the committee voted with the majority to report out the bill and then turned around and signed the minority views, thus presenting a united Republican front, criticizing the majority.

Talk about rubber stamping. Why, you are out—I am sorry, I cannot yield further.

Mr. REED of New York. Still you voted for that.

Mr. FORAND. I am sorry I cannot yield any further to the gentleman. I think I have answered his question.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORAND. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. Furthermore, they do not want to take into consideration the small businesses of the country. Most of them are opposed to any increase in the corporate taxes which, at the same time, takes care of more than 170,000 corporations, enabling them to meet this intense competition imposed upon them by big business.

Mr. FORAND. The gentleman from Massachusetts is absolutely right, and the newspapers all over the country have published the fact that our good old Republican friends have been squirming for 3 days trying to write up a motion to recommit, and now the report is that their motion to recommit is going to be to strike out that part relating to corporate taxes and just simply scuttle the excise tax, and let the thing hang.

Mr. McCORMACK. If such a motion to recommit is made, I hope for the record, so that those who come within the category of small business will know, that that motion will be an attack against their best interests, and against their business strength and business stability.

Mr. FORAND. The interesting part of this is that in this country there are 376,000 corporations with taxable income and out of that total only 25,000 will find their income taxes increased. The balance of them, with incomes of not to exceed $167,000, will either find they have to pay a little less tax or no more tax than they are paying at the present time.

In other words, it is real relief for 90 percent of the corporations in this country, the little corporations, and our Republican friends are fighting the battle of the big corporations regardless of the effect their actions may have on the little corporations.

It is interesting to note, and these are not my words, but I offer as documentary proof here the monthly letter for May 1950 issued by the National City Bank showing the total net income after taxes, by corporations reporting for the fiscal year 1949, to be a net total of $1,045,000,000. Those are not my words. These are the words of the National City Bank. In their March letter they say "2,127 companies whose reports are now available for 1949 show a combined net income after taxes and after deducting deficits of approximately $6,300,000,000." Bear in mind that is only 2,127 companies out of 376,000.

Then take the Economic Indicator for May 1950, issued by the Joint Committee on the Economic Report by the Council of Economic Advisers. This shows corporate profits, after taxes, for the year 1949, $17,200,000,000. On the basis of the first quarter of 1950, it is estimated that for this year, the profit will be $18,300,000,000. Yet, the Republicans say, "Don't touch the corporations."

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORAND. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. On November 7, 1946, in an exclusive interview appearing in the Chicago Tribune, our former colleague, Mr. Knutson, who later was chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, said, "The committee will reduce and in some cases eliminate excise taxes on a long list of items that include jewelry, furs, cosmetics, and liquors. The reduction will be effective next July 1." That was 1947. That appears also in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 29, 1947. Where is that promise?

Mr. FORAND. It is in the same basket as all the other Republican promises that we have been getting for years.

Mr. REED of New York. Your President came in with tears in his eyes and said he wanted the excise taxes extended.

Mr. FORAND. For 1 year.

Mr. REED of New York. And he got cooperation, and you people voted for it. Do not forget that. You have never made a move to repeal the law or make any changes since.

Mr. FORAND. The gentleman is in error in that statement. I have had bills pending for the last 3 or 4 years. I had them pending when you were in control of the Congress.

Mr. REED of New York. Do you mean to say that they will not listen to you, a member of the Ways and Means Committee?

Mr. FORAND. They listen to me about as much as they listen to you, but the good and the welfare of the country is considered first, and if you gentlemen had not used such delaying tactics every time we had the matter up for consideration in committee, your taxes would now be reduced.

Mr. REED of New York. You know that is not true, and I will refer you to your chairman.

Mr. FORAND. I do not care whom you refer to. I have the floor. I do not yield any further, Mr. Chairman.

I am going to tell you gentlemen that I stated publicly in the committee more than 2 months ago that I was about ready to name those who were interfering with the progress of the bill.

Mr. REED of New York. You cannot name one on our side that interfered in any way or wasted a minute's time of the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. FORAND. I can name them. I said I was about to name them.

Mr. REED of New York. Go ahead and name them.

Mr. FORAND. Fortunately, they squelched a little, and we were told that we could get out the bill, but the tactics used by men on your side were responsible for the delay.

Mr. REED of New York. I leave it to your chairman. We did not delay it one single minute. Just stick to the facts.

Mr. FORAND. I do not yield further, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORAND. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. The fact remains that despite the hypocrisy on this bill, engaged in by the Republican Eightieth Congress, and the Republican leadership, the bill is here today reducing excise taxes, and from a Democratic-controlled committee?

Mr. FORAND. And let us emphasize the word "despite." I want to emphasize that word.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Rhode Island has again expired.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORAND. Yes; I yield.

Mr. KEAN. Has the gentleman introduced any resolution, or has any Democrat introduced any resolution to repeal the Knutson tax bill?

Mr. FORAND. We have introduced several bills.

Mr. KEAN. I do not think any bill has been introduced.

Mr. FORAND. Oh, I voted against the Knutson bill.

Mr. KEAN. The gentleman may have voted against it, but we do not see him or any Democrat——

Mr. FORAND. That is only an alibi, I may say to the gentleman from New Jersey, and I just do not fall for it. The gentleman is trying to take me off the track right now. With all respect, I ask that he permit me to continue.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORAND. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Is it or is it not a fact that we first considered reduction of excise taxes, and the minority members mainly, if not all, went along as far and as fast as the majority members in reducing excise taxes which amounted to about $1,010,000,000? Is not that correct?

Mr. FORAND. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. DOUGHTON. But when it came to closing loopholes to offset the loss incurred as a result of the reduction in excise taxes they did not go any further or faster than the majority members in closing loopholes or making up for the reduction in excise taxes; in fact, they began dropping behind when we were still half a billion dollars short of meeting the need.

Mr. FORAND. That is correct.

Mr. DOUGHTON. If the minority members had their way they would increase the deficit by half a billion.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORAND. I yield.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Does the gentleman from Rhode Island tell us that these excise taxes ought to be continued?

Mr. FORAND. No; they should not be continued. As soon as we can eliminate them completely they should be eliminated, because in my book they are sales taxes, and I am opposed to sales taxes. That is the reason we took the best we could get out of it, a 50-percent reduction.

Mr. NICHOLSON. May I ask a further question?

Mr. FORAND. Certainly.

Mr. NICHOLSON. When does the gentleman expect that we are going to do away with this sales tax that was put on us in wartime?

Mr. FORAND. As soon as more Members on the gentleman's side of the aisle decide to vote with us in cutting down some of these pork-barrel bills, especially appropriation bills.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. FORAND. I yield.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Then why does not the Committee on Ways and Means bring in a bill that would take care of it? In other words, assess us in a different way for the taxes and do away entirely with these nefarious bills that you put upon us some few years ago?

Mr. FORAND. What does the gentleman refer to as a nefarious bill? Will he identify that phrase?

Mr. NICHOLSON. Yes; I will identify it as being this so-called sales tax that the gentleman is talking about.

Mr. FORAND. When did you have a Federal sales tax bill?

Mr. NICHOLSON. I did not have any.

Mr. FORAND. You do not have one now either.

Mr. NICHOLSON. What is it, if it is not a sales tax?

Mr. FORAND. You have an excise tax which is in effect a sales tax.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Shakespeare once said that a goat would smell the same no matter by what name you called him.

Mr. FORAND. The gentleman is a scholar and understands that; I am not a scholar.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself sufficient time to ask the chairman of the committee a question.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I shall be delighted to answer the gentleman.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means this question.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Go ahead and ask it, then.

Mr. REED of New York. Is there one instance that the gentleman can recall where I have personally, or the minority side has, sought to delay this tax bill at all?

Mr. DOUGHTON. No; and I do not think the gentleman will claim that the majority, or the minority either, during the 5 months we were working on this bill endeavoring to make a report, were fiddling, or trying to kill time.

I give the gentleman credit for cooperating, for being on hand, beforehand, remaining late, and discharging his duty. The gentleman was faithful, and as far as I know, conscientious.

Mr. REED of New York. You are an honest man.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I thank you.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, the Democrats have sought to blame the Republicans for extending excise taxes during the Eightieth Congress, which was done at the urgent request of President Truman. I call attention of the committee and the country to the fact that the extension was adopted by a vote of 373 yeas, nays 35. I insert at this point the names of the Members who voted for the extension. Among those supporting the extension of excise taxes in 1947 at the request of President Truman were practically the entire Democratic membership of the House as follows:

Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I have carefully weighed the points included in this bill pro and con, and I have reached the conclusion that the need for the reduction of excise taxes together with the need for eliminating the "notch" provision that taxes small corporations 53 percent on their income between $25,000 and $50,000 are factors of such great importance that I voted to approve the bill in committee, and I plan also to vote for the bill on final passage.

There are many points in this bill that I approve, and there are many points also that I vigorously disapprove. If I had the final decision to make on all points the bill would have been quite different than the one we have before us today, but I have learned long since that in tax legislation in particular no individual Member of Congress can expect to have a bill completely to his liking.

Congressional action on H. R. 8920, the Revenue Act of 1950, marks a real milepost in the fiscal affairs of the United States. The policy established in this bill purports to be one of balancing the budget but in reality it is only a very feeble move with no hope for balancing the budget and getting the Government out of the red.

I shall discuss H. R. 8920 on four general points, namely, first, excise taxes; second, unwise social policy of discouraging installment payments of life insurance; third, corporation taxes; and fourth, surrender to deficit financing.

I. EXCISE TAXES

The Committee on Ways and Means could have enacted legislation reducing excise taxes quickly and with the vigorous approval of a very large majority of the Members of the House of Representatives if the committee had brought out a bill calling for the reduction of excise taxes and not including any other matter. The Republican members of the committee unanimously supported such a policy in resolutions submitted to the committee February 3, March 13, and May 4. The Republican members of the committee saw clearly the devastating effect of delay in the reduction of excise taxes and we are still confronted with some far-reaching adverse results because of the delay already incurred. One example is the buyers' strike on merchandise on which the public has expected excise-tax reduction. Another example is the bitter disappointment of the agricultural fairs in the postponement of the effective date until September 1 at the earliest of this legislation when and if it is enacted into law. Bear in mind that most of the agricultural fairs of my State, Iowa, for 1950 will be over by September 1 whereas most of them would have been directly benefited if the effective date had been made July 1. That is a heavy penalty vested upon our agricultural fairs because of the delay in excise-tax reduction to include the other points taken up in this bill.

Another point of criticism regarding excise tax action in this bill is the inadequacy of the reduction provided. Total excise tax collections are now $7,540,000,000 under present law. Under this bill the excise taxes will be reduced only to $6,530,000,000. In other words, we have a long way to go before we can consider the reduction of excise taxes as adequate to meet the needs of our economy.

To show you how much the people of my district desire reduction of excise taxes I need only to remind you that the replies to the questionnaire which I sent to every fifth householder in my district in February and March brought 2,959 votes for the reduction of excise taxes and only 943 against such reduction.

Another question the people of the First District of Iowa are asking is, why is a 7-percent tax imposed upon quick-freeze units for the first time and no tax is provided for television sets. Quick-freeze units are a household necessity of every farm home today, if we are to take full advantage of preserving fruits, vegetables, and meats that can be saved much better now that we have electric service on most of our farms.

Another inequity in this bill is the refusal of the committee to grant floor stock refunds of the manufacturers' tax. Many of our merchants in rural areas and in other areas far removed from the point of manufacture carry on hand relatively large stocks of merchandise. The manufacturers' tax is paid by them at the time of the purchase by dealers of items so taxed. Those merchants who have carried large stocks of such merchandise now find themselves faced with unfair competition of dealers just entering business and dealers who handle merchandise on a consignment basis and with manufacturers who maintain their own retail outlets, all of whom have no tax-paid inventory to dispose of before benefiting by any excise-tax reduction. The staff of the Joint Committee on Taxation informs me that the total cost of providing floor-stock refunds would be $48,000,000 and that is a small price to pay to eliminate this serious inequity.

II. TAXING THE INTEREST ELEMENT IN INSTALLMENT PAYMENTS OF LIFE INSURANCE

The present tax law does not levy a tax on any part of installment payments of life insurance and this has been a wise social policy to discourage lump-sum settlements of such insurance in favor of installment payments. The bill now before us gives up that policy and provides for the taxation of the interest on installment payments. The additional revenue to the Government is only $5,000,000.

I should relate my own observation of the need for encouraging rather than discouraging installment payments of life insurance. Soon after World War I, I was employed as a sales analyst for a large industrial organization. One of my associates in this organization had a sister whose husband had been killed in action. His widowed sister had collected $10,000 Government life insurance in a lump sum. When our organization sold common stock in the summer of 1920 at $130 a share she invested every cent of her life-insurance money in that stock. Within 9 months' time the stock was listed at $3.50 per share and I will never forget the tragedy and the hardship imposed upon that family. When an experience of that kind comes directly to your attention you can never forget the potential disaster that can grow from widows and children or other dependents having suddenly thrust upon them the problem to which they are not accustomed, that of investing the lump-sum proceeds of such insurance. It is true that the holders of insurance policies can still provide for installment payments but $5,000,000 of Federal revenue is very small gain for our Federal Government in exchange for removing one of the great incentives for preserving installment payments of life insurance to inexperienced beneficiaries.

III. CORPORATE TAXES

Eliminating the "notch" provision of the corporate-tax program is most important to the corporations of my district and of the State of Iowa. The Republican Members of the Committee on Ways and Means have advocated for many years the elimination of the "notch" provision. It has been most inequitable because every corporation earning $50,000 per year has been confronted by a tax of 53 percent on all their earnings in excess of $25,000. This has been a frightful handicap to the small corporations of Iowa. The bill here under consideration provides for the elimination of of the notch provision and I commend the committee for its action.

In 1947, the last year for which complete data are available, Iowa had 5,362 corporations that made Federal income-tax returns. The staff of the Joint Committee on Taxation has estimated that between 300 and 400 of these corporations had incomes over $167,000 per year and about 5,000 of the Iowa corporations had earnings less than $167,000. That information is important because the removal of the "notch" provision gives a tax reduction to every corporation earning less than $167,000 annually. The elimination of the "notch" provision also extends the maximum tax reduction to corporations having $50,000 annual income. The average corporate income for the State of Iowa in 1947 was $48,000, so you can see clearly that the elimination of the "notch" provision is of far-reaching importance to the corporations of my State.

There is no logical reason, however, why the elimination of the "notch" provision should carry with it an increase in the tax rate on other corporations and I opposed that increase. I am not convinced that the imposition of additional tax on other corporations is solely for the purpose of balancing the budget. I will not be so convinced until the Democrats show some determination to reduce spending enough to enable the proposed tax increase to bring our Federal budget into balance. Without any reduction in spending we face a stark and hopeless situation taxwise.

There is only one safe way out of our present fiscal dilemma and that is through drastically reduced Federal spending.

I call your attention to another criticism of this bill in the corporate-tax field. The provision is made for changing the carry-forward and carry-back of corporate losses from 2 years forward and 2 years back to 5 years forward and 1 year back. In event of any abrupt decline in corporate earnings 1 year carryback is not adequate protection and I sincerely hope that the Senate will recognize the need for this insurance to our corporations by leaving the carry-back at 2 years as it stands in the present law.

I call your attention to one additional criticism of this bill in the corporation tax field. Provision is made for withholding 10 percent on all dividends and patronage-refund payments, however meager, without regard to the situation confronting the recipient or the number of his dependents or his tax liability, if any. While claims can be filed for refunds, many inequitable situations will arise because of red tape and delay on the part of the Government and because of the lack of familiarity of small stockholders with the required procedure and even their lack of knowledge of their entitlement to the refunds.

It seems to me that it would be far more equitable and equally effective to strike out the provision for withholding of dividends and patronage refunds and to rely upon the provisions in the bill requiring all corporations and cooperative organizations to file information returns showing the aggregate amount of dividends or patronage refunds paid to any individual and the date of such payment, and the requirement that all taxpayers itemize the amount of each dividend and patronage refunds received together with the name of the payer corporation.

I am vigorously opposed to the withholding of 10 percent of the dividends and patronage refunds because of the inequity and losses imposed upon small stockholders and because of the increased governmental red tape caused by such withholding.

IV. DEFICIT FINANCING

One striking factor has been manifest throughout the entire consideration of the proposed Revenue Act of 1950. No suggestion has been made at any time that adequately reduced Federal spending might be had. The Federal spending for the fiscal year 1950 stands at $42,000,000,000 with a prospective deficit of about $5,000,000,000. This makes a $10,000,000,000 increase in Federal spending since 1948. Some effort has been made to excuse the increased Federal spending because of national defense but the stark fact confronts us that $6,000,000,000 of the increased spending has no connection with past wars or with national defense. Furthermore, President Truman's recommendations and proposals for still further additional Federal spending will add an additional $25,187,000,000 to the $42,000,000,000 spending budget.

The question immediately arises as to what hope, if any, do we have of balancing the Federal budget in the face of our spending record and the prospects for additional spending in the years ahead. Some idea of the futility of our tax effort can be had from the fact that if all individual incomes above $10,000 per year were completely confiscated and the full Federal tax levied against all the income up to the $10,000 ceiling we would add only $4,260,000,000 to our Federal revenues. Furthermore, if 50 percent of all corporate income were taxed it would add only $3,000,000,000 to our Federal revenues.

The Democratic majority here in Congress must face these grim facts and they must answer to the American people just how they propose to meet the ever-mounting Federal spending program for which they have full responsibility. The people of my district have given their answer most emphatically. In the questionnaire I sent to every fifth householder I asked them the question, "Do you favor cutting down Federal spending?" and their reply was 4,015 "yes," and only 72 "no."

CONCLUSION

This bill has come before the House of Representatives under a closed rule, which means, of course, that no amendments can be made to the bill by the House of Representatives. I have criticized the weak points in the bill that I think are of greatest importance to Iowa and to my district in the hope that the Senate Committee on Finance may eliminate or modify some of these points.

As I stated at the outset, I have carefully weighed the points included in this bill and I have reached the conclusion that the need for the reduction of excise taxes together with the need for eliminating the notch provision that taxes small corporations 53 percent on their income between $25,000 and $50,000 are factors of such great importance to Iowa and to my district that the bill as it stands is entitled to my support and I plan to vote for the bill when it comes up for final passage.

What I have said here regarding deficit financing will not and cannot be corrected by the action taken on this bill.

In addition to my hope that the Senate strengthens and improves this bill, I again express my vigorous disapproval of the continued wasteful and extravagant and ever-increasing spending program that is the established policy of the present national administration.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. I wish to compliment the gentleman on his very constructive and analytical speech. With reference to deficit financing, in your opinion, is that not partly the cause of the inflationary trends we have seen in this country since the war?

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Yes, indeed; I charge it directly to that. I realize the inflationary trend may lead us to the $4,000-per-year income which is the objective announced by the President, but let me give you this warning. You and I were in Shanghai together in 1946. I have not forgotten that I paid $8,500 in Chinese national currency for my breakfast in Shanghai. I have not forgotten also that that same breakfast 2 years later would have cost me $20,000.

Mr. JOHNSON. If you look at the United States war bonds situation you will find, taking the index or the purchasing power of the dollar between 1940 and 1945 as being 100, when most of the bonds were bought, that the purchasing power of the dollar invested in those bonds has been reduced 30 percent or a little more than that. In other words, the American bond-buying public, if it reduces its war bonds to dollars today, has lost $80,000,000,000 worth of buying power. In other words, the war-bond debt is over $250,000,000,000. If these bonds are exchanged for dollars, they would today only buy between 65 and 70 percent of what the dollars would have bought when they were spent for the bonds.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. I agree with the gentleman; that is exactly so.

Mr. JOHNSON. I merely mention that because, as you pointed out, other countries have shown us, by example, what can happen when you keep tinkering with the money or doing things which depreciate the value of the currency. In 1918 in France we were paid, as the gentleman may remember, on the ratio of 6.7 to 6.9 francs for each dollar. The Frenchman of that day, if he had saved his money, would have found himself with francs worth almost absolutely nothing today, in the short space of 30 years since the close of that war. Unstable government fiscal policy has a bad effect on the stability of the purchasing power of the currency of the country.

Therefore, I agree with the statement of the gentleman. I want to vote for this bill, but it is too bad in a way that it cuts down Federal income so much, you might say, that we do not close the gap to a greater extent between what we are spending and what we are taking in taxes.

I agree with the chairman of this committee that almost the most important thing is to find a way to stop going in debt. It is a serious and dangerous procedure, and history tells us that it has been the ruination of some countries.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. I agree with the gentleman very strongly. I will add this comment from my own experience with my own life-insurance program:

I thought that my life-insurance program was adequate some 20 years ago. Today I am faced with the charge of that being inadequate for no other reason than inflation. I am rapidly getting too old now to add large blocks of insurance to my program at the rate of premium that I would have to pay today. I am caught in the middle in that respect and I imagine a great many other Americans are facing that very real experience because of the inflation we have already experienced.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. I yield.

Mr. KEAN. I believe what the gentleman has said is of tremendous importance to the people of this country, to the workers of this country. They have a vested right in pensions which not only come from the Government and social security, but pensions from their own company. That is what they are going to live on. What they pay in current income tax is not so important. The important thing is that their dollar must be worth the same later on when they retire. I think the President's program and expenditures would cause those things to lose value, and what you say is of the utmost importance. However, there is hope because the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. FORAND] said he was going to vote in the future against all pork-barrel legislation.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Yes. I believe that is one of the real benefits derived from this discussion today. I agree with the gentleman very strongly in his comment regarding the inadequacy of benefit payments under social security. We recognized that point a few months ago in the Ways and Means Committee in our action on social security when we upped the benefits in order to keep pace with the increased cost of living, which is the inevitable effect of this extravagant and wasteful spending program that is apparently the established policy of the administration.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. I yield.

Mr. NICHOLSON. If we increase the tax on corporations, 3 percent, will the corporations not pass it along to us and add about 5 or 6 percent and make some money on the people of this country?

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. I did not include that in my discussion. There has been considerable discussion of that point in the debate. In my opinion, a very large portion of that increased tax on corporations will be passed on to the consumer, but not necessarily all of it. It will result in a trend toward higher prices for consumer goods.

Mr. TACKETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. I yield.

Mr. TACKETT. The gentleman has expressed considerable concern about the possibility of inflation on insurance, and so forth. I wonder if the gentleman is concerned over the fact that corn was worth 12 cents a bushel in 1932 and now it is worth $1.45 a bushel.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. I have a very real concern about that and I could discuss that with you at great length.

Mr. TACKETT. I would be glad if the gentleman talked about those things.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. You probably do not remember it but I do remember that in 1896, the last year of the administration of Grover Cleveland, which was a Democratic administration, we had 10-cent corn. I do not know whether you want to go back to that or not. I certainly do not. I voted constantly for farm programs to protect our farmers and agriculture in general against disaster.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Yes. I am glad to yield to a real farmer.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Would the gentleman like to explain who controlled the Congress at the time we had those low farm prices? Was it the Republican Party that had control of this House?

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. As I recall my history, the Democratic Party went into control of both the House and the Senate in 1930; and the low prices the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TACKETT] was talking about came in after that.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. In 1939, which was after 7 years of the more abundant life, did we not have agricultural prices a great deal the same as we had them in 1932?

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. I can give you the price of hogs. A prominent Democratic politician came into my district in 1948 campaigning about $3 Republican hogs and $26 Democratic hogs. I made this point, that on March 7, 1933, the top price of hogs in Chicago was $4.40, and on June 20, 1940, after 7 years of the more abundant life and the shooting of the pigs, the top on hogs in Chicago was $5.20. This top price of $5.20, however, was in devalued dollars because the Democrats by the enactment of the Gold Reserve Act of 1934 reduced the value of our dollar to 59 cents.

Twenty-one dollars of the 1948 price of hogs came as a direct result of the war and not from New Deal administration policies.

I then gave the Democratic politician the recipe for a sure-fire $50 hog price if that is what he wanted above everything else. I repeat it here for the benefit of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TACKETT]. All you have to do is not shoot the little pigs but just take 200,000 more of our American boys out and shoot them in battle and you will have $50 hogs and every farmer in America knows that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, the discussion seems to have gotten pretty far afield in the last 10 minutes, what with talking about appropriations, talking about spending, talking about pigs, and the price of corn, and everything except the tax measure. So I think it would not be bad to bring ourselves back to the subject.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that only two alternative conclusions can be drawn from reading the minority report on the pending tax bill and from listening to the speeches of the minority Members in opposition to the bill. Either the Republican Party, as I have long suspected, is actually opposed to reduction in the wartime excise taxes, or their interest in excise tax reduction is outweighed by their concern for the big corporations with which they have long been so prominently associated in the minds of the American people.

I repeat. There are two alternative conclusions.

It is quite possible, judging from the record of the Republican Party on excise-tax reduction, to conclude that their sole interest in the subject is whatever political capital they might be able to make of it. For example, on October 21, 1946, 2 weeks before the election of the Eightieth Congress, 27 House Republican Members, including all Republican members of the Committee on Ways and Means, promised downward adjustment in Federal excise taxes, if a Republican Congress were elected. Even after the election had been won, the new Republican Congress of the Committee on Ways and Means promised that the committee "will reduce, and in some cases eliminate, excises on a long list of items that includes jewelry, furs, cosmetics, and liquors. The reductions are to be effective next July 1." This was in the nature of an exclusive statement to the Chicago Daily Tribune reported in that great newspaper on November 7, 1946.

And then what happened? The first important bill passed by the Republican Eightieth Congress was a bill to make permanent the temporary wartime excise taxes which President Truman had asked to have extended merely for 1 year. The President asked that this action be taken to enable Congress to review the entire group of excises in connection with excise-tax revision.

Then after firmly locking the chains of excise taxes about the necks of the American consumer, the Eightieth Congress proceeded to reduce income and estate and gift taxes by over $5,000,000,000 a year. Imagine continuing excise taxes, in order to reduce estate and gift taxes which only affect about 12,000 of the Nation's wealthiest families.

But this was done deliberately. In hearings before the Commitee on Ways and Means on May 28, 1947, Chairman Knutson announced, in direct contradiction of his earlier promise to reduce excise taxes that—

> It is the hope of the committee to be able to shift much of the burden that is now being carried by the income-tax group, which includes almost everyone, over to the excises, at least in part.

And he added:

> Obviously, if we are going to extend the excise field—

Mark the fact that he actually planned to expand the excise taxes, not reduce them—> if we are going to extend the excise field, we will have to include a great many items that are not now included.

So, one rich-relief tax bill, two rich-relief tax bills, and finally, a third rich-relief tax bill, was passed by the Republican Eightieth Congress. And, although the Democratic Members unanimously urged in their minority report that some consideration be given to excise tax relief, not a penny was allocated for this purpose.

So, Mr. Chairman, when the present minority sheds so many crocodile tears about the delay in excise tax reduction, and accuses the Democratic majority of fiddling while the people wait, it may be a fair question to ask why they did nothing to demonstrate their sincerity by reducing excise taxes during the 2 years in which they were in control of the Congress.

H. R. 8920, therefore, provides a fair test for those who profess to favor relief from the most onerous wartime excises. Every one of the wartime excise taxes was reviewed by the Committee on Ways and Means, and the most burdensome of the excise taxes have been reduced by a total of approximately a billion dollars annually.

I believe that a good case has been made for reduction of every excise tax that has been reduced. But I also agree, and I believe that most people will concur, with President Truman in the view that "sound fiscal policy will not permit a weakening of our tax system at this time." The President recommended that excise taxes be reduced only to the extent that offsetting revenue could be obtained from closing loopholes. Since the Committee on Ways and Means was able to raise only $465,000,000 a year from closing loopholes, it was necessary to impose additional taxes, in order to have a balanced tax bill.

I might say that the committee did not go as far in closing loopholes as I should have liked. In fact, there are two provisions in the bill which appear to me to open wider loopholes than are now provided by existing law. I shall take but a moment to point out these two provisions:

First. Contemplation of death: The bill provides that all gifts made more than 3 years before death shall be conclusively deemed not to have been made in contemplation of death. Yet, on the other hand, gifts within 3 years of death would still not be presumed conclusively to have been made in contemplation of death. From the very beginning, the estate-tax law has taxed gifts made in contemplation of death. Without exception, State inheritance laws contain a similar provision. As Chief Justice Hughes pointed out several years ago:

> The dominant purpose is to reach substitutes for testamentary dispositions and thus to prevent the evasion of the estate tax.

The justification for the amendment is that it would eliminate fruitless litigation. I fear the truth is that the amendment will open up additional holes in the estate tax which already looks like a sieve as a result of the amendments made by the Eightieth Congress.

Second. Distributions of corporate earnings to pay estate taxes: Another loophole included in the bill which I think should be called to the attention of the membership is the amendment made by section 208, relating to redemption of stock to pay death taxes. Like the contemplation of death amendment, this change would affect only single people with assets of $250,000 and married persons with an estate of $500,000. In effect, the bill forgives income taxes on dividends paid out of the accumulated earnings and profits of corporations which are used for the payment of Federal estate and State inheritance taxes.

On the whole, however, Mr. Chairman, I believe that the pending bill is the best tax bill upon which the House has had an opportunity to vote since the end of the war.

Since corporations have had greater proportionate tax relief since the cessation of hostilities than have other taxpayers, it is only fair and just, in my opinion, that we look to the corporations to make up the revenue lost from excise taxes which is not offset by closing loopholes. In fact, I should have gone further than the modest increase on corporations above $167,000. I favored, and offered in the committee, a bill to restore a modified version of the wartime excess profits tax. I did this because my proposal was carefully designed to affect only those corporations now sharing most generously in the current peak prosperity. This bill, H. R. 8920, would increase the taxes of only about 20,000 of the largest and most profitable corporations, while my excess profits tax plan would have affected approximately 22,000 corporations, and would have yielded more than half a billion dollars a year more than the pending bill. In reducing the taxes of 170,000 corporations under $167,000 of income annually, the committee bill would have the advantage of stimulating small business. I, therefore, am very glad to support the corporate tax provisions of the bill, even though they do not raise as much revenue from this source as I favored.

Now it is clear to me, when corporate profits after taxes are nearly double the wartime boom levels, that the large corporations and their stockholders can absorb this slight increase without endangering either continued business expansion or the standard of living of the stockholders. And when the minority Members loudly, and I trust vainly, oppose this effort to provide a balanced tax bill, it suggests again, in language that one can understand, that the Republican Party still is the party of big business. And it underscores the fact that even to provide a moderate measure of excise tax relief for the overburdened American consumer, the spokesmen for big business are unwilling to give up even a few pennies of profits.

Mr. Chairman, I began by saying that either the minority are not honestly and sincerely interested in excise tax reduction, or that their desire for excise tax reduction is outweighed by their concern for the big corporations. I believe I was mistaken in that observation. I am now convinced that the Republican Party has never really been interested in excise tax reduction. And I also believe that concern for the big corporations outweighs any other legislative interest it may have.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I shall be pleased to.

Mr. NICHOLSON. I merely wish to ask whether these big corporations about which the gentleman talks will not pass along that tax we put on them to all the people in the United States.

Mr. EBERHARTER. That, of course, is an old, hackneyed argument that has been used for the last hundred years: Do not tax anybody in business because the consumer will ultimately pay the tax. That is an argument that has been discarded by every practical economist in this country as well as every economist in the world. That is an old hackneyed argument raised whenever any suggestion is made about taxing the people most able to pay: It will only be passed on to the consumer.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. EBERHARTER. For one more question, for I have some other things to speak about.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania answer the question I asked him: If they will not pass this along to everybody in the United States?

Mr. EBERHARTER. The gentleman just asked that question of the gentleman from Iowa, a member of his own party, and the gentleman from Iowa said they may attempt to pass on a portion of it, but very seldom do they pass on all of it, very rarely.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. CURTIS. Did the gentleman vote for the excise tax bill in the early part of the Eightieth Congress?

Mr. EBERHARTER. Not only did I not for it—I voted against it—and I spoke on the floor of the House against it and gave releases to the newspapers. I voted against the Knutson bill, which is the bill I am referring to.

Mr. CURTIS. The gentleman will recall that came out of the Ways and Means Committee with a unanimous report.

Mr. EBERHARTER. It certainly did not come out of the Committee on Ways and Means with a unanimous report.

Mr. CURTIS. If the gentleman will consult the RECORD he will find that it did come out of the Ways and Means Committee with a unanimous report and it is so stated in the RECORD. On roll call, January 29, 1947, found on page 692 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, among the yeas is listed the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER].

Mr. EBERHARTER. That is the so-called Knutson bill?

Mr. CURTIS. That is the excise tax bill, the one I inquired about.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I am talking about the income tax reduction bill, the Knutson bill, to which I objected, and which I voted against. I refer to the income tax reduction bill.

Mr. CURTIS. I know that the gentleman opposed the bill that increased the personal exemption from $500 to $600. I was talking about the excise tax bill.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I am talking about what the Eightieth Congress did with reference in the income tax bill, when it reduced the income taxes by $5,000,000,000, thereby making impossible any reduction in excise taxes. I hope the gentleman does not expect me to go into the terms of that income tax bill.

Mr. CURTIS. I do not expect the gentleman to discuss the terms.

Mr. EBERHARTER. The gentleman started to do that.

Mr. CURTIS. I would not expect the gentleman to talk about its terms, or the terms of a bill that did so much for the poor people of the country.

Mr. EBERHARTER. The gentleman said he does not expect to discuss it, then he starts discussing it.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. The gentleman from Pennsylvania knows of my high personal regard for him, but let me just say on this occasion as I have on other occasions that some of you folks on that side of the aisle have complained about the tax reduction bill passed by the Eightieth

Congress. The President has complained about it. Again I want to dare and challenge you in this Eighty-first Democratic-controlled Congress to bring in a bill to repeal that law. You have not done it, you would not do it, and there would not be a handful of votes over there now to repeal it. You would not do it because you would not want to decrease the exemption $100, you would not want to avoid the application of the split income principle all over the country, and because, in the final analysis, you know it was a good, fair, and equitable bill.

Mr. EBERHARTER. The gentleman is debating that bill. We are not debating that particular measure at this time. There was plenty of debate on it at the time. We went before the country largely on the issue of that tax bill and it was the result of the country becoming aware of what the Republican Eightieth Congress did with respect to that income-tax bill that happily we now have a Democratic Majority in the House of Representatives and in the Senate. But I do not want to debate that bill.

We have heard that challenge right along, why do you not bring in a bill repealing it? The Democratic Party believes in balancing the budget as far as possible. Nobody expected that billions of dollars had to be necessarily spent in order to attempt to preserve the peace of the world and to prevent it from becoming communistic. So when you talk about reducing expenditures, which has been talked about plenty this afternoon, you fail to take into account that 71 percent of the expenditures of the Federal Government every year goes to matters that cannot be reduced unless we quit helping Europe, unless we default on our committed obligation; so the reductions would only come in about 29 percent of the Federal budget, which makes it almost impossible to reduce. The Republican Party used to have the reputation of wanting a sound dollar. But when its Republican Members stand up here yesterday, and today, and advocate further deficit financing by not attempting to pass a balanced revenue bill, I think they can forever give up the claim that they are in favor of a sound dollar.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I think we know what the Republican position is. We were told in the last election that the Republican tax bill was inequitable. It is not a question of raising revenue; it is a question of correcting those inequities. What has the Democratic party done to correct that inequitable tax bill?

Mr. EBERHARTER. The Democratic Party has been in a position that it was unable to do anything, because we could not reduce the income necessary in order to operate toward a balanced budget. It is just one of those situations that could not be corrected, and the gentleman well knows that. And, of course, I know the gentleman is just as happy at shooting barbs at the Democratic Party as he is at the Republican Party.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. But I do not like to see promises broken. The question is not one of income. The Republican bill was vetoed on the basis of inequities. I agreed with the veto. I voted to sustain the veto. We were told during the election that these inequities would be wiped out. Why have they not been wiped out?

Mr. EBERHARTER. They have not been wiped out because it has been impossible to do so under the situation of the Federal Budget because unexpectedly heavy expenditures were necessary in order to keep the world peaceful and in balance in the terrific fight against communism.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. YOUNG. One reason is that, because of the threat of aggression from the Soviet Union, we have had to maintain the largest armed force in our history, to-wit, 1,500,000 men under arms, and we have had to maintain that Army and we now have to maintain that Army in an effort to maintain peace in this war-torn world.

Mr. EBERHARTER. The gentleman is absolutely correct. Our defense budget is around $13,500,000,000. If the cry for reduction in expenditures pertains to the Defense Establishment, why do not the persons who are crying for economy say, "Well, we will cut one or two billion dollars off of the Defense Establishment." Since it is always a general declaration that we cut expenditures, it seems to me that it is done just for political purposes.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield for just this last observation, then I will leave the gentleman alone.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I yield.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I think we are dodging the question, because we were told that the Republican bill was a rich man's tax bill. And, I agree. The question is not one of income; the question is from whom you are going to get this income. You said you were going to take it off the poor and add it where it properly belongs, on those who could afford to pay. Why have you not done it? That has nothing to do with these expenditures that are necessary. Why have you not done it? For the same reason that you have not repealed the Taft-Hartley Act, and the same reason that you have not enacted civil-rights legislation.

Mr. EBERHARTER. The gentleman is in his element. He certainly can find fault with both the majority and the minority parties.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. YATES. Is that not exactly what the new tax bill proposes, removing the excise tax, which is in the nature of a sales tax, and thereby partially relieving those people least able to pay? Furthermore, the corporation income tax increase has been put on those corporations most able to pay in order that they shall pay a greater amount of taxes.

Mr. EBERHARTER. The gentleman has stated something that is absolutely true in all respects. The Democratic Party has always taken the position that it does not favor a sales tax, and excise taxes are in the nature of sales taxes. There is some relief here from a violation of this principle which was contained in the wartime tax bill, and in the Eightieth Congress' rich relief income tax bill, in that we took away some of these sales taxes; also we are giving encouragement to small business, that is, to nearly all corporations which are making less than $167,000 a year net income. So, we are giving some relief and we are trying to do the best we can.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. NICHOLSON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania what this income tax bill for the benefit of the rich in the Eightieth Congress was. As I remember, we took about 20,000 to 25,000 people off that altogether. I imagine they were poor people. Will the gentleman tell me why it was a rich man's bill?

Mr. EBERHARTER. As the gentleman from Rhode Island explained in some detail this afternoon, 36 percent of the loss in revenue or the relief in that bill went to 4 percent of the taxpayers. Thirty-six percent went to 4 percent, who were the richest in the country. The other 64 percent relief was scattered among the 96 percent of the population, of course, which is the ordinary-income group.

I do not want to go into a discussion of that bill. That bill is over the dam, as I told the assistant to the minority leader. It is water over the dam.

Mr. NICHOLSON. This bill we passed in the Eightieth Congress is water over the dam when anybody asks any questions about it. When it comes down to figures, then you cannot answer questions, and you say it is water over the dam.

Mr. EBERHARTER. In the time allotted to me I will not be able to finish some of the prepared remarks I had intended to make, but some reference has been made this afternoon and some complaint has been made by Republican Members of the Committee on Ways and Means with respect to the provision in the bill pertaining to the acceleration of tax payments by corporations.

As everybody knows, several years ago we passed a bill which provided that wage earners should "pay as you go." A portion of their pay, 15 percent, was deducted every pay day. Whether it was weekly pay, semi-monthly pay, monthly pay, or yearly pay, a portion of their pay was deducted so that they were paying as they went along.

Now we say to the corporations, "You make your profit in 1950. We want you to start paying up a little sooner than practically at the end of 1951 what you owe. We are not going to compel you to pay as you go, as we do for private individuals, wages earners. We want you to pay half of your tax bill in March and half of your tax bill in June."

But this is the main thing. If you are a partnership, you have to pay your taxes as you go. If you individually own a drug store or a hardware store or an electric appliance shop, if you are in business privately, you pay your taxes as you go because you have to make an estimate and have to pay on that estimate every 3 months, during the year you are earning your profits. But corporations all this time have been able to hold some of the taxes they owe the Government for over a year, or for practically a year. Now we want to bring the corporations more on a level with partnerships and private individuals who run businesses, and we have this great complaint that this move is a phony. There is nothing phony about it. For all these years corporations have had the advantage of using money that they owe the Government for their own purposes, but partnerships and individuals in business did not have this advantage. I do not see anything phony about that.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. KEAN. I think that what the gentleman says to the effect that corporations should be treated as far as possible the same as individuals and should not have this money to play with is correct. If that is so, why do you give them two installments? Why do you not have them pay all in March or in April?

Mr. EBERHARTER. Of course, this is quite an important change from what the practice has been ever since we passed the pay-as-you-go bill for partnerships and private individuals and wage-earners. So we are taking it on a gradual scale. I think that is the main reason for that.

Mr. KEAN. Your idea is, then, after the end of 5 years to change the payment date to March? Then why is it that in this bill the months that the corporations have to pay happen to be in the same fiscal year so that it will have the special advantage of fooling the people, with reference to the amount of the Government income, instead of making it—let us say—April and October or April and July in separate fiscal years?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I see what the gentleman means. But do you not think it gives a clearer picture and gives the Treasury the money that is really owed it? If the corporation makes its profits in 1950, it ought to pay its taxes in full before the commencement of the fiscal year following. In other words, they can pay their taxes within 6 months. Why throw the tax that is due from that company over into a later fiscal year? I do not see any point to the gentleman's argument.

Mr. KEAN. I think it ought to be as soon as possible. There is some advantage—if you go down into a slump period in having a little leveling-off period. If you have a payment to make in July of the next fiscal year it would level off a little of the loss in income which would come on the individual income tax. In time of depression it levels it off a little to have it go over two fiscal years. I think the payment should be as soon as possible, of course.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Of course you always have to keep in mind, may I say to the gentleman from New Jersey, they only pay a certain percentage of their profits. If there is a period when they do not make very high profits, the taxes are much reduced.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I yield.

Mr. MILLS. The gentleman from New Jersey is correct in his thought that the extension of the payment on corporation taxes over the following years is the best cushion in the first year of a recession on the reduced income received from individuals. That is true. But the important item or factor so far as I am concerned in the acceleration of corporation tax payments is the elimination of half of what I term a discrimination between the corporate form of business and proprietorships and partnerships. If you keep your eye and your thinking on the basis of the reform involved in it, I do not think it makes a great deal of difference whether those two payments fall in the first 6 months or in the first 7 months. If you make them extend over a 7-month period you are just removing a little bit less of the discrimination that exists in the collection of these tax payments.

Mr. KEAN. Why have two payments?

Mr. MILLS. Perhaps the gentleman will join with me later on after this has gone on for 3 or 5 or 6 years in suggesting one payment.

Mr. KEAN. It would seem to me that one payment, say on April 15, would be all right, or perhaps a different date. We do not want to disturb the monetary situation in the country by having too much money come into the Treasury and leaving the banks at the same time. It seems to me if April 15 was the day, it would be satisfactory.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. JAVITS].

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, I have taken this time primarily to discuss the situation of my alma mater, New York University. Before I do that, however, I would like to make a few limited observations about this bill in which I have been much interested for a considerable time.

First, there has been some question as to whether we ought to act now on a tax reduction bill and also have tax increases in other brackets in view of the international situation and the new action on which the United States has taken a great decision in foreign policy with respect to Korea which so many of us have heartily approved as I did here on the floor yesterday.

I think, Mr. Chairman, we should proceed with this bill. We should act on it on this theory: The American people are ready to respond, as they showed by their reaction to the President's announcement, not only to whatever action is required by the Army, Navy, and Air Force, as well as in the diplomatic field, but whatever is required fiscally as well. Certainly the commitments we have undertaken so far in respect of Korea and in the Far East has necessitated no major reform of the fiscal picture. Hence, I believe we should go right ahead and act on this bill as we would otherwise ordinarily in the absence of the Korean situation.

There is no doubt but that the American people will support more ample revenue income and such other fiscal measures as must be taken if the international situation requires.

On the question of reducing the excise taxes, I have been for that for a long time, for two reasons: First, because of how it bears on the cost of living of low- and moderate-income families; and, second, because it has been a deterrent to business in New York.

I see my colleague the gentleman from New York [Mr. LYNCH] sitting there. He knows very well, because he has studied it so carefully, the retrogression that has taken place in business after business, important in the life of our city, which has suffered very seriously as well as in the economy of the country. I refer particularly to one commodity, furs, where just two figures will show the picture. We had a loss in revenue from this excise tax between 1948 and 1949 of $18,000,000, and a total reduction in revenue from reduction in taxes which is called for by this bill, will be $22,000,000. So that we lost in 1 year, just by recession of business, about as much as we will reduce this year by a reduction of taxes, with every assurance that business will more than make up for this reduction in a material way. The same is true with jewelry, cosmetics, and baby oil. The impact of this loss of business upon employment is manifest. Employment in the fur, jewelry, luggage and similar business has been very materially affected by the continuance of these high wartime excise taxes.

Every Member has felt the justice of the claims of millions of Americans who felt themselves unduly punished when they had to pay a 20-percent tax for movie-picture admissions, which is considered no longer as a luxury for the American people, but which we consider only the normal basic need for recreation to enable Americans to better turn out production, which gives us the ability to make our standard of living what it is.

Also in the matter of excise taxes on furs there was a serious question of discrimination because under a Treasury ruling in 1947 practically all fur-trimmed coats were tax exempt. Hence, we had the spectacle of department stores offering for sale $289 mink-lined coats which were tax free compared to $199 fur coats upon which the 20-percent tax was imposed. Certainly any fur coat selling for under $350—and that accounts for 80 percent of the fur business—should not be considered a luxury.

So I think there is eminent justice in this reduction. I wish the reductions could have been more. I wish the committee could have seen fit to eliminate the excise taxes entirely in a number of brackets, but I think we must rely on the composite judgment of the committee that under the existing situation they are doing all they can.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as to the situation of New York University, which I referred to a minute ago.

I am an alumnus of the New York University School of Law and much concerned with the position of the university in respect of title III, part 1, of the bill. John Gerdes, Esq., testified on behalf of the university before the Ways and Means Committee on December 12, 1947 and there outlined the university's situation in connection with the acquisition of four business concerns by it under a foundation form of organization which provided that all dividends and the proceeds of any liquidation would go directly to the university.

The questions which present themselves are the position of the university in acquiring these businesses and their continued retention for the benefit of the university on a tax-free earnings status. The committee has already decided and the bill provides that earnings from such business corporations shall be taxable as unrelated business income unless it arises from rents and royalties and with certain other exceptions. In order to understand the situation of New York University properly and its place in the community, I quote from a letter of Chancelor Harry Woodburn Chase to the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee which was submitted at the committee's hearings. Since that time the student body has expanded to about 67,000 of whom more than 25,000 are veterans of World War II. New York University is the largest educational institution in the world. Chancelor Chase wrote as follows:

New York University is a private institution. It receives no help from either the City or the State of New York but is dependent on student fees, on gifts, and bequests. Of its total income over 90 percent comes directly from student fees, which are thus the primary and major source of support for the university. Its student population is one of the largest in the world. The university's enrollment, both full and part time, for the current year will be well over 50,000, representing not only the New York community but almost every State in the Union and a large number of foreign countries. It is an enrollment from every race and creed and walk of life. The great majority of our students are here as the result of great sacrifices on the part of their families and themselves. Many of them are at work during the day in order to be able to undertake courses at night, and the whole spirit and temper of our student body is one of earnest determination and ambition.

Over the more than 100 years of its existence New York University has rendered and is rendering enormous services to the community and to the Nation. As a result of its existence countless thousands of youths who would never otherwise have obtained an education have gone out into the business and professional life of New York City and of the whole country to the great profit of the public affairs and institutions of the city and the country. The university prides itself on its record of service, on the caliber and character of its student body and on the effective standards of work which it has attempted over the years to maintain. Founded at the start by a group under the leadership of Albert Gallatin, a member of Jefferson's Cabinet, it has been dedicated since its beginnings to widening the opportunities of those who are as a rule not too heavily endowed with this world's goods. Many a poor boy has owed the beginning of his career to the fact that he was able to come here for his education.

NEW YORK UNIVERSITY RENDERS SERVICE THE COMMUNITY REQUIRES

In the metropolitan area of New York it is New York University, far more than any other, which renders the service the President desires. It offers full-time and part-time work at undergraduate, graduate, and professional levels. It is located in the transportation center of the world's largest metropolis and is within commuting range of the homes of thousands of students. It meet the needs of such students at low cost. New York University was founded in the Jacksonian era and has always kept faith with the democratic ideals of its founders. It has never discriminated against students because of race or religion. It is one of the few schools which has never had quotas. It has always been available to the children of families of moderate or low income. The academic standards of the school have always been of the highest. If the real story of New York University were generally known it would receive the encouragement of all who believe in democratic education.

New York University is especially proud of its service to veterans. More than 55,000 veterans of the Second World War have been enrolled in the various schools and colleges of the university. Many veterans have preferred New York University to the ivy colleges because they have enjoyed the keen competition of students with strong professional motivation.

New York University receives no financial support from the city or from the State. It has a wholly inadequate endowment and is deficient in physical facilities, especially at the Washington Square center. Although it has the largest enrollment of any university in the United States, it ranks thirty-fourth among colleges and universities in the size of its endowment. The income from its endowment represents less than 2 percent of its total income. Although the annual operating budget of the university is approximately $20,000,000, it has a total endowment of less than $12,000,000. To meet the rising costs it has been necessary to increase student fees until, in the judgment of the administration, it is not possible to increase fees further. The financial difficulties of New York University are aggravated by the fact that it operates in an area in which real property values are extremely high.

In recent years the university has been engaged in campaigns for funds for the medical center and for the law center. Some $22,000,000 have so far been raised for the medical center and over $2,000,000 for the law center. While these profesisonal schools are of great importance to the community and to the Nation, they will increase rather than reduce the financial load of the university. If New York University is to serve the 67,000 men and women who are enrolled in its classes, it must have new sources of revenue.

WHY "FEEDER" CORPORATIONS WERE ACQUIRED

At the end of the Second World War, when it became apparent to the graduates and other friends of the university that improved facilities were required for the university, various plans were considered to obtain additional income over the years. It was not at that time possible to buy rental properties because prices were high and rents were frozen. It happened, however, that going businesses could be bought at a discount. It was very difficult for sellers of small businesses to dispose of their properties because it was not practicable to offer stock to the public. These small businesses could be sold only to larger competitors or to institutional investors. Alumni of the School of Medicine and of the School of Law acquired the first feeder corporation in 1946 for the benefit of their two schools. At the time that the first business was acquired, an exemption letter was received from the Treasury. Although the Treasury later reversed its stand, the other companies were acquired by graduates and friends of the school in the belief that under existing law no Federal income taxes are payable so long as all of the income from the operation of the businesses should be devoted to educational purposes.

The amount involved in the tax exemption for the four businesses acquired under the foundation plan by members of the alumni of the university is estimated at $1,500,000 per year. Professor Gerdes estimated in his testimony that this amount alone would be insufficient to make up the university's loss on the more than 25,000 veterans in the student body for whose education the Federal Government paid more than $9,000,000 in 1 year.

Under the expectation of substantial benefits from these foundations, the university has bought valuable parcels of land on the East River for the medical center and on Washington Square for the law center and the proposed university library.

EFFECT OF PRESENT BILL ON NEW YORK UNIVERSITY

The present bill is unnecessarily harsh in its impact on New York University. New York University has substantial building projects now under way. It has planned on the income from these foundations just as other universities have planned on income from rental properties and from oil royalties and royalties from patents. This bill does not deprive the wealthy universities of their traditional sources of income, to wit, rents, royalties, and dividends, but singles out universities like New York University which have not been large universities for a long period of time and have not built up substantial holdings in rental properties or in other endowments.

The impact of the bill would not be so severe if a reasonable period were allowed for the university to adapt its plans to the new law. This bill in its final form should grant a reasonable moratorium or should provide that the tax should be imposed on a graduated basis over a period of years.

I cannot close without a personal reference. Coming from a poor family, born in the slums of New York, I could never have been a lawyer or had the opportunity the country has given to me were it not for its location in New York City and the liberal policies of New York University. Perhaps in my own life, is an example of that of many others, and is living proof of the value of New York University to our community and to a validation of the opportunities, unparalleled in any country in the world, which are the heritage of all Americans.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JAVITS. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. I would like to make this observation in connection with these educational institutions and other institutions that have been compelled to go into some commercial enterprise to enhance their income and their funds: It is true that there are two sides to the argument, and certain other groups are justified in raising the tax question, but I think we should keep in mind that it was the policies of the United States Government that have been pursued over recent years that have depreciated the value of the income-earning power of the endowments of these fine institutions. The Government has to assume a responsibility for the Government policies that made these endowments worth less and made the income they produced less. We cannot escape that responsibility. Government policies and tax philosophies have also cut down the available gifts to these fine institutions.

Mr. JAVITS. May I say that the endowment of New York University is so small that really nothing would have helped compared to the education problem they faced; nothing, really, would have helped them short of some such drastic move as I have described.

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JAVITS. I yield.

Mr. LYNCH. I think that the gentleman should know that all the members of the Committee on Ways and Means recognize the fact that the situation with respect to New York University's acquisition of these manufacturing concerns was permissible under the law at least until the decision of the tax court recently in the Miller case, and there was no thought at any time, as far as I know, on the part of any member of the committee, that New York University was deliberately trying to evade the tax laws.

As an evidence of that we considered very carefully whether or not some extension of time could not be granted in order to give these institutions an opportunity to work out the situation in which they found themselves; as a matter of fact, under the bill, if I remember correctly, it does not affect these institutions until after December 31, 1950.

Mr. JAVITS. I will make this one statement in conclusion. It was the hope of many of us who are alumni of New York University and perhaps other colleges and universities similarly situated, that before this bill finally became law some way would be found for staggering the imposition of this tax, or perhaps giving a moratorium for as much as 5 years, so that those who depend on NYU, who made commitments in the form of a medical college and an enlarged law school, may not, because of a change in policy on the part of a Congress, find themselves unable to complete these building programs highly essential to the interests of the country and to our educational system.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JAVITS. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. KEAN. As far as the Piston Ring Co. is concerned, it is my understanding that the officials of New York University went to the Treasury about the case and it was cleared before they ever bought the company.

Mr. JAVITS. Yes; that is absolutely true and they relied on that. Incidentally, may I say to my colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. LYNCH] I am so glad he said what he did about the view of the committee, not that either I or any other alumnus of NYU had any doubt about that, but it is good for the press and the country to understand clearly that the committee, having seen the case, having heard the witnesses, including Professor Gerdes, who incidentally taught me contract law at NYU, and having seen and witnessed this, came to the conclusion everything had been done in the best good faith in a desire to help this great educational institution in a proper way.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JAVITS. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. REED of New York. Is it not true that these universities that have gone into these extra activities were doing it legally up to a recent decision of the Court?

Mr. JAVITS. Yes.

Mr. REED of New York. Is it not also a fact that they were almost forced to do what they have done because of their great difficulty in getting funds or endowments with which to operate?

Mr. JAVITS. That is perfectly true.

Mr. REED of New York. And it being legal for them to do it, they just went out and made investments where they could get some return on their investment; is that not true?

Mr. JAVITS. That is exactly so.

Mr. REED of New York. So that they have been forced by inflation, and they still face that problem all over this country; literally thousands of colleges and institutions in this country are facing the proposition of a constant lowering of the purchase power of the dollar.

Mr. JAVITS. I may say to the gentleman from New York that there is a grave problem for us in this whole proposition, because I think all of us, regardless of political complexion, feel very strongly about the fact that we want to keep as many privately endowed and privately supported universities and colleges as humanly possible alive and functioning. This is very essential to our democracy. Therefore, I reiterate the hope that some way will yet be found in connection with this bill to give universities like New York University a transition period.

May I say to my colleague from New York that there was a million and a half dollars in income involved in this problem of tax exemption. The university lost more than that million and a half dollars on the 25,000 veterans whom they are educating and for whom the Government pay is insufficient by more than that one and a half million dollars. That is a little gage of their problem.

Mr. REED of New York. As a matter of fact, we do not want a program to develop in Government legislation that is going to force all of these fine colleges, especially when there is such a great demand on the part of the young people of this country for a college education, in many cases almost essential, to come to the Government for funds because with that will go controls that are not too good for our form of government.

Mr. JAVITS. The gentleman is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the minority leader, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, it is almost unbelievable that a serious group of taxation experts could produce a bill like the one which has emerged from the Ways and Means Committee.

This tax bill is here because the American people are demanding the repeal of the wartime nuisance or excise taxes. It is here because there is a popular clamor for tax reduction. It is here because the Democratic Party dares not enter the congressional elections this fall without at least a pretense of meeting the overwhelming demand of the American people.

Now the facts are that this bill does not give the people tax relief; ultimately it will increase the tax burdens. It is true there is a decrease in some excise taxes—a decrease badly needed and long delayed—but not enough of a decrease to meet the existing needs. Some of the reductions are so small as to be little more than a gesture or a sop, apparently in the hope of quieting the clamor for real relief. The proposal does not meet the test of equal justice which all segments of our national economy have a right to expect from their government.

There are crises in some of our industries which through manufacturing and retail selling outlets give employment to several millions of people. Eighteen months ago a partial reduction would have been a life-saver. That aid was not given; and these industries, like jewelry and furs, suffered. Today the relief being given will not meet their present needs.

In many instances complete repeal is needed now, and all these taxes should be removed as soon as possible. The loss of revenue, if any, would be insignificant, but it would mean the prosperity of large groups of our people.

After an unpardonable and harmful delay of 18 long months, the Democratic majority has finally permitted to come before this House a tax reduction bill which I say is not really a tax relief bill at all. This bill simply takes the taxpayer's money out of his left-hand pocket instead of his right-hand pocket as in the past. It merely represents a change in the method of collection. The suffering taxpayer, as usual, pays.

The proposal we have before us repeats once again the old familiar tune of the happy-go-lucky spenders—"Tax and tax, spend and spend." It is one more positive affirmation of the reckless philosophy of the spendthrift that he can meet all our national problems simply by more Government spending and by taxing away a bigger slice of the worker's earnings. There is no thought of the sounder way out of our dilemma—reducing our Government spending.

I will not take the time to enumerate all of the inequities in this measure. But let us look at a few examples of discrimination. Why is it that no relief whatever is given to the purchaser of that very essential item—the electric light bulb? The 20-percent tax on this item is unchanged.

Then take the situation on radio sets. In our American civilization a radio set can hardly be called a luxury. Yet the bill makes no provision for a reduction in the tax of 10 percent on the manufacturer; and, of course, this is passed along in the retail cost of the product. It makes radios cost 10 percent more. Incidentally, there is no tax on television sets, a competitor.

A crumb is given to the householder in the form of a reduction from 15 to 10 percent on his local telephone service. But the little-business man must continue to pay the full 15-percent tax on his local phone service, thus adding to the cost of doing business. Such relief is a joke.

In one respect the bill fails to grant as much relief as the President would have given. Even Mr. Truman proposed elimination of the 3-percent excise tax on transportation of property. This tax, of course, adds to the cost of virtually every manufactured item the consumer buys. However, the committee has seen fit not to grant complete relief from this burden, but only to reduce it by half.

Additional examples of inadequate relief could be cited. In the bill which I introduced 18 months ago, I proposed that in addition to the 10 percent cut in the tax on jewelry, we should exempt entirely those items purchased by the middle- and low-income people, which sell at retail for less than $25. I am sorry the committee did not agree to this proposal at least if it would not grant total repeal as is now needed. I am convinced it would have been a real stimulant to the jewelry trade.

I have long advocated a revision of the excise-tax structure. I introduced a bill to bring about such a revision in February 1949, believing it a preliminary move leading to complete repeal. That bill has been kept in a pigeon-hole; and in the meantime 60 percent of our fur workers have been jobless; 2,000 have been unemployed in jewelry and silverware industries in Rhode Island alone; 5,000 have been unemployed in the clock industry in Connecticut alone; and 5,000 have been out of jobs in the handbag industry—to cite just a few examples. The figures I have given are not my figures; they are just a sample of the figures submitted by union leaders and employers to the House Ways and Means Committee in the past 6 months. They have made the case for repeal—repeal without any additional tax burden on the people.

The worst feature of the pending measure is that the Nation at large does not get any real relief from the total tax burden on the national economy. This is already greater than a sound and progressive prosperity can maintain indefinitely. The increased corporation levies will place another depressive cloud over business and employment, while giving prices of manufactured goods another shot in the arm. Any graduate economist can tell us, of course, that corporations compute profits after taxes, and not before, and their price scales are adjusted accordingly.

In urging this measure, the Eighty-first Congress is in marked contrast to the much abused Eightieth Congress. Instead of increasing taxes, the Eightieth Congress passed a bill to cut income taxes by nearly $4,800,000,000.

It took three tries to do it—because this administration does not really want to give the people tax relief. They frustrated our efforts upon every attempt, but on the third try we succeeded.

May I remind my colleagues that this Republican tax-reduction bill gave 71 percent of the savings to people with incomes under $5,000 and relieved 7,400,000 people in the lowest income brackets from paying any Federal income tax at all. That was real tax relief. It was honest tax relief. It is the only relief that the suffering American taxpayer has had in a generation. In addition, we balanced the budget and made a payment on the national debt.

Is it not time for this Congress to be guided by the historic Democratic slogan of 1932 that "Taxes are paid in the sweat of every man who labors, because they are a burden on production and can be paid only by production." I commend this doctrine to my colleagues. It was true in 1932; it is true today.

Canada, our good neighbor to the north, has passed three tax-reduction bills since the war and is now operating with a comfortable surplus which is being applied to her war debt. But the United States is operating at the rate of at least $5,000,000,000 a year in the "red" because we have a Government which will not cut spending.

I do not subscribe to the premise inherent in this kind of legislation that excise-tax reduction would entail a corresponding loss in revenues. The history of oppressive taxes in this country is that when they are eliminated the stimulus given to commerce by lower taxes makes up much, if not all, of the revenue theoretically lost.

The basic principle of this legislation is wrong. The idea that we must never reduce one form of tax without increasing another is not the American way. As long as the Nation is governed by this principle the people of America can never expect true prosperity and real tax relief. The time has come to "ditch" the New Deal "hitchhikers" who want a free ride on every tax bill that comes before Congress. The increases proposed in this bill would retard business expansion. They would result in more unemployment instead of less.

The clear demand of this hour is for venture capital to open new fields of private enterprise and to absorb the constantly growing labor force. Moreover, business should be permitted to accumulate some reserves in order to weather any recession that may come. This bill, as it now stands, would dry up both risk capital and reserves.

If a real job is done on lowering excise taxes, which were levied in the first place to curtail production of so-called nonessential civilian items in wartime, the increase in the volume of business due to lower prices will not only stimulate business generally, but will restore thousands of people to jobs they never should have lost, in the first place.

There is a limit to the tax load a nation can safely bear. Go beyond that limit, and we run up against the law of diminishing returns.

The road to a real and sound prosperity—the road to more jobs and better living for our people—is the road of reasonable taxation. Let us enact a tax bill which will build, rather than injure, our country. Let us reduce the excise taxes but let us not impose other burdensome taxes which will defeat our real purpose—prosperity, more jobs, and a greater revenue based on the solid foundation of expanding business.

We should divide the proposals in this tax bill. Excise-tax relief is an immediate and pressing need. Its consideration should not be complicated or imperiled by other tax proposals which are controversial and will cause delay.

Tax increases or other controversial modifications of the tax laws should not be aimed like a gun at the head of Congress in the concluding weeks of a session. Such proposals are loaded with terrific importance to the future of the Nation, and they should be deferred to a time when more thorough study can be given to all the serious consequences which they might bring about.

Mr. Chairman, I shall vote for the recommittal of this legislation, and I hope that prevails so that we can take the two proposals up separately. But failing that, and I hope we will not fail, I, of course, must vote for the legislation, because I hope then it will go to another branch of this Congress where we can secure a proper tax law.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, the bill reported out by a majority of the Committee on Ways and Means is a very well-considered bill. While it does not provide the extra or additional $1,000,000,000 recommended by President Truman, under the circumstances it is a satisfactory bill; and in connection with the benefits which will come to the country it is an excellent bill.

It is a bill which, upon passage by this body, will go to the other branch after having received months of consideration by the able and intelligent members of the Committee on Ways and Means, both individually and collectively as a committee.

It is a bill which should receive early consideration in the Senate and in my opinion unless there is some disturbing complications as a result of the conditions that have arisen in the last several days throughout the world, there is no reason why this bill should interfere with the early adjournment of the Congress.

Mr. Chairman, we have heard a great deal about excise taxes and we have seen many peculiar positions taken by our Republican friends. But the record on excise taxes is very clear and very distinct and no matter how one may talk on one side or the other, the record speaks for itself. The record appears to me to be a very clear one. It points out clearly that the responsibility for the wartime excise taxes being made permanent rest definitely upon the shoulders of the Republican-controlled Eightieth Congress.

THE RECORD ON EXCISE-TAX REDUCTION

First. When the war tax rates were added, the report of the Committee on Ways and Means on the revenue bill of 1943 stated:

As your committee felt that the rates of excise taxes contained in this bill were justified only in view of the wartime emergency, it was provided that the increases imposed shall terminate 6 months after the close of hostilities in the present war.

Under this provision, the war tax rates would have ended on July 1, 1947, 6 months after President Truman declared hostilities at an end—House Report 871, Seventy-eighth Congress, first session, page 26.

Second. In 1946, Republican Members of Congress formed a House Republican Postwar Tax Study Committee and campaigned for the election of a Republican-controlled Congress on the promise of "downward adjustments in Federal excise taxes." This committee included all Republican members of the Committee on Ways and Means and 17 other Members of the House. According to the Christian Science Monitor of October 21, 1946, income taxes would be reduced by about $3,500,000,000 and excise taxes by $1,250,000,000—CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, January 29, 1947, pages 686 and 687.

Third. After the Republicans had gained control of Congress, the new chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, the former Representative from the Sixth District in Minnesota, in an exclusive interview reported in the Chicago Tribune of November 7, 1946, reaffirmed the promise of excise-tax-reduction. According to the Chicago Tribune:

The committee will reduce, and in some cases eliminate, excises on a long list of items that includes jewelry, furs, cosmetics, and liquors. The reductions are to be effective next July 1 (i. e. July 1, 1947). (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, January 29, 1947, p. 686.)

Fourth. The first important bill passed by the Republican Eightieth Congress was H. R. 1030 which made permanent the wartime excise taxes, even though President Truman, in his budget message, had recommended that they be extended only for another year to enable the Congress to "review the entire group of excise taxes"—budget message for the fiscal year 1948, page M11.

Fifth. During the debate on H. R. 1030 in the House, I charged that the so-called indefinite extension of the wartime excise taxes actually made these excise taxes permanent—CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, January 29, 1947, page 668; page 671. I said then that "any legislation passed by the Congress without termination date is what we call permanent legislation," and that "the Republicans had got themselves into a trap and are trying to alibi themselves out of the trap by saying that 'indefinite' means something other than 'permanent' from a legislative angle"—CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, January 29, 1947, pages 671–672. The reply given me by the then chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means was as follows:

I repeat, it does not give us any satisfaction to ask for the extension of these excise taxes, but I say again to my good friend from Massachusetts that "indefinite" does not mean "permanent." We will go over the whole excise-tax list before long and see if we cannot give relief where needed.

Sixth. Later in the debate on H. R. 1030 I made the following remarks:

Mr. MCCORMACK. I also call attention to the news item in the press of the country the other day and which also appeared in the Washington Post purporting to be a quotation of a statement made by the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. Knutson. If it is not a true statement, the gentleman from Minnesota ought to deny it for his own sake. It is purported to be a quotation of his statement that the reason that they reported out this extension of the excise taxes and in making them permanent or indefinite—as they say, although there is no difference because they are permanent—as I say, the reason was to make it easy to put through their windfall tax for the big taxpayers. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, January 29, 1947, p. 685.)

Seventh. Also during the debate on H. R. 1030, the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. LYNCH] made a very prophetic observation. He said:

What kind of a tax program is the majority party going to give to the people of this country if when they were not in power they introduced bills which would eliminate war excise taxes and when they are in power, they not only refuse to introduce those bills, but they go even further—they fasten the tax as a permanent levy. The people of the United States must recognize that under this bill, war excise taxes are made permanent levies. * * * The bill before us today provides no set time of termination, but, as a matter of fact, continues on and on and on, and will in all likelihood continue on and on until the Democrats get back into power in this House. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, January 29, 1947, p. 673.)

Eighth. The distinguished member from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS], a Republican member from the Committee on Ways and Means, stated during the debate on this question:

I have no right to promise for my party what we will do, but I dare say that I can promise for my party and your party both that before the end of this year we will enact some legislation that will change these excise taxes and change them very materially. But we cannot do it in a hurry. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, January 29, 1947, p. 678.)

This is what happened. The prophecy of the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. LYNCH] is being carried out today, and by the vote tomorrow will be carried into effect. The Republican-controlled Eightieth Congress made the wartime excise taxes permanent. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LYNCH] predicted that they would be reduced when the Democrats came into power, and this bill reduces the excise taxes substantially, undoing to a great extent the harm done by the Republican-controlled Eightieth Congress.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCCORMACK. Yes; I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. Just what is the meaning of the word "permanent"?

Mr. MCCORMACK. What is your idea of it?

Mr. CURTIS. Something that cannot be changed.

Mr. MCCORMACK. From a legislative angle?

Mr. CURTIS. Yes.

Mr. MCCORMACK. From a legislative angle permanent legislation is any bill that is put through without a time limit imposed, without a time limit provided for in the bill.

Mr. CURTIS. "Permanent" is something that continues on without change.

Mr. MCCORMACK. The gentleman is not correct from a legislative angle.

Mr. CURTIS. No; I just read it in the dictionary; look it up.

Mr. MCCORMACK. What does "permanent legislation" mean in the gentleman's opinion?

Mr. CURTIS. The gentleman did not say "permanent legislation"; he said, "Those taxes were permanent."

Mr. MCCORMACK. They were made permanent by the Republican Eightieth Congress by eliminating an expiration date.

Mr. CURTIS. The gentleman is not correct; the taxes imposed in 1941 and 1942, the excise taxes that we are dealing with here today, did not have a termination date.

Mr. MCCORMACK. Were not the wartime excise taxes——

Mr. CURTIS. They can be changed.

Mr. MCCORMACK. From 1943 on put upon the statute books without termination date by the Republican Congress? Yes or no? Were they put on without any time expiration?

Mr. CURTIS. That is correct.

Mr. MCCORMACK. All right; if that is correct, from a legislative angle that is permanent legislation, because it remains on the statute books unless Congress acts affirmatively to remove them. That is what we call permanent legislation.

Mr. CURTIS. Why did the gentleman vote for them?

Mr. MCCORMACK. They remain on the statute books until Congress takes further affirmative action to remove them.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield for a question.

Mr. CURTIS. I will ask the gentleman why he voted for them.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is very easily answered. I answered the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED], today. I voted for them because the Republican-controlled Ways and Means Committee reported an extension without time limit; they got a closed rule; the taxes had to be extended; the revenue had to come in in the interest of the country. We did not have an opportunity of voting on the question of whether or not they should be extended for 1 year. The Republican-controlled Eightieth Congress made them permanent. There was only one thing that any logical-minded legislator could do, as I see it, in the light of the fact that we needed the revenue, and that was to extend them in the hope that a future Congress would either reduce or repeal them; and that is what is happening now under the Democratic-controlled Eighty-first Congress; we are reducing all along the line, not the excise taxes imposed from 1943 on, but going back to those imposed from 1940 on, reducing them substantially in the interest of the businesses affected and for the benefit of the consuming public.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield for one question, but one question only because I have a record here to put in about the party of the distinguished gentleman who was one of the leaders in foisting upon the American people the permanent legislation in relation to the wartime excise taxes.

Mr. CURTIS. Is it not true that the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee joined in the unanimous report on that bill? And is it not true that the Democratic members of the Rules Committee were unanimous in sending it to the floor? And is it not true that the Democratic Party, then the minority party, did not resort to any motion to recommit to put a time limit on this bill? And is it not true that the gentleman supported all of these moves?

Mr. McCORMACK. The fact is that President Truman recommended an extension of 1 year. The fact is that a Republican-controlled Ways and Means Committee reported out permanent legislation without time limit. The fact is that the revenue was necessary for the interest of the country. The fact is that the responsibility for the excise taxes being made permanent rests upon the Republican majority of the Eightieth Congress; and the further fact is that as the gentleman from New York [Mr. LYNCH], said in 1947, the people would have to wait until there is another Democratic-controlled Congress before there will be excise tax relief. That is taking place today, and I hope and am confident it will be consummated tomorrow.

Now, let me refer to the record. The distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS], a Republican member of the Committee on Ways and Means stated during the debate on this question:

> I have no right to promise for my party what we will do, but I daresay that I can promise for my party and your party both that before the end of this year—

This is 1947. I am quoting the gentleman—> before the end of this year we will enact some legislation that will change these excise taxes and change them very materially, but we cannot do it in a hurry. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, January 29, 1947, p. 678.)

I note the gentleman from Ohio wants me to yield. I will ask the gentleman before I yield to him, Did I quote the gentleman correctly?

Mr. JENKINS. Yes. I am proud that the gentleman has quoted me because I told the truth then and I tell the truth now. The gentleman and his President have gone all over the United States talking about the action of the Eightieth Congress.

Mr. McCORMACK. We are right. It was a reactionary Congress.

Mr. JENKINS. Wait until I ask the question.

Mr. McCORMACK. I want to exclude a small group of progressive-minded Republicans who fought hard. I want the RECORD to show that. But as far as the Republican leadership were concerned and the great Republican majority of the Eightieth Congress, not only the Eightieth but Eighty-first, they are reactionary. There is no issue there involved.

Mr. JENKINS. I will make an issue.

Mr. McCORMACK. The American people decided that.

Mr. JENKINS. I will make an issue with the gentleman on that if he will stand still long enough.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman gives to himself greater credit than I think I would be inclined to give to him.

Mr. JENKINS. I will raise an issue with the gentleman. Why has not he and the President offered to repeal one single line of the law passed in the Eightieth Congress? You have not done it. You holler and shout but you do not do anything.

Mr. McCORMACK. Is that not a very fine observation? We put through low-cost housing and public housing, have we not?

Mr. JENKINS. But you have spent more than all other Congresses put together.

Mr. McCORMACK. We put through the 75-cent minimum wage. Your party promised a 60-cent minimum wage in the Eightieth Congress. You did not keep that promise. We have been undoing in great respect the harm imposed upon the people by the great majority, not all but the great majority, of the Republican Members of the Eightieth Congress.

Mr. JENKINS. Why will not the gentleman answer me? Why did he not repeal the tax law? Not one bill has been offered to repeal it.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman said we have not done anything. We have done plenty in this Congress. We have taken care of reclamation. You did not take care of reclamation. We have taken care of flood control that the great majority of the Republicans tried to stifle. We have taken care of rural electrification. We are providing for pipelines from the source of power to the consumer. We have done a lot in this Congress. We have undone a lot that the Republican Eightieth Congress did and the people confirmed that in the election of 1948.

Mr. JENKINS. The gentleman has never answered my question. That is what I want him to do.

Mr. McCORMACK. There is no answer any Democrat could give that would satisfy my friend from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS. All those things the gentleman has mentioned I voted for, but he does not answer why he did not offer a repeal tax bill of which he complains? He never has, he never will, because your party has to have the money to elect and spend.

Mr. McCORMACK. Is that a question or speech? One thing is certain, we are undoing a lot of harm that the Republican Eightieth Congress did.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. KING. I am reminded by the persistence of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS], in having the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] answer, and using the name of our respected colleague the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL], when he said: "You cannot repeal a sin." You can only ask forgiveness and promise not to do it any more.

Mr. JENKINS. The trouble with that is you have not done anything yet.

Mr. McCORMACK. Let me proceed because, of course, the gentleman from Ohio is caught in a trap and there is nothing he can do about it. They trapped themselves and they cannot get out of the trap.

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. The gentleman should not overlook the fact, while he is stating what we have done, that the Democratic Party has returned to the Commodity Credit Corporation the right to buy and build warehouse storage for grain, and we have taken care of the farm-support program, and we have doubled what the Eightieth Congress gave us for the ACP program. We took care of the farmers, and I do not want that to be forgotten.

Mr. McCORMACK. Do not worry; we will never let them forget that. This is so interesting, and I know so embarrassing to most of my Republican friends, and, naturally, having trapped themselves, I must present the record, and it affords me, as a Democrat, pleasure to expose the trap that our Republican friends set for themselves in order that they might take care of those with large individual incomes.

Ninth. Only a few months later in hearings of the Committee on Ways and Means on May 28, 1947, Chairman Knutson made it clear that it was the purpose of the Republicans to increase excise taxes, not reduce them. He said:

It is the hope of the committee to be able to shift much of the burden that is now being carried by the income-tax group, * * * over to the excises, at least in part.

And he added:

Obviously, if we are going to extend the excise field, we will have to include a great many items that are not now included. (Hearings before Committee on Ways and Means, Revenue Revisions, 1947–48, p. 193.)

Mr. O'TOOLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. O'TOOLE. On January 6, 1947, I introduced a bill to reduce the excise taxes to their prewar level, and for 2 years Mr. Knutson refused me a hearing.

Mr. McCORMACK. Tenth. Still another high-ranking Republican member of the Committee on Ways and Means, Mr. GEARHART, of California, offered a bill for a 10 percent manufacturers' sales tax—H. R. 4352, Eightieth Congress.

Eleventh. Chairman Knutson, meanwhile, appointed a special tax study committee of prominent industrialists, bankers, and tax lawyers which recommended in a report filed November 4, 1947 that—

A case can certainly be made for strengthening the excise-tax structure. (Hearings before Committee on Ways and Means, revenue revisions, 1947–48, p. 3616.)

Twelfth. Republicans then demonstrated their lack of interest in excise-tax reduction by passing a bill restricting tax relief solely to income and estate and gift taxes. Moreover, the nearly 50,000,000 income-tax payers under $5,000 received an average tax cut of only $1.15 a week, while the take-home pay of the $50,000-a-year man was increased by $150 a week under the Republican rich-relief tax bill. A generous $250,000,000 annual reduction in estate and gift taxes was provided for 12,000 of the Nation's wealthiest families. This amounted to a 30-percent decrease in estate and gift taxes on the average—speech by me, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 94, part 7, page 9307.

Thirteenth. At the time of passage of the Republican rich-relief income- and estate-tax-cut bill, Democratic members of the Committee on Ways and Means in their minority report unanimously recommended that consideration be given to adjustments in the wartime excise-tax structure—House Report No. 180, Eightieth Congress, first session, page 34.

Despite their failure to reduce excise taxes during the 2 years in which they controlled the Eightieth Congress, Republicans now profess an interest in excise-tax reduction. Their insincerity, however, is presently made very clear by the motion to recommit which would separate excise-tax reduction from the provisions raising offsetting revenue, would make impossible, impracticable, and ridiculous the reduction of excise taxes at this time. Furthermore, the untenable position of the minority is clearly shown by the most unusual motion to recommit which merely splits up the provisions of the bill under consideration. It indicates more than anything else that the Republicans are only obstructionists in the field of excise-tax reduction and have nothing constructive to contribute in this field.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, in today's hour of crisis, our fiscal strength must be carefully husbanded as a foundation for our military strength, and anyone who would weaken either would do a great disservice to this country.

The action taken by a majority of the members of the Committee on Ways and Means by this bill will have a healthy effect upon the business of America and the whole economy of America. The increased corporate rate is a fair one and a reasonable one. Corporations last year had a total income of $18,000,000,000 after payment of all taxes. Only a few years ago $11,500,000,000 was the highest income the corporations had ever had after payment of taxes, in any one year.

The type of corporations that are receiving this 3 percent increase in order that there be no loss of revenue through cutting the excise taxes can well afford to bear the burden. At the same time, we are taking care of the 90 percent of small corporations in America. One of the great problems confronting America in our intense economic system is to enable small business to compete with big business. I am for big business but I am against abuses by any business. I believe there is a great problem confronting our country to see that small businesses can compete in this intense economic system that is ours and prevent themselves from being either absorbed or destroyed.

The 3 percent differential in the corporation tax of those corporations earning less than $167,000 net will be of material advantage to them in building up their reserves and in expanding their business. It will be of valuable assistance to our national economy. It will increase employment. It will strengthen small business. It will strengthen our entire economic life.

The majority of the Committee on Ways and Means have been very fair in this 3 percent increase, and at the same time they make a powerful contribution to the strength and stability of the small business corporations of our country.

The Democratic Party has always been the party of the people, it has always been the party to preserve and strengthen the family life. The Democratic Party is the party also to prevent monopoly and to preserve and strengthen small business in America. This bill will make a greater contribution toward the preservation and the strengthening of small business in America than anything that has been done by Congress, in my opinion, during the last 20 years.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 25 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CURTIS].

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, the distinguished gentleman who just left the floor is one of the ablest lawyers I have ever known. He is able to argue just as eloquently when he is wrong as to the facts as when he is right. I congratulate him on his great ability.

The committee worked long and hard on this bill, and I want to pay tribute to my colleagues on that committee, who were in session day after day since about February 3. I particularly want to commend those two great Americans—the gentleman from North Carolina, Chairman DOUGHTON, and the minority ranking member, the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED]. They are men of integrity, men who want to preserve the solvency of this country and men who are concerned about the future welfare of our great Republic.

I followed President Truman on a tax matter in the Eightieth Congress. I find it was one of the biggest mistakes I have ever made. In fact it was a mistake for the Eightieth Congress to adhere to the request of President Truman to extend the wartime excise taxes. I believe now it would have been better to turn a deaf ear on the request of President Truman to extend the wartime excise taxes.

Fortunately we did not go as far as the President requested. The President wanted excise taxes extended to a day certain. Well, anyone who analyzes the situation will realize that does two things. It shuts off the Government's revenue and it paralyzes business. If any of you people here knew that on a day certain you could buy, for instance, a set of silverware without an excise tax, you would not buy it until that day. In the meantime sales fall off, factories may close, men are laid off, and no taxes are collected. That was the sort of program that President Truman came before the Eightieth Congress with and said to extend these wartime taxes for 1 year. The Eightieth Congress said, "No, we will not do that. If you insist on it, we will extend them, but extend them until they can be considered again."

I believe it was a mistake to even extend them at all. There is one thing I found out in studying the finances of this country. That is, that you cannot follow the program of President Truman and maintain the solvency of this country. You cannot stand on Mr. Truman's program of taxation and spending and expect this country to survive. The new legislation requested by him would cost according to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Department of the other body an additional $25,000,000,000 a year. How can you raise $65,000,000,000? The most money we have ever been able to raise in wartime was $45,000,000,000 when we had taxes intended to shut down industry and when it was a time of crisis.

How are you going to raise $65,000,000,000? If you take all the income of every citizen making more than $10,000 a year, you would collect $4,000,000,000. If you raised the corporate rates up to 50 percent you would collect $3,000,000,000 more. If you repealed the tax reduction of the Eightieth Congress and raised the exemption from $500 a person up to $600 which took 7,000,000 of the low-income people off the income-tax rolls, and which gave added benefits to the blind and to the aged, if you turned your back on that humanitarian bill you would raise probably another $5,000,000,000. But you would still fall short by billions and billions of dollars of paying for the Truman program. Let this be clear up and down this country that we cannot follow the Truman program of taxing and spending and have any hope that this Nation will survive. It is a matter of arithmetic.

I do not want this country to forget that under the New Deal-Fair Deal administration not one single bond has ever been paid off by surplus financing.

Now, a little bit about this bill. I voted against it in committee because in committee there was still opportunity to change and correct the bill. I am going to vote for it on the floor because it does deal with some much-needed excise-tax reductions, and I want the other body to consider it. It is very much needed. In many ways it does not go far enough.

I would like to say something about the transportation tax. It is 3 percent of the freight bill. It is most inequitable. It is sectional legislation. It is unfair to that great interior of the country, those places far removed from the markets. It means that the producer who must ship his product, whether it be a manufactured product or a carload of wheat or a carload of livestock, a thousand miles pays a much greater freight rate than the man who ships it 50 miles, and the tax is likewise greater, because it is 3 percent of the transportation cost.

I fought as hard as I could in committee to get the transportation tax repealed, not only because it is unfair to the small industry and to the farmers and producers of the great area where I come from, but because it is essentially wrong. It is most inflationary. When you go into a store to buy an article, just how many transportation taxes do you pay? When these raw products are produced they are transported and there is a tax paid on that. When those products are processed another transportation charge and more taxes. When that material is sent to the manufacturer, more transportation and more taxes. When the manufacturer sends his product to the wholesaler, and the wholesaler to the retailer, more transportation and more taxes.

Those transportation charges, including the taxes, are figured in the mark-up. It is common practice for business to determine how much an article costs. Then they figure their mark-up, whether it is 3 percent, 5 percent, 10 percent, 20 percent, 50 percent, or 100 percent. They figure the mark-up on all costs including the transportation cost, plus the tax. So the people of America, in buying their necessities, pay probably 10 or 15 transportation taxes on every article, and it raises the price and makes it inflationary and they get less for their money. If I am any judge of the temper of the American people, they are alarmed. Oh, yes; there is an element of prosperity going on, but they well know it is blood prosperity, that it was purchased at the price of a great war. They also know that the life-insurance program which they have amounts to nothing. They know that even though they work and toil and live frugally, their money does not go very far. Inflation is the most cruel kind of taxation. One of the greatest causes of inflation is this transportation tax. That tax should have been repealed. I am sorry that more of the majority Members did not go along in the effort I made to repeal that tax.

Now, a word about the communication taxes. Almost the poorest person in the land has to have a telephone. The individual, in order to get a day's work here and there, has to be where his potential employers can call him and say, "Can you work for me tomorrow?" The lady who sews all day and far into the night has to be reached by telephone. The tax on the telephone bills should have been taken off. It was reduced 5 percent, but that is not enough.

Oh, yes. They quarreled a long time about who made the taxes permanent. In the first place, no tax is permanent; one Congress cannot bind another Congress. We made those taxes without a definite termination date in order to save businesses from collapse, because there would have been no purchases until that date arrived. But I want to ask this question: Who made the war situation permanent? Whose responsibility is it that we have a war situation permanent?

There are some good things in this bill in regard to excise taxes; there will be some businesses helped. They waited a long time. I am glad they are going to get it. I supported it, and I will support it in this bill. I think the removal of the notch in the corporation tax was a good thing. I wanted it done; I voted in committee to have it done without an increase in rates. Frankly, I think that is the only way we could do it and really help the small corporation to the utmost. Why do I say that? The corporations in my territory are those small businesses suffering under the notch. They are entitled to relief, but when they get that what is going to happen to the price of the steel that they must buy? If it goes up and cuts down their margin what have they gained? If you put a tax on the steel industry or any other great industry it is going to be passed along. I cannot for the life of me understand why members of the majority Party day after day and in speech after speech defend the purity of the great corporations. That is what you do when you say they will not pass these taxes on. Who is it in America that is so altruistic that he does not think in terms of take-home pay?

Mr. COMBS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CURTIS. In just a little, when I have finished my statement.

Everyone thinks in terms of take-home pay, even Congressmen; most people want to know what they will have left when the tax gatherer gets through with his taking, yet you people on the majority side defend the great sprawling corporations and say, "No; they would not do that."

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CURTIS. In just a minute.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Everybody yielded to the gentleman.

Mr. CURTIS. And I shall yield, but I wish to finish my statement regarding this matter.

Corporation officers are going to keep up or increase the earnings for their shareholders if it is possible to do so. At the present time in order to make a dollar profit for their shareholders they have to charge $1.61. Why is that? Take $1.61 and charge it with a 38 percent tax and you get a dollar profit. How much will they have to charge the people of the country to get a dollar profit now? $1.77. Figure it out; take $1.77 and reduce it by 41 percent and you get a dollar profit.

You do not kid anybody; when the great utilities and great communications systems and railroads have their taxes added to and added to they are going to collect it from the poor and humble people that you and I serve; and this idea of the Democratic majority defending these large corporations and saying, "No, they will not do that," when all over this country people think in terms of take-home pay and profit for themselves——

Mr. COMBS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, of course it has been argued from time immemorial that a tax placed on business and industry is passed on to the people. Now, then, if that is true, the 38 percent we now have is passed on to the people, is it not?

Mr. CURTIS. I think they are doing that. I think that is what makes prices so high.

Mr. COMBS. Does the gentleman advocate taking that off?

Mr. CURTIS. Not necessarily, no. It cannot be done.

Mr. COMBS. Where are we going to stop the list, up or down?

Mr. CURTIS. Big Government and high taxes increase prices and make for inflation and thus make it hard for the rank and file of our people.

Mr. COMBS. Will the gentleman answer this question: If the big corporation can pass that on, or the little one, to the people, does that mean there is no competition?

Mr. CURTIS. Not necessarily. I think everyone in America today is thinking in terms of take-home pay.

Mr. COMBS. What does it mean when United States Steel, General Motors, and other large corporations published here in the spring enormous profits which they had left after the payment of taxes, hundreds of millions of dollars. Does the gentleman think they cannot pay taxes out of that?

Mr. CURTIS. I am not worrying about them. I am talking about the people from whom they are going to extract that money.

Mr. COMBS. Whom are they going to extract it from? Can they not pay it out of the profits before passing it on?

Mr. CURTIS. I think they can, but I do not think they will. I do not think that these big corporations are as pure as your party contends they are.

Mr. COMBS. If they are what the gentleman says they are, if you took it all off, they would keep the balance.

Mr. CURTIS. I have not advocated any such thing. I have pointed out that big government and high taxes make for inflation and thus make it hard for the rank and file of the people. I stand on that, and the gentleman knows it.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. MILLS. If the gentleman from Nebraska is correct, and I am not disputing the fact he may be, does not the gentleman's argument completely eliminate the argument that is made that we need to do something about double taxation on dividends? If this corporate tax is passed on to the consumer, then, actually, the dividends are not being taxed twice. Is that the conclusion I am to reach from what the gentleman says?

Mr. CURTIS. No. I think any place that you put this tax the owners are going to insist that management make enough money to get some profit for them. If they do not get it, they will hire new management.

I do not want to talk about the corporation tax any more. I wish I could have the sublime faith that the majority party has that these corporations will not take it out of the hides of the people.

I want to say something about taxing the interest element of life insurance. The gentleman from Iowa pointed out so well the great social advantage of having a situation that is conducive of the payment of death benefits in installment payments.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 10 additional minutes.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, it so often happens that when death comes and the aggrieved people receive a sizable amount of insurance, or a small amount, it comes at a time when they are worried, when they are harassed, when they are faced with many problems, and oftentimes that money, with the best of intentions, slips away. So that the great army of insurance agents throughout the country have told the heads of families and others: Fix this insurance so that it is paid not in a lump sum but in installments over a period of years.

They have said that when insurance is paid in installments you get a little more that way because they give you an interest increment and that interest increment is not taxed. Now, in order to get $5,000,000 more for this great bureaucracy to spend, which will only pay for 5 days' travel of the bureaucrats, they are going to tax the interest element of life insurance death benefits made in installments. That is a bad trend. There are things in this bill which point in the opposite direction that this country ought to go: More taxes, more hidden taxes, fewer jobs, and less enterprise.

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. CARROLL. I have been following very closely the argument presented by the gentleman with reference to life insurance companies. Is it not true that as to a lump sum payment after death, if it is invested, the income from that investment is taxable?

Mr. CURTIS. Yes.

Mr. CARROLL. And is it not true that if as an investment a lump sum payable is left with the insurance company, that the interest on that lump sum payment is taxable?

Mr. CURTIS. Yes; but the social result of what you are doing in this bill is bad.

Mr. CARROLL. It seems to me that it boils down to the argument that where a death takes place and the money is paid on the installment plan, the question is really whether or not we will give equitable treatment for taxing interest or income as the result of installment payment, and I am unable to get any distinction.

Mr. CURTIS. Well, there is a big distinction because under what the committee has recommended here many people will have to pay taxes on a return of their principal and will have to pay a tax before they have received the face amount of their insurance.

Let me illustrate. Suppose a man buys an insurance policy and he provides that the amount paid upon his death shall be paid to his widow at so many dollars a month for as long as she lives. Under this bill you start taxing a part of that return the very first month If she dies in 2 months or 2 years, long before she has received any great part of what was paid in, she will be paying taxes on a return of the insured's money, and you cannot escape that.

Mr. CARROLL. Of course, there would be the identical situation if there was a lump sum payment, whether it was investment income or interest earning, and there is no reason, I think, as I read what the experts have to say, for this distinction, even though it comes on the installment plan.

Mr. CURTIS. The gentleman misses the point. The reason for the distinction is that we want to encourage the installment payment of death benefits because it protects the widows and orphans and everybody involved. Lump-sum payments slip away and depreciate, and with the best intentions they are gone. What I am arguing for is a little incentive to encourage installment payments.

Mr. CARROLL. Will not the gentleman admit that this installment payment, where you talk about tax on the principal and where you talk about tax on the interest, that it is a very small amount? In the normal case, in the normal American family, it would be very small. It might be substantial in extremely large estates.

Mr. CURTIS. For a very small amount of revenue you are taking away the argument that the individual can buy life insurance and have it paid in installments and that it is not subject to the Federal income tax.

Mr. CARROLL. Is it not true that evidence was submitted to us that this was being used as a loophole, and it involves about $20,000,000, and it involves most of the very substantial estates?

Mr. CURTIS. It is my understanding that it involved about $5,000,000 of revenue. The life-insurance agents know from their experience in settling these claims and dealing with people that this has been a good thing for people.

Mr. CARROLL. I think it would be a mistake to have the RECORD show that we are striking at the small home or the small American family. Of course, we want to encourage installment paying. But really, as I remember the testimony of the experts on this, this was a substantial loophole and involved $20,000,000 in revenue.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. I have in mind a case where a man died leaving three or four children. He had $30,000 or $40,000 of life insurance. He could elect under the policy whether or not the full amount was to be paid or whether it was to be paid to his family over a period of years, like an annuity. He elected the annuity. The question is, will the tax on that annuity be changed or affected by this bill?

Mr. CURTIS. It was a death settlement?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes.

Mr. CURTIS. At the present time when a death benefit is paid in installments the interest element is not subject to the Federal income tax. This bill makes it subject to the Federal income tax.

Mr. MICHENER. At what rate?

Mr. CURTIS. It is on an average rate. They take what the average life expectancy of the beneficiary would be and how much he would receive, and subtract from that the face of the policy, and the difference is interest. Consequently, in the case of an insurance contract to pay a sum certain to a widow as long as she lived, if she lived only a year she would be paying the tax right from the beginning and never even get a return of the premiums.

Mr. MILLS. If the gentleman will yield, permit me to call to the attention of the gentleman from Michigan that on pages 46 and 47 there are some examples that set forth the matter about which the gentleman from Nebraska was talking.

Mr. MICHENER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield.

Mr. CARROLL. The statement I made about $20,000,000 was in error insofar as the installment payments of insurance were concerned. What I had reference to was the minority recommendation to extend that same theory to annuities. It would result in a total loss of $20,000,000.

Mr. CURTIS. Yes. There is an argument that if we are going to apply this Canadian rule to death installments it should be applied to annuities.

Mr. Chairman, it has long been the position of the Republican minority that the maximum amount of excise tax relief that can be given be enacted into law with dispatch and thus end the uncertainty and confusion that is now slowing up sales and production and creating unemployment.

When the committee undertook the consideration of this matter, the minority then moved for the immediate consideration of excise tax reduction as a separate bill, in order that the matter could be settled and industry could go ahead, men could go to work, and they could start paying taxes and pay their other bills. In this the minority of the Committee on Ways and Means have been supported by the entire minority of the House.

In order that the question of excise taxes can be settled in regard to all commodities and all industries without further delay, there will be offered a motion to recommit to separate this bill. This will enable both the House and the other body to speedily act upon excise taxes and send the matter to the President.

So long as there is public discussion concerning any particular excise tax potential buyers of those articles are withholding their purchases. Retailers and wholesalers likewise delay their orders. This means that factories slow up or close down and men are out of work. These unemployed men are not contributing through the withholding tax and many of them will be compelled to seek unemployment compensation. The need for settling the issue of excise taxes is most urgent, whether that be by granting the relief that is desired or denying it, the country ought to know.

There are other basic reasons why the provisions of this bill should be separated into two bills. We, of the minority, feel that there are questionable provisions in this bill that ought to be considered on their merits alone. For instance, under the provisions of this bill for the withholding of a flat 10-percent tax upon dividends, we will in many instances be depriving people of low income of their own money when they do not owe any taxes at all. This is particularly true of an aged couple who have a few hundred dollars of dividend income but whose total income is less than the exemptions which they are allowed.

Likewise, you might take the case of a hospital endowment fund that has $20,000 dividend income. Under the provisions of this bill the Government would withhold $2,000 of their income year after year even though they owed no tax.

Furthermore, this bill imposes upon the American people hundreds and hundreds of millions of dollars of additional taxes. It is the view of many of us that in the long run all taxes are borne by the consumers. If these new and added taxes contained in this bill are for the best interests of the consumers of the country or in other words, for the rank and file of our citizens, let those new taxes be brought in here as a separate bill and be considered on their merits.

Mr. Chairman, this is the situation we find ourselves in. If these added taxes, the taxes on life insurance proceeds and the speed up of payments of certain business taxes and these other very controversial matters go over to the other body, tied to the excise taxes, this uncertainty will run on and on. In view of the headlines of the past few days, who knows when this tax bill will be approved? Maybe September, maybe October, maybe never. In the meantime the potential purchaser of something upon which there is an excise tax will wait and see. Let us settle the issue of excise taxes and do it now. The only vote you can cast for excise-tax relief is to support the motion to recommit because these other matters are controversial.

It will take the other body a long time to consider them. No one knows when the Congress will adjourn or when the conference report will be accepted.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I take this time in order to inquire of the majority leader as to the program following the consideration of the tax bill tomorrow.

Mr. McCORMACK. There are two or three conference reports. There is a District rent control bill, and the District nurseries bill. There is one from the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. I think they all have time limits. That is, they must be acted upon before July 1.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I understand we expect to proceed today on the tax bill through the engrossment and third reading of the bill and the previous question.

Mr. McCORMACK. Exactly.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And the motion to recommit, and the vote on the final passage will come up tomorrow.

Mr. McCORMACK. Exactly. Final action on the tax bill will be the first order of business tomorrow.

Then following that there are some conference reports which I have mentioned.

Then, S. 3527, to amend section 14 (b) of the Federal Reserve Act. There is a time limit of June 30 on that. There is a rule out today. I understand there is not any opposition to that, so that it should not take very much time.

Then, S. 3550. I understand a rule has been reported on that. That is another one of those bills relating to the import of certain oils and fats, and the time expires in a few days, so action must be taken before June 30.

Then, there is House Joint Resolution 453, offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], authorizing the President to invite the States of the Union and free-foreign countries to participate in the First International Trade Fair to be held at Chicago August 7 through August 20. I do not imagine there will be any opposition to that.

Then, there is S. 3336, to provide for the organization of the constitutional government by the people of Puerto Rico. It is hoped that we can pass this bill, because there is a big celebration going on in Puerto Rico on July 4. The Governor of Puerto Rico, who, as we know, is a very responsible man and a fine public official, has cabled, expressing hope that his bill could be passed by that time, and it would be utilized very effectively because the people are keenly interested in it.

Then, there is H. R. 7349, to protect the national security of the United States by permitting summary suspension of employment of various civilian employees in agencies of the Government. I think all the Members perhaps know that, making it general. I know of no opposition to it, but it is a bill of importance.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman is speaking of tomorrow's program?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. I am filing a conference report on the bill S. 2596.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is an amendment to the GI bill, the so-called Teague bill?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course, conference reports will be in order. I am glad the gentleman advised the House, so that will be a matter of record for the information of the Members.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Did the gentleman include a bill from the Committee on Banking and Currency, a bill that Mr. SPENCE will call up?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes. That is S. 3527.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Could the gentleman tell us about the program for next week?

Mr. McCORMACK. With the disposition of these bills I have no legislative program for next week. The gentleman will recall that the Consent and Private Calendars next week were dispensed with and will be in order on the following Monday. There will be no legislative business next week. May I say that includes no other business?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] has expired.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN].

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

UNITED STATES COULD STAND A $65,000,000,000 BUDGET

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I heard the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] make a statement today that indicated that he believed it would be impossible for our Government to provide for a $65,000,000,000 annual budget. Although I am not advocating an increase in the budget, and certainly not advocating anything like $65,000,000,000, I do believe that the Government properly conducted as it is now could stand a budget much higher than $65,000,000,000 if used for proper purposes and supported by adequate and equitable tax laws.

UNFAIR COMPARISON

I do not think it is a fair comparison to compare the amount of the national budget with the national income. I do not think it is comparable at all. A lot of people I know will not agree with me. If we take out $40,000,000,000 in taxes for our annual budget from our national income of, say, $200,000,000,000 that is 20 percent. Our national income is over $200,000,000,000, so it is about 20 percent or less. If we were to siphon that money off in taxes and bury it in the ground, or send it to Fort Knox and bury it there, that would be devastating to our country, and I would agree with the people who make the statement that no nation can survive if we do that. But that is not what happens. We draw the money in in the form of taxes, but we immediately pay it out and it keeps going. Money has velocity. It travels not only 10 times, but 20 times or 30 times or 40 times a year for each dollar, so when you make the right comparison you should say that the $40,000,000,000 should be compared to our total transactions, because the Government's part is only one transaction.

TWO TRILLION DOLLARS A YEAR

In this country last year the 330 largest banks cleared checks aggregating one trillion two hundred and fifty billion dollars ($1,250,000,000,000). There are other transactions besides that. The $29,000,000,000 that we have in the pockets and tills of the people in actual cash will travel much more rapidly than the bank transactions. So when you consider the velocity of the money and the total transactions aggregating about $2,000,000,000,000 a year—two thousand billion dollars a year—the right comparison is to compare that $40,000,000,000 budget with the $2,000,000,000,000 of transactions a year. If you do that, you have 2 percent of the total transactions it costs the National Government, which is not terribly large, after all. The following table is revealing:

Federal debt, national income, and national wealth

Year	Total Federal debt (end of fiscal year) [1]	Total national income (calendar year) [2]	Total national wealth (end of calendar year) [3]
1931	$16,801,281,492	$58,873,000,000	$318,800,000,000
1932	19,487,002,444	41,690,000,000	238,800,000,000
1933	22,538,672,560	39,584,000,000	----------
1948	252,292,246,513	226,204,000,000	684,245,000,000
1949	252,770,359,860	221,500,000,000	(4)

[4] Not available.

Our national income is about $225,000,000,000 a year now, and about that much during the years 1948 and 1949, as compared to a national income of $41,000,000,000 in 1932 and $39,000,000,000 in 1933. As high as the national debt seems, it can be paid with less inconvenience and less trouble today than a debt one-tenth its size could have been paid in 1932 or 1933.

UNITED STATES IN GOOD CONDITION—BUDGET, NATIONAL DEBT COMPARED

I want to say something about the budget. In view of the fact that 76 cents out of every dollar is chargeable to the cost of past wars and providing for an adequate national defense, we only have 24 cents out of every dollar to consider when we talk about reducing the budget.

TAXES HIGH, BUT NOT DANGEROUSLY HIGH

Our budget is about $40,000,000,000, and I know that is a large amount of money. I can hardly conceive of the size of the national budget. We often hear the statement made that no nation can survive if it draws in, in the form of taxes, as much as 20 or 25 percent of its national income. That is the part I want to talk about. We are approaching 20 to 25 percent now, but our country is not "broke"; it is not nearly "broke." It is not even in bad shape, although we owe a large national debt. I wish the debt was much smaller, and I would be willing to vote for taxes to make it smaller. I regret exceedingly that we are operating on a deficit. I voted against the tax-reduction bills in the Eightieth Congress because I knew any tax reduction would throw us into deficit financing. I would be willing to vote taxes for the purpose of balancing the budget in order not to have any deficit if we are unable to reduce our national expenditures to balance the budget.

We often hear people say we owe about as much as our national wealth. That statement is not nearly true, either. Our national wealth, as estimated by the Department of Commerce, is about $684,000,000,000. Our national debt is about 40 percent of that amount. When we add to the national debt the debts of the States, counties, parishes, and political subdivisions, it will probably run up to more than 50 percent. But even with that we are not in such bad condition.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, when the Speaker was in the chair I asked unanimous consent at that time to insert extraneous matter in the RECORD in my remarks during the debate on this bill. I now ask that at that point in the RECORD of today's debate where this matter of the vote on H. R. 1030, over which there has been so much controversy occurred, that the roll call on that bill may be inserted.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from California [Mr. McDONOUGH].

Mr. McDONOUGH. Mr. Chairman, no tax bill which the Congress ever has passed is satisfactory to everyone that is affected by it. The question of equity and fairness is always raised against some provision of every tax bill.

In the case of the bill H. R. 8920 which is before us for consideration there are many good points about it, such as the relief to the average taxpayer by the partial repeal of excise taxes which will be welcomed by everyone because of the reduction of cost in the purchase of many every-day necessities and services.

Many of us would like to amend this bill to reduce the excise taxes still further than this bill provides, but that is not possible because of the closed rule which was adopted without opposition making it impossible to amend it and giving us no other choice than to vote for it or against it.

If this gag rule had not been adopted I would have amended the provision in section 601 by striking out the language which requires the withholding at the source, 10 percent of the dividends payable to a stockholder. I think it is unfair and inequitable to impose this tax on a recipient of dividends especially where in many cases the receiver of these dividends does not receive enough income to be obligated to pay any income tax and therefore must file a claim for a refund for the amount withheld. This will be the case in many instances where the receiver is elderly and depends upon these dividends for a living. Fortunately the refund must be returned during the taxable year, so they will not have to wait too long for the amount withheld.

It seems unfair to me that dividends are taxed at all, because the corporation is taxed for its profits and then the stockholder is taxed for receiving a dividend from those profits. The whole theory of double taxation in my opinion is wrong, and it is my hope, since we here in the House cannot strike out this unfair section of this bill, because of the closed rule we are under, that the Senate will give this part of the bill thorough consideration with a view of correcting this inequity. These are not only my views but also the views of my colleague, Mr. HINSHAW, and other Members of the California delegation. We want to support a bill which will give the taxpayer some relief in excise taxes which this bill will do, but we feel that the 10 percent withholding of dividends is unfair and inequitable. We hope that the Senate will correct this bad feature of this bill when they consider it.

Instead of withholding 10 percent of dividends by the corporation it seems to me to be much more fair to require corporations to report to the Treasury Department the names of all those receiving dividends and the amounts, which would make those who are obligated to pay income taxes to include these dividends in their income-tax returns and would not work a hardship on those who do not have to pay income taxes by withholding 10 percent at the source.

We have all heard from many of our folks back home about this double taxation and I think now is the time to correct this unfair feature of this bill.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES].

Mr. REES. Mr. Chairman, it was my understanding that the Ways and Means Committee, during its 5 months' study of the tax problem, would bring before the House a real tax revision bill and would submit legislation that would adjust taxes fair and equitable to all parties concerned as near as could be done, after exploration of all sources of taxation.

It appears now that what the committee has done is to submit a bill to reduce excise taxes in some degree and has then attempted, in order to satisfy the administration's request, to increase taxes in other categories in sufficient amount to make up for loss of revenue by reason of reduction in excise taxes. In my judgment the two subject matters are unrelated except only because of public demand for removal of excise taxes, and the further demand on the part of the administration for funds to carry on its program.

I would not be misunderstood. I realize that in these uncertain times and conditions a tremendous amount of funds is required to carry on the expenses of our Government, and I know that in view of unsettled conditions as they exist today, it is likely that more funds may be needed for our defense program. I do feel, however, that there should be a reduction in excise taxes, and to offset such reduction, there could be a further reduction in our expenditures.

As I have said on other occasions, expenditures of our Government should be in consideration of the things we really need and not on the basis of a good many things that people feel they want but are not needed in view of the condition of our fiscal situation.

A considerable amount of money could be saved, for example, just in the management of our affairs of Government. If our agencies were managed efficiently and economically, hundreds of millions of dollars could be saved. The Hoover Commission has offered recommendations in this respect.

Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, authorizations made by this Congress for the expenditure of Government projects amounting to more than $3,000,000,000 could be cut without injury to anyone. It is my contention that we should not authorize or start new projects except where absolutely necessary until those under way are completed.

We could cut down, if we would, a considerable amount of expenditure to foreign countries by spending the funds judiciously and where absolutely needed. For example, I see no justification for furnishing several million dollars' worth of oil-drilling equipment that has recently been sent to Europe that will be used for producing oil in competition with our own production. Neither do I think several thousand dollars that was spent recently to rehabilitate Monte Carlo is for the best interests of our country. Neither do I think the taxpayers of America would approve the outright giving of funds to foreign countries for building reservoirs and providing electric energy in foreign nations. This would not be so bad if funds were being loaned for that purpose, but the outright allocation of such funds seems a little liberal on the part of our Government.

Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, we might save some money in not being quite so reckless in speculative loans. I am informed we have just lost something more than $30,000,000 to a company in Ohio that was going to build homes by wholesale. The proponents invested a few thousand dollars and the Government invested $36,000,000. These are a few of the suggestions, Mr. Chairman, whereby we could make up for part of the reduction in excise taxes without the necessity of imposing additional taxes against our people.

Mr. Chairman, I again offer my protest for the manner in which this bill was brought to the floor of the House under a gag rule. No one is permitted to offer any amendments so we are required to either vote the bill up or down. We can take our choice.

Mr. Chairman, the bill should be separated in two parts and the House given a chance to vote on the excise-tax proposal and other reduction features of the bill, separate and apart from increases proposed in the bill, without being compelled to at the same time vote for the increased taxes proposed therein. I shall expect to support a motion to vote on these proposals separately if given a chance to do so. If this vote fails, then I shall vote for the bill for the reason that it does contain some features that furnish a considerable amount of relief. However, I shall make an effort before doing so to send the bill back to the committee with a demand that the excise features and other reduction features be separated from the provisions that require increased taxes in other categories.

I realize the preparation and submission of a tax bill is a tough job, and I do want to commend the members of the Ways and Means for the effort put forth in dealing with this problem. I want, especially, to further commend the Membership for the manner in which the measure has been explained and the way in which divergent views have been expressed.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT] may extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, taxation is rapidly becoming America's major domestic problem, and in my opinion the application of a gag rule, which prohibits amendments except those coming from members of the House Ways and Means Committee, is by no means the proper approach in handling the tax problem.

The bill as drafted in the House Ways and Means Committee provides no actual tax relief to the American people. In a few words, it slashes excise taxes and to make up for the revenue lost it provides higher taxes elsewhere which in the long run will be paid by the average American citizen through increased commodity prices.

Under the gag rule we have no alternative. It is a case of voting for or against the tax bill. We have no other choice or no opportunity to improve the measure.

Since we have to take the tax bill as it is drafted or vote against it I can see no reason to take up the time of the Committee in discussing the legislation.

On February 21, 1950, I appeared before the House Ways and Means Committee and at that time expressed the wishes of the majority of my constituents who are in favor of some good old-fashioned reduction in Government spending and taxes.

My statement before the House Ways and Means Committee follows:

Mr. Chairman, I represent approximately 300,000 people in the Twenty-second Congressional District of Pennsylvania comprised of the counties of Blair, Centre, and Clearfield. My purpose of appearing before you is to convey the wishes of the majority of my constituents that wartime excise taxes should be drastically reduced or repealed. My constituents are aware of the fact that the excise taxes were levied as a wartime measure and were supposed to be temporary.

For several years wide publicity has been given to the possibilities that Congress would repeal excise taxes. With the beginning of each session of Congress the story is renewed with the result that buyers' resistance resembles a buyers' strike.

In my congressional district, and I know it is the same in all other congressional districts, many firms are operating at a loss, while others have had to reduce operations and lay off employees. Without fear of contradiction I can assure you that some business firms in my congressional district have suffered a decline in business from 30 to 40 percent because of the retention of wartime excise taxes.

The losses to which I refer have by no means been confined to the so-called luxury items. Dealers in more essential products are also concerned over unfair and punitive excise taxes. For an illustration—taxes on transportation and communication were assessed solely to discourage wartime travel so that such systems would be readily available for war purposes rather than for the purpose of producing revenue.

The ordinary electric-light bulb is in no sense a luxury, yet it is taxed 15 percent. On one hand we pride ourselves on the widespread use of electricity in American homes and industry. We have authorized the creation of the Rural Electrification Administration to further the use of electricity and make it available to rural Americans. Then we come along and tax the electric-light bulb which is an indispensable item in the use of electricity. This unfair and discriminatory excise tax on light bulbs is only one of many of these punitive taxes which should be repealed.

Another unfair and discriminatory tax is the 20-percent excise tax on the fur industry.

Since 1943 the excise tax on furs has produced revenues from $44,000,000 in 1943 to $97,000,000 in 1947. The fur industry, and especially the small furrier, has found it impossible to complete with other firms manufacturing wearing apparel that is sold tax free.

It is realized that the Federal Government needs tax revenue, but it is unfair to obtain such revenue by not only discriminating against an industry but threatening its very existence.

Let us consider the average American housewife who needs a warm winter coat and who, by thrift and sacrifice, has saved $300 to buy a fur coat, and which she is certain to wear for at least 5 years.

When she visits her local store and selects her fur coat she finds that, instead of $300, the coat because of the excise tax, will cost her $360, or $60 more than she has to spend. Not having the extra $60 in her budget, she realizes she can purchase from another store a very fine fur trimmed cloth coat without paying any excise tax. This punitive tax drives this customer from the furrier to the store selling fur-trimmed cloth coats.

This situation is a serious one, not only for the fur industry, but especially for the small furrier.

In my congressional district furriers inform me that they have faced a buyers' strike for many months. As a result they have had to reduce the number of employees 50 percent with the indication of a further reduction if the 20-percent excise tax on furs is not repealed.

Not only is the fur industry facing bankruptcy as a result of the buyers' strike resulting from the 20-percent excise tax but the importation of Russian furs is dealing a death blow to the industry.

Furriers in my congressional district employ on an average of 250 people, and you all know what such employment means to the average community. I want you to know that the situation in the fur industry is desperate because of the 20-percent excise tax, and I sincerely hope you intend to do something about it.

Another discriminatory tax that has lingered on since the close of World War II is the Federal amusement tax of 20 percent.

Like every congressional district, we have many small movie theaters that provide the only form of recreation in many small industrial communities. We all know that a good movie furnishes needed relaxation during these trying days. Your physician will often tell you to relax and forget your troubles. If you seek relaxation for your family by going to a neighborhood movie, you are penalized 20 percent because the wartime excise tax is still in effect.

The excise taxes on freight, passenger travel, telegrams, telephone messages, jewelry, theater tickets, luggage, furs, baby oil, and hundreds of other items too numerous to mention are hurting my constituents by destroying business, reducing employment, and penalizing the American consumer when buying many of the necessities of life.

As I said in the beginning, I am appearing before your committee on behalf of my constituents in the Twenty-second Congressional District of Pennsylvania. I join them in their vigorous protest over retention of wartime excise taxes and earnestly beseech you to take positive action by drastically reducing them or repealing them in their entirety.

You will observe, Mr. Chairman, that the above statement refers principally to excise taxes.

At this point I should like to comment on that portion of the bill providing for new taxes on corporations whose annual earnings are in excess of $167,000. To me this portion of the bill is not satisfactory for two reasons: First, it penalizes one segment of the tax-paying public; and, in the second place, it imposes heavier tax burdens on industry, thus discouraging expansion, increased production, and the ploughing back of profits, not to mention the adverse effect it will have on employment in the years ahead.

Mr. Chairman, let us not kid the American people. This bill further muddles the heavy tax burden that now rests on the American people. After all, Government funds come from only one source—the people who pay taxes on their incomes and their purchases.

This is not a tax-reduction bill. It is the old shell game of "robbing Peter to pay Paul."

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. KING].

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, the tax problem of any government is always a most difficult problem; it has undone and brought about irreparable harm to many otherwise stable governments throughout history. There have been times when it seriously threatened our own country. I had thought, before entering a political life, that there would be times when exigencies and the seriousness of the problem would be such that partisan political operation or conduct would be set aside; but I find that when the spirit of the two-party system, or the three- or four-party system, becomes sufficiently worked up that the common welfare is unfortunately submerged in a maze of twisted statements, and half-truths. I am not laying this primarily at the foot of either party's throne, but it is upsetting.

Today I have been present every hour of this debate, and I am astonished that there has been a tendency to completely becloud an issue as important as the one now before the House. A committee of this House has sat for the better part of this entire session attempting to work out a most involved and complicated measure, a measure that can spell the solvency or insolvency of our Nation at a time when we all know that to be on the road to solvency is at least the best that can be expected of it. I have heard one or two speeches of the minority Members from this floor lay the blame for the failure of certain proposals to be incorporated in the bill to the leadership of this House when the fact actually is that such proposals are not a part of this bill solely because of the concerted action of the minority party in the committee. Now, that is plain unadulterated deceit. It is not conducive to an understanding that is certainly necessary at this time throughout our country.

Mr. Chairman, the events of the past several days which overshadow our painfully slow progress toward a peaceful world should, I think, give us reason to pause and reflect.

With the match already lighted over the powder keg, it appears that the primary concern of some of us is to claim the maximum political advantage from whatever legislation happens to be up for consideration.

Whether the issue happens to be tax reduction, or avoidance of higher taxes, or additional benefits for veterans, or something else—the inclination seems always to be in favor of whatever costs money and against whatever method to raise it may be proposed.

I have a little pamphlet here, entitled, "The Federal Budget in Brief," with which some Members may be familiar. Sometimes I think we may be too familiar with some of these problems to appreciate their full impact.

Do you suppose anyone living in the month of June 1941 would have predicted that in the fiscal year 1951 the cost of past wars and of preserving national security would account for 71 percent of Federal expenditures?

And how many Americans even now know that the direct budget costs of World War II amounted to nearly $350,000,000,000, and that about 60 percent of this cost was financed by borrowing?

How many Members of Congress stop to think before they vote to add still further to this staggering sum? For example, only Monday the House voted to override the veto of the President of a bill giving to veterans of World War II working in the Post Office Department additional benefits. Now I was one of those who voted to override the veto of the President, and I can justify in good conscience the vote that I cast. But the point I want to make is that it would be foolish and reckless and ridiculous for us to weaken the tax structure of the Government at this time.

Nearly everyone seems to agree that the time for granting relief from the wartime excise taxes is long overdue. In my opinion, a billion dollars of excise tax relief is, if anything, too small. I can understand that nearly everyone can agree that excise taxes should be substantially reduced. But, Mr. Chairman, when I read in the minority report the statement that, "As a natural corollary to reduction of excises, there would be a drastic reduction in Federal expenditures," it got a little bit under my skin. Moreover, the minority report reminds us:

> The appalling fact facing the people of this country is that annual Federal expenditures have increased by $10,000,000,000 in the last 2 years.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is an old maxim of equity that "He who seeks relief in a court of equity must come in with clean hands"; that is, he must be free from reproach in his own conduct. Accordingly it might be appropriate to inquire how many of the minority Members of the House can state that they have not voted for many of these increased Federal expenditures? The minority report charges the President with recommending legislation to increase expenditures by many billions of dollars. I might merely observe that not one dollar can be raised or spent by the executive branch of the Government unless it is first voted by the Congress.

I am glad that the time for excise tax reduction has finally arrived. The businesses and the consumers which have been selected to bear this special burden have just cause to claim that a part of the load should be borne by all corporations. The bill would increase the tax only upon corporations above $167,000, but would apply regardless of the type of business in which the corporation might be engaged.

It would have been more pleasant had we been able to reduce excise taxes without picking up the revenue elsewhere. In fact, 2 years ago that might have been done, and it was urged that some consideration be given to excise taxes when the income tax reduction bill was passed by the Eightieth Congress. Since that was not then done and we are now confronted with financial obligations of Government that may not soon grow lighter, the only course is for us to maintain the tax structure of the Government at present levels.

I think the President was right when he warned the Congress on January 23, 1950:

> I want to make it very clear that I could not approve excise tax reductions unless they were accompanied by provision for replacement of the revenue lost, because I am convinced that sound fiscal policy will not permit a weakening of our tax system at this time.

I think this statement is even more applicable today. In fact, under present circumstances it might be the wisest course to enact now only the provisions of the bill which would close loopholes and adjust corporation taxes. Then, if we find that the threatened emergency subsides, we can pass an excise tax bill at our leisure.

In any event, we should not reduce excise taxes now without fully offsetting the revenue lost.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COMBS].

THE TREATMENT OF SMALL BUSINESS UNDER THE TAX BILL

Mr. COMBS. Mr. Chairman, the backbone of our free competitive private enterprise system is small business. Our country has thrived largely because vigorous and imaginative individuals have risked their small savings and developed new markets and new products from modest beginnings. The health of our economy depends to a large extent on whether we continue to protect the small-business man and encourage his growth.

This tax bill, for the first time since the end of the war, is a positive step in the direction of correcting many of the critical shortcomings in our tax laws from the point of view of small business. These reforms have been postponed on the ground that our needs for revenue have been great and that we could not afford to weaken the strength of our tax system prematurely. The bill which is before the House today, however, provides the most essential tax reforms necessary for the stimulation of small business and at the same time increases total revenues.

I should like to review briefly the provisions of the bill which provide these important reforms.

First, the bill eliminates the notorious notch rate of 53 percent on corporate incomes between $25,000 and $50,000. This notch rate was first adopted to limit the benefits of the low, preferential corporate tax rates to corporations with incomes in the lower tax brackets. Instead of accomplishing this objective, however, the rates are actually higher for a portion of the income of intermediate-size corporations than on the incomes of the very large corporations. The corporation income tax rates are now 21 percent on the first $5,000 of corporate net income, 23 percent on incomes between $5,000 and $20,000 and 25 percent between $20,000 and $25,000. The rate then jumps to 53 percent in the notch between $25,000 and $50,000 of net income. Above $50,000 the rate is a flat 38 percent.

This method of graduation is defective because it discriminates grossly against corporations with profits in the notch area. A corporation with income between $25,000 and $50,000 retains after tax only 47 cents out of every dollar of profits above $25,000. By contrast, corporations with profits above $50,000 have 62 cents left after tax out of every dollar of profits and those below $25,000 have from 75 cents to 79 cents left after tax out of every dollar of profits.

The high tax on profits between $25,000 and $50,000 discourages expansion of small business. A corporation which already has a $25,000 net income may decide to refrain from risking the cost of expanding its facilities because the additional income it received would be taxed at 53 percent. Such obstacles to expansion are particularly undesirable at the present time when there is need to keep investment at high levels and to prevent the disappearance of small business.

The bill eliminates the excessive notch rate in a very simple manner. It provides a normal tax rate of 21 percent on all corporate profits, and a surtax rate of 20 percent on all profits above an exemption of $25,000. In combination, the normal tax and surtax would amount to 21 percent on corporate profits of less than $25,000 and 41 percent on the amount of profits above $25,000.

The effect of these changes in the tax rates is to reduce the taxes of all corporations with incomes between $5,000 and $167,000. It would increase the taxes of corporations with incomes of more than $167,000.

These changes would reduce the taxes of about 170,000 of our small and intermediate-size corporations, or almost half of all the corporations with taxable incomes. It would increase the taxes of fewer than 19,000 large corporations constituting only 5 percent of all taxable corporations. We are in effect redistributing the most burdensome part of the corporate tax from a large number of relatively small corporations to the large corporations with swollen profits and with resources far in excess of those in the lower tax brackets.

A second provision in the tax bill that is favorable to small business is the provision which improves the opportunity of business to offset their losses against profits in later years before being subject to tax. Present law permits taxpayers to offset their losses in any given year against profits in the two prior years and to carry forward any remaining loss to be offset against income in the two succeeding years. This tax bill would increase the carry-forward from 2 years to 5 years and would reduce the carry-back to 1 year. It would thus provide a total period of 7 years in which losses might be offset against profits as compared with the present 5-year period.

Small-business men are especially handicapped by inadequate provisions for losses. They generally encounter great difficulties in withstanding the financial strain of hard times and the denial of loss offsets would be especially harmful to them. Large businesses have more access to outside sources of credit and financing and can more readily overcome the effects of a depression.

Large firms have a greater opportunity to offset losses against profits because they are more likely to have diversified products and markets. If they sustain a loss from one activity, they can often offset that loss in the same year against profits from another actiivty. Small firms on the other hand are less diversified and sell to more restricted markets. They have less flexibility in planning their investment program and less opportunity to cover losses from some sources by gains from others.

The choice of a 5-year carry-forward and a 1-year carry-back is particularly desirable because it is helpful not only to small business but to new business. New concerns often have losses or irregular earnings in their early history because the manufacture and sale of a new product involves large initial costs which cannot be recovered immediately. Under present law, old firms have an opportunity to recover the losses by carrying them back 2 years and then forward 2 years if necessary. New firms, however, do not have any prior profits and do not benefit from the 2-year carryback. Such firms need the long carryforward to assure them of the same treatment as firms that have prior profits. Since new businesses often start as small businesses, the longer period for carrying forward losses which is allowed under this bill would be of greatest benefit to the enterprising individual who invests in and operates a new, small concern.

A third provision in the tax bill which helps small businesses is the reduction in excise taxes. We have been deluged by businessmen all over the country in the past few years with complaints that some of the excises have been especially harmful to small businesses. The excises most harmful to small business are those levied on retail sale of furs, luggage, jewelry, and toilet preparations. Studies of the effects of retail excises have shown that they have cut heavily into the sales of retail stores and have reduced their profits. In addition, cities in which these articles are manufactured have been operating under depressed conditions which will be relieved by the elimination of these taxes. By enacting the excise tax reductions recommended by the Committee on Ways and Means, we would be going a long way toward alleviating the hardships which they create in the small-business area.

Finally, the method of accelerating the corporation income-tax collections is designed in large measure to help small business to adjust itself to the new schedule of tax payments. It is inequitable to require individuals to pay taxes currently as they earn their income and to allow corporations to wait almost a full year after their profits are made before they discharge their liabilities to the Government. Correction of this inequity has been difficult because many small businesses do not have the resources to shift to an accelerated schedule of payments. The speed-up of corporation tax payments under the bill would be spread gradually over a period of 5 years and would thus be helpful to those small concerns who could not make the transition overnight.

In conclusion, I should like to repeat that this tax bill is needed because it would be of great assistance to small business. It would eliminate the high-notch rate and reduce taxes for the small and intermediate corporations. It would increase the length of time over which losses can be offset against profits. This increased carry-over period is needed mostly by small business. The tax bill would also cut in half the retailer's excise taxes which have reduced the profits of the thousands of small retailers who sell furs, luggage, jewelry, and toilet preparations. And, finally, it would extend the period of transition to the accelerated corporate payment system over a period of 5 years to assist small business to make the transition.

I urge upon the Members of the House that this bill be adopted. Small business needs the assistance and encouragement that this bill would provide.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COMBS. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. NICHOLSON. May I ask if these big corporations will not pass along these taxes to us, plus a little bit more, as has happened in connection with the raises we have given the automobile workers and everybody else, so that instead of saving us money they not only get the taxes but add a little bit to them?

Mr. COMBS. That question has been up here repeatedly during these debates. I know there is a theory that if you increase the tax of a corporation it all is passed right on to the people and, therefore, you ought not to tax them. Where are you going to draw the limit? Does the gentleman figure that 38 percent across the board is just exactly the right spot where they will not pass any of it on? Just what is the gentleman's idea on that?

Mr. NICHOLSON. My argument is that we have reached the saturation point in taxation. If we go any further, then we get into a socialistic state where the Government takes enough of our money so that we become the slaves of the state.

Mr. COMBS. So taxing corporations makes us slaves of the state?

Mr. NICHOLSON. I will not say it does. I say when it gets to a certain point it does.

Mr. COMBS. Where is that point?

Mr. NICHOLSON. I should say that when we get beyond paying a third of our income on taxes we become slaves of the state.

Mr. COMBS. You want to reduce corporate taxes from 38 percent down to 31 percent; is that it?

Mr. NICHOLSON. No; I do not want to do that. What I want to do is to see that everybody pays a proportional share of the cost of running the Government. Under this proposition you give to the big corporations the right to charge anything they want for whatever they are producing. You can go up from 38 to 41 percent as this bill does, but they will get more than the 3 percent you are giving them.

Mr. COMBS. May I say to my friend that he and I do not agree on that. I think they are taking all they can get and keeping all they can keep right now. We have a principle of competition in business in this country. Consider the automobile industry. Certainly some of those concerns were luckier than others and made bigger profits than others did. They are going to be competing in the market and certainly when we get a stronger buyers' market they are going to have to come down to reasonable prices on their automobiles. Look at their own published statements. General Motors, for example, published a statement in the spring showing enormous profits of hundreds of millions of dollars after the payment of taxes. I am not going to assume that because we take a small part of that, in addition to the payment of taxes, that they are going to pass that on to the public. I do not think that is true. If the principle of taxation that you are speaking of is sound, then we would not tax them at all.

Mr. NICHOLSON. I dislike to ask the distinguished gentleman from Texas, for whom I have a great deal of admiration, the question that I am about to propound, but the gentleman mentioned automobiles. The gentleman from Texas knows, or must know, that in 1939 and 1940, just before the war you could buy a Ford or Chevrolet, or an ordinary poor-man's car for about $850. Now we are paying well over $1,500. What I want to ask the gentleman is if the people who were working in those automobile factories received that money, or who did receive it, because the gentleman has stated they paid enormous dividends in the last few years, with which statement I agree. But why would they not do that under this bill if they have done it through the last 8 or 10 years?

Mr. COMBS. I do not have time to go into a monetary or economic discussion, but the question you have raised is a matter of the purchasing power of the dollar, the relation of wages and income to cost of living, and all that type of thing. It is all right to have a cheap dollar, if you want to put it that way, a 52-cent dollar, if all things, the cost of living, wages and services, and all the costs that we have to bear adjust themselves to the dollar of that price. So what we have been going through in recent years is a process, interrupted by the way, by the conditions of war, of adjusting all of those things, one to the other, so that there is a fair distribution of the wealth that is produced among the people who produce it and the consumer goods of the factories and farms. Of course, that is an involved thing, as my friend knows, but just because we could buy things cheaper in 1939 does not mean that we could buy them cheaper now, of course, because wages and salaries of 1939 and the farm income of 1939 and the factory income of 1939 were not what they are now. So it is a question merely of adjusting those things.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COMBS] has expired.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BOGGS].

Mr. BOGGS of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOGGS of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I have read with interest the report of the Republican minority on the tax bill now under consideration. I am struck by the fact that more than anything else the views of the minority demonstrate financial irresponsibility.

The minority favors immediate excise tax reductions, but it does not wish to take steps to offset the revenue loss involved. Obviously such action would, in the absence of a reduction in expenditures, increase the Federal deficit substantially during a period of business boom, and during a period of international crisis.

To the obvious comment that such behavior would be completely irresponsible, the minority's only answer is to recommend the reduction of expenditures sufficiently to offset the excise reduction; and this proposal is made in very general terms. We are all in favor of reducing expenditures wherever possible, but most of us know how very difficult it is to make such a policy effective when particular appropriation measures are before the House. It is easy enough to say in general terms that expenditures can be cut by a billion dollars, but it is a different thing entirely to build up a list of specific reductions which will achieve a reduction of that size.

The Republican minority states in its report that expenditures have increased by $10,000,000,000 in the last 2 years, and that $6,000,000,000 of the increase has no connection with past wars or national defense. This statement leads me to believe that it is the increases in the nonmilitary items which occurred during the past 2 years which the Republican minority would have us cut. In view of the serious international crisis now upon us in the Far East, it would be difficult indeed to find anyone who seriously believes that our military expenditures should be reduced at this time. The real question now is whether the appropriations which we have authorized for national defense are adequate.

Let us analyze the alleged $10,000,000,000 increase in expenditures which is supposed to have occurred between 1948 and 1950. First of all, had the Republican minority used the most recent data which are freely available to them, they would have found that the increase was actually $8,200,000,000, not $10,000,000,000. I am referring to the revised estimates prepared by the Bureau of the Budget on April 19 of this year and placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD by Representative CLARENCE CANNON, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. These figures show that $2,500,000,000 of the increase since 1948 is attributable to national defense, veterans, and interest on the public debt. An additional $900,000,000 is due to our international aid commitments. The minority appears to have no objection to the $2,500,000,000 increase in the first three items I mentioned, and it seems clear to me that on a similar basis they cannot object to the $900,000,000 increase in international aid commitments unless, of course, they have strong isolationist sentiments.

Most of the remainder is accounted for by aids to private housing, reclamation, atomic energy, highway aid, and the postal deficit. What I should like to know is which of these items our friends of the minority propose to decrease by more than a billion dollars. Would they reduce aid for agriculture? Would they cut expenditures for atomic energy? Or do they have in mind a reduction of the post-office deficit?

Until the minority party indicates specifically which of these programs they would curtail, I do not believe that we should take seriously their proposal to offset the excise cuts by expenditure reductions. I can only conclude that under present conditions, their willingness to cut excises without raising other revenues is evidence of a dangerous sense of irresponsibility. They seem more concerned with the results next November than with the solvency of the Federal Government or the stability of the American economy. They have tried to hide their true position. They are really advocating an increase in the deficit and a larger public debt.

Now let us examine some of the more specific objections that the minority raises against the tax bill now under consideration. Their report specifically endorses the excise-tax reductions and the elimination of the notch in the corporate rate structure. I find myself in agreement with them on these two points. However, in line with their general lack of financial responsibility they complain that the two other provisions in the bill do not go far enough. They want to provide still more liberal treatment in the case of net operating losses and floor stock refunds for the excise taxes which are reduced. In the case of the latter, however, they are quite careful not to indicate the cases in which they believe floor stock refunds should be paid. Naturally, both of the proposed changes would result in a substantial additional revenue loss.

On the other hand, the provisions of the bill to which the minority raises specific objection are all substantial revenue-raising measures. Let us examine these proposals and observe the revenue consequences of omitting them from this bill.

The first objection is to the corporate rate increase which, on a full year basis, accounts for $433,000,000 of additional revenue.

The second objection is to withholding on dividends, which is estimated to yield $170,000,000.

The third objection is to cutting down the delay in the payment of corporate income taxes. Although the change made in the bill will not increase revenues in the long run, it will increase revenues in the fiscal year 1951 by about $730,000,000, not the mere $100,000,000 mentioned in the minority report, and raise collections in each of the succeeding 4 years by $800,000,000. The total additional collections resulting from this measure during the next six fiscal years will be about $4,000,000,000. Moreover, this represents a permanently retained gain.

The next objection is to reducing the interest rate on refunds of overpayments of taxes. The omission of this provision would reduce collections under the bill by $45,000,000 annually.

The minority also objects to closing two of the loopholes your committee has found in its study of trusts and foundations. While I do not have a breakdown of the revenue consequences of the deletion of these two provisions, I think it is fair to say that their omission will reduce by about 25 percent the estimated $100,000,000 which is anticipated annually from the provisions of the bill dealing with charitable trusts, family foundations, educational institutions, and similar organizations.

In other words, out of a total revenue of about $900,000,000 which this bill will pick up in a year of full operation, the minority has specifically raised objections to measures accounting for about $750,000,000, and to the best of my knowledge the minority report does not specifically approve of the proposals which would bring in the remaining $150,000,000.

The proposals to which the minority has objected account for $975,000,000 out of a total of $1,214,000,000 in additional collections which are anticipated in the fiscal year 1951 under the bill as reported out by your committee.

Let me now turn to some of the minority's objections to specific provisions in the bill. In the case of the corporate rate, their report states:

> This bill raises the top corporate rate from 38 percent to 41 percent—the highest rate ever imposed even in wartime.

This, of course, is unfair. The statement ignores the fact that during the war corporations paid much heavier burdens than they would under the bill. The minority report simply ignores the excess-profits tax. Moreover, as the minority members of the Ways and Means Committee very well know, the reason why the corporate rate has been increased above the 40-percent wartime rate is because of the elimination of the notch in the corporate rate for incomes between $25,000 and $50,000, to which the minority report lends full approval. As was very carefully explained in the report of your committee, the increase in the corporate taxes provided in this bill averages less than 2 percent of corporate net income. In other words, the average burden will actually be less than it would be if the corporate rate were raised to 40 percent and nothing were done about the notch.

In their discussion of the corporate rate increase the minority attempts to ride two horses at once. Their report states that—

> Corporations will pass the increased tax to the consumer in the form of higher prices—

But then goes on to say—> to the extent that corporations do not pass the tax on in the form of higher prices, stockholders' dividends will be reduced.

Clearly one of these statements must be in error. Either the increased tax as suggested by the first statement is not passed on in its entirety to the consumer, or stockholders' dividends will not be reduced.

There is still another error in the second statement which I have quoted. Even if the corporations do not pass most of the tax on to the consumer, and I do not believe they will, there is no assurance that stockholders' dividends will be reduced. In fact the staff has informed me that in estimating the effect of the bill they have assumed that 60 percent of the additional corporate tax would be absorbed by corporate retained earnings. An examination of what corporations actually did in 1949 indicates that this assumption may, in fact, be too conservative. With the immediate postwar adjustment years over, corporations are increasing their dividend payments and decreasing their undistributed profits. It seems reasonable to assume that this trend will be continued despite the moderate corporate rate increase contained in this bill.

The minority report also argues at some length that the need for venture capital is a major reason for not increasing corporate rates. In this connection the report drags in a long discussion of the Republican's individual income tax reduction bill of 1948. The minority must be very self conscious about that particular bill or they would not continue to attempt to justify it on every possible occasion.

The alleged shortage of venture capital at the present time is by no means as great as our friends of the minority would have us believe. The people who manage the corporations of this country realize this whether the minority does or not. The principal basis for the expansion of corporate business during recent years has been undistributed profits, yet in 1949 corporations retained only $8,200,000,000 in undistributed profits as contrasted with $11,400,000,000 in 1947, and $12,500,000,000 in 1948. This is clear evidence that the corporations of the country are not lacking in funds for expansion today. If any more proof is needed, you only need to examine the bullish condition of the stock market in recent months, prior, of course, to the influence of the Korean crisis.

In connection with its objection to withholding on corporate dividends, the minority report piously states that everyone should pay his taxes and urges that every "reasonable" step be taken by Congress to make sure that this is done. Yet in the same breath the minority objects to withholding on dividends. Their "out" in this case is that the argument that informational returns filed with the Bureau of Internal Revenue by corporations on their dividend payments, and itemization by taxpayers on their return forms of the dividends received by them, would bring in as much money as withholding on dividends. While provisions of this type are included in the bill, they alone will not stop the evasion and avoidance which is known to exist. The practical use of the informational return on dividend payments filed by corporations is severely limited as an instrument for discovering a failure to declare dividends received. Many taxpayers do not hold the stock in their own name or hold it in a name that differs slightly from that used on their tax return. Wives, for example, quite commonly hold stock in their maiden name, yet the tax return which they file with their husband may show only the husband's name and the wife's initials. Others have their ownership of stock registered under their surname and initials and file their tax return using their full name. Even if intentional discrepancies are ignored, these variations between the names appearing on the stock and names on the tax returns are so great that they place a real limitation upon the usefulness of the informational return.

The itemization on the taxpayer's return form is, of course, very helpful in determining whether any of the dividend payments on the stocks mentioned have been omitted and a comparison between returns filed in successive years should be more revealing if the dividends are itemized than if they are not. However, itemization is of no use whatsoever if the taxpayer consistently omits all of the dividend he receives on a particular stock.

The minority report stresses the so-called hardship which may arise under withholding on dividends, utterly ignoring the fact that similar hardships, if they be hardships, are already faced by the much larger number of taxpayers receiving wages and salaries. The minority alleges that millions of taxpayers will be deprived of 10 percent of their investment income by withholding on dividends, ignoring entirely the fact that most of them will owe taxes and that in all of these cases the 10 percent withholding simply represents a convenient method of payment.

The minority report suggests that those who are eligible for refunds of this 10-percent withholding tax will be fortunate if they receive the refund by the middle of May. This is a gross misstatement. This last year the Bureau paid out practically all of the refunds which did not involve questions concerning tax liability within a month after the returns were filed. One of the collection districts actually completed the payment of refunds within a 2-week period. Moreover, if a taxpayer is eligible for a tax refund, there is no reason why he should not file his return at the first of January. If he does so, he can expect his refund within a 2- or 3-week period, or about 4 months earlier than the minority report would lead you to believe.

The minority alleges that dividend withholding will impose a difficult administrative burden on all corporations and cooperatives. The committee very carefully considered this problem and drafted its plan in such a fashion that the administrative burden on the withholding agents would be minimized. Corporations were purposely given the opportunity of informing the stockholder of the amount withheld in any fashion they see fit. The notice may consist of a mere notation on a stub or slip accompanying the dividend payment. Moreover, the 10 percent withholding rate was selected so as to make the mathematical computations as simple as possible.

The minority report's discussion of the plan to reduce the delay in the payment of corporation taxes is very brief. At one point the report almost admits that perhaps the provision contained in the bill is not too bad, since it spreads the adjustment over a 5-year period. Nevertheless, at another point this provision is referred to as political and as a sleight-of-hand trick. It seems to me quite obvious that any politics involved is on the part of the minority. They appear to be unhappy that we have found a way to cut down the delay in the payment of corporate taxes by some 6 months. It should be emphasized that even after the plan contained in the bill is fully effective, corporations still will receive considerably more time to pay their taxes than is true in the case of individuals. Individuals must make the final payment on their taxes 2½ months after the end of the year in which they incur the liability. Corporations will still have 5½ months to complete their payments when the proposal is fully effective. Moreover, through withholding on wages and salaries, individuals pay a substantial portion of their tax during the year in which the income is earned, but corporations will not be required to start paying their taxes until 2½ months after the end of the year in which the income is earned.

The minority report also states that reducing in the delay in collecting the corporation taxes will produce no additional revenue. While it is true that this provision will not increase any corporation's tax liability, it will result in about $4,000,000,000 of additional collections during the next 5 years, a period when due to the cold war now getting warmer, it is to be expected that added revenue will be badly needed. Moreover, this $4,000,000,000 represents a permanent gain, which will not be lost in subsequent years.

The minority objects to the correction of what has been called a one-way street for the taxpayer under section 117 (j) of the Internal Revenue Code. In the case of the sale of business property, existing law treats a gain as a capital gain and a loss as an ordinary loss. Thus, the taxpayer has the best possible break. If he has a gain, it is taxed at not more than 25 percent. If he has a loss, it is offset in full against the top rates at which the individual or corporation taxes are applied. The minority would have us continue to tax gains as capital gains, as is done in the bill, but they complain that the capital-loss treatment provided under the bill is not liberal enough. While it may be desirable to reconsider the treatment accorded all capital losses at some future date, I can see no reason for singling out losses on sales of business property and giving them more favorable treatment than is received by ordinary capital assets.

The minority report raises no objection to reducing the interest rate on refunds of overpayments of tax, but insists that the interest rate should also be lowered for the taxpayer where he has underpaid his tax. The minority report contends that to reduce the interest rate for refunds and not for deficiencies is inequitable. It seems to me that the minority's position is confused. A low interest rate on refunds is appropriate, since the Government can borrow at relatively low interest rates, while the ordinary individual cannot usually invest his funds for short periods of time at any very high interest rate. On the other hand, where an individual borrows money, he must pay a relatively high rate of interest, since the risk involved to the lender is relatively great. Hence it appears appropriate to require the Government to pay only 3 percent interest on moneys that it, in effect, has borrowed from the taxpayer, since the risk involved to the taxpayer in this case is practically nonexistent. On the other hand, it appears appropriate to charge 6 percent on what amounts to a loan to the taxpayer since here the risk involved to the Government may be relatively great.

The last provisions in this bill to which the minority raises objections are those relating to trusts and foundations. Objection is raised to requiring a trust or foundation to spend for a charitable or similar purpose the funds it has collected for such a purpose, and to require the owner of stock in a family business to actually part with ownership and control of such property in order to receive a charitable deduction. On one hand the minority indicates the abuses in this area should quickly be eliminated, but on the other hand, they recommend that action on these provisions should await more thorough study. Hedging of this type is typical of the minority report. The minority knows full well that these provisions were carefully investigated before being placed in this bill. Objection on the part of the Republicans to these two provisions seems particularly curious, since both were placed in the bill on the motion of one of the signers of the minority report. Moreover, as the minority should know, of all the provisions relating to charitable trusts and foundations, the two provisions to which they raise objections are the most hedged about with safeguards.

One other point has particularly struck me in examining the minority views. At no place does the report actually state that the present bill should not be enacted into law. I must give the minority credit for having raised a considerable cloud of dust in the statement of its views, but the very fact that no specific statement is made that the minority opposed the bill is enlightening. It indicates the high quality of the proposed legislation. It indicates that even the minority could see that too strong a statement would look bad on their record. I fully anticipate that when this bill comes up for final passage many of the minority members of the Committee on Ways and Means will themselves vote for the bill.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES].

Mr. REES. Mr. Chairman, may I call to your attention that the proposed amendment to section 1700 (e) (1) of the Internal Revenue Code embodied in H. R. 8920 is rather far-reaching.

Its effect could nullify the provision in the present section 1700 (e) (1) which classifies "any room in any hotel, restaurant, hall, or other public place where music and dancing privileges or any other entertainment, except instrumental or mechanical music alone, are afforded the patrons" as a cabaret.

Under the new definition, if this amendment is passed, it will become extremely difficult to prove that the selling of food, and especially of liquor, are not "merely incidental" to the dancing, although in practice in practically all of these places, the dancing is merely intended to attract patrons for the sale of liquor.

The argument will doubtless be used that some of the places now using juke box music will be encouraged to hire orchestras if this provision goes through. I think the absurdity of this will be self-evident. The juke box places have already adjusted themselves and will not be courting any higher expenses. Since instrumental music is now permitted without classifying a place as a cabaret, aside from the addition of a singer or two, there is not likely to be any widespread increase in employment because of it.

I would like to have the assurance from this committee that there is no intent to liberalize our present law with respect to definitions of what is meant by cabarets.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. CARROLL].

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. Chairman, I have been privileged to sit as a member with this important committee. At the outset I want to commend the Republican members and the Democratic members for writing a good bill. It would not be fair to say that many of the minority members did not make a substantial contribution to the formation of this bill. With great regret I note that the Republican leadership cannot go along with us. I am confident that if the corporation tax were not in this bill we might have come out of the Ways and Means Committee with perhaps unanimous agreement.

Arguments have been made pro and con as to why they did not want to go along with the corporation tax. It is not my intention now to belabor the point. The record makes crystal clear the position of the Republican leadership on this issue—I think it is obvious in this critical period, in view of the President's statement, in view of existing economic conditions, we should not further accentuate the deficit; and, of course, we had to recoup and recapture revenue to offset the reductions contained in this bill. The corporation tax increase is reasonably moderate. Certainly no corporation will greatly suffer as a result of this tax increase.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY] asked a question about the oil depletion allowance. Of course, the President did recommend that the depletion allowance be reduced from 27½ percent to 15 percent. For the purpose of the record it ought to be shown that some of us feel that there are many imperfections in this tax bill. This is not the best sort of tax bill that could be presented to this body in the opinion of some members of the committee. I can only speak for myself, but I may say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that we waged a spirited fight in committee, and we were out voted.

This bill is a compromise. We waged our fight on this issue on two occasions, and it was a close vote both times, but we were unsuccessful in our opposition. I should like to add—I see the gentleman from Massachusetts rising to ask me a question—I should like to add that the record will show—I am not speaking about the present record, but it is within the record of the committee, that the staff of the committee recommended that the reduction of depletion allowance on oil and gas from 27½ percent to 15 percent would equate the depletion allowance for oil and gas with that allowed to metal minerals.

I should like to make this further point. Having waged and lost the fight to "equate the difference" existing in present law between oil and gas and metal minerals, I then led the fight in our Committee pressing for equal treatment of metal minerals with that of oil and gas. That is to say, we asked to increase the depletion allowance for metal minerals to 27½ percent. We lost that fight, too. However, I am happy to report that it was only by a small margin, for there is a growing realization of the need for assistance to the metal-mining industry of this Nation. Clearly, if the oil and gas industry, which already is swollen with heavy profit, is to be permitted to continue to receive this special treatment, there is no justification longer to disregard the unfortunate condition in which the mining industry finds itself.

In this connection, there soon will come on the floor of the House a mining bill which is of vital importance to the defense of this Nation and concerns the future welfare of the mining industry. Although a similar bill was rejected by this body a short time ago, I am hopeful that the provisions of this new mining bill will be acted upon favorably by this House.

There is some disagreement, but it is generally conceded that the oil depletion allowance constitutes a loss to the Treasury of somewhere between $160,000,000 and $200,000,000. Out of fairness I must say that the independent oil men, the wildcatters, and other people of the industry came before our committee and offered strong evidence that a reduction to 15 percent would cause great harm to the industry if present law is changed, nevertheless, despite the recommendation of the experts, as I have indicated, a majority of the committee agreed to that allowance. In my opinion that is one of the glaring inequalities of this bill.

I now yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. I note that the gentleman, as he said, agrees, while we are dealing with tax foundations and other things, that the oil industry which has been, as the gentleman said, swollen with profits, should bear their corresponding proportion of the burden of taxation.

Mr. CARROLL. Yes; and I might say to the gentleman from Massachusetts and the other Members here that the record ought to show that not only did we not reduce the depletion allowances in this bill; we have increased some to the tune of about $35,000,000 for certain other commodities. In my opinion that is another one of those glaring inequalities in the bill. But in order to pass this legislation these compromises were made.

I now yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. MARSHALL. I have been receiving quite a number of inquiries lately from people in regard to the withholding tax. The withholding tax on patronage dividends creates a burden of expense, apparently, for concerns in keeping their records. As far as I know, that is something new, and I wonder if the gentleman from Colorado, who I know has been making a study of that, will give me some information concerning it.

Mr. CARROLL. I will be happy to respond to the gentleman from Minnesota. To the best of my recollection the argument was presented when this matter was in the committee that we now are withholding the taxes of wage earners. The idea was presented that we ought to withhold dividends on the part of corporations, in the form of a 10-percent withholding in order to capture about $100,000,000 now being lost to the Treasury. Then there came under consideration what to do about co-ops. The committee gave considerable time to the question of what should be done about co-ops.

There has been a drive in the Nation for some years to tax co-ops. There has been great weal of propaganda by a certain tax league in reference to co-ops. If you will look at the contributors to this so-called tax league you will find it is supported by the big private utilities of the Nation and others. They have been trying to impose a corporation rate tax upon the co-ops. All of the evidence before the committee was that co-ops are not corporations. They are the same as individual proprietors, they are the same as partnerships. The fight as to whether or not a corporation tax would be levied upon co-ops was beaten down, with the support of a very few Republican Members. That was beaten down because we recognize the unfairness of the great propaganda drive of this so-called Tax Equality League.

Then, having imposed the withholding tax upon the wage earner, having imposed a 10-percent tax upon corporation dividends, the question came up, Should we not extend the same principle to the patronage dividends of co-ops? As the argument unfolded in our committee, it seemed that that should be done. Then I read to the committee two letters I had received from co-ops, one a farmers' elevator co-op, another an oil co-op in Colorado, stating that the money they paid out to their patronage holders, dividend holders, was small, in a great percentage of the cases involving a dollar or $5 only. I presented the argument to the committee that it would put an administrative burden on the co-ops and involve a great bookkeeping problem, but nonetheless it was argued that it would have created a great administrative problem for both the Treasury, corporations, and co-ops, if small dividends were exempted from the withholding tax.

Mr. MARSHALL. In no way does this imply there would be double taxation on the same sum of money as far as a patronage dividend is concerned? The farmer can get credit or the cooperator can get credit for that in his income-tax return?

Mr. CARROLL. That is exactly so.

Mr. MARSHALL. It does not force upon a cooperator a principle of double taxation in any way whatsoever. It means simply that the cooperative organization will need to put into effect a separate bookkeeping system which in some instances may be of value to the cooperator in that he can then get a statement from them as to how much taxes have been withheld from his dividend?

Mr. CARROLL. That is my understanding. May I say to the gentleman from Minnesota there was extended discussion and we had the advice of our experts, for it is a very complex subject, that in the consumer co-ops the saving that a consumer receives is not taxable income, and, therefore, there is no dividend from which to withhold. Why? Because his saving is not taxable as income.

Now, when the patronage dividend is received resulting from trade or business activity then, of course, it is taxable as income. If it is taxable income the majority of the committee felt there ought to be a withholding of 10 percent of patronage dividends. But I assure the gentleman from Minnesota if he had known of the pressures against the co-ops to place them in the same tax category as corporations, he would have been much alarmed. So I think we made a substantial contribution in that respect.

Mr. MARSHALL. May I say to the gentleman from Colorado that I am aware of those pressures. I am also aware of the great work the gentleman from Colorado has done in behalf of the co-ops and I would like to compliment him for that work.

Mr. CARROLL. I thank the gentleman from Minnesota. I was merely one of those who made a contribution in the committee.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARROLL. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. YATES. I should like to ask the gentleman from Colorado whether this new tax bill contains a provision which has appeared in previous tax bills, namely, one that would permit corporations a period of grace within which time to dissolve into partnerships or into proprietorships in view of the fact that they are incurring new obligations under the tax law? I understand there is precedent for such a provision in previous tax bills.

Mr. CARROLL. I regret that I cannot answer that question for the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, there is nothing in this bill with respect to that.

Mr. YATES. In other words, then, the same provision for the dissolution of corporations as applies under the present bill will pertain to the new tax law as well.

Mr. MILLS. The existing law will prevail.

Mr. CARROLL. After months of continuous effort, months of consideration by 15 Democrats and 10 Republicans, we reported out, by a vote of 17 to 8 a fair bill; not the best bill, perhaps, but as some of the experts who have studied this for many years have said this is one of the most equitable tax bills ever to come out of the Committee on Ways and Means since the end of the war.

It might be well to keep in mind what brought about the consideration of this bill. Why was it necessary to consider an excise tax reduction bill? Because of a demand from the people. I cannot agree with my friend from Nebraska when he says that the Republicans gave fair treatment to excise tax reduction in the Eightieth Congress. I remember standing in the well of this House in the Eightieth Congress, when we had a seven or eight billion dollar surplus and asking why excise taxes could not be reduced. That is the time Congress should have removed all wartime excise taxes. $2,500,000,000 worth of excise taxes. should have been taken off at that time. Instead of that, the Enghtieth Congress gave the relief principally to the upper brackets on personal income taxes and, of course, had we not taken this positive action this time, as the majority leader has said, we would have cemented these excise taxes into our statutes, if not permanently at least for years. Why? Because the excise tax is spread largely among the little people, and it is only when there is a strong sentiment among the people that the Congress acts. That revolution is growing. That is why you will fine here basically, when the Republicans cannot split this bill, they dare not vote against the bill.

That is the real political reason why they are going to support this bill. Politically they are afraid not to support it.

Mr. REES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARROLL. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. REES. The gentleman just stated that there would be a big revolution if we do not repeal the excise taxes.

Mr. CARROLL. The gentleman misunderstands me. Please do not put words in my mouth. I said that the revolution, the hue and cry, came from the people asking for relief.

Mr. REES. I agree with the gentleman, but your relief is just part way, is it not?

Mr. CARROLL. Certainly, it is part way.

Mr. REES. So we still do have the cementing of the rest of it?

Mr. CARROLL. I am hopeful that we do not. Actually we should have gone ahead and taken off two and four-tenths billion, but since we are running a deficit that is impossible. The gentleman from California [Mr. WHITE] explained the situation extremely well. The talk about a $10,000,000,000 deficit is pure tommy-rot. There is no such deficit as that. As the gentleman from California said, all you have to do is look at the record; look at the record and see how the Democrats and Republicans have voted and then you will see who was responsible for the deficit.

Mr. REES. But you have not made any move to repeal the act that reduced taxes on individuals.

Mr. CARROLL. I want to say to the gentleman from Kansas that I have heard that question asked repeatedly in debate: Why does not the Democratic Party increase income taxes? Why do they not repeal what the Eightieth Congress has done? I recommend to the Members of this body the report of the Economic Advisers to the President, transmitted to the Congress in January 1950, and specifically contained therein on page 106, the Council of Economic Advisers stated:

> We also feel that it was unfortunate that tax rates were reduced in 1948, and that if the higher rates had remained in effect they would not be such a burden that business recovery would not continue. But the tax rates were reduced, countless personal and business relationships are now based upon the lower rates, and, if taxes were now raised sufficiently to attain an immediate budget balance, the process itself would involve disturbing maladjustments. The real question is this: To what extent may there be some tax increases at this stage of business recovery without impeding business progress enough to defeat the purpose of the tax program?

In my opinion that is a complete answer to those who repeatedly put the question of why you do not change what we have done. A most serious mistake was made in the Eightieth Congress. As is the usual custom with the Republican leadership, they gave great relief to the upper brackets of the taxpayers of this Nation. I voted against it then, and voted to sustain the President's veto.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARROLL. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I am sure the gentleman from Kansas is as much interested in the reduction of these excise taxes as anybody else, and favors it.

Mr. REES. I do.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I am certain the gentleman will also be happy to know that the committee did not recommend any reduction whatsoever in excise taxes on liquor, beer, or wine.

Mr. CARROLL. Does the gentleman from Kansas want to comment on that situation?

Mr. REES. Yes. I appreciate the gentleman's statement, and I want to thank the committee for retaining the taxes on liquor as much as it has. I think those taxes could be increased without any injury. But while the gentleman is on this subject matter, may I ask him, because he is so familiar with this legislation, about page 18, where you have taxes on cabarets, roof gardens, and so forth. I notice that you have dance halls under section (b) rather than under the section relating to cabarets. I want to be sure that you do not liberalize that provision.

Mr. CARROLL. I assure the gentleman from Kansas that there is nothing in this cabaret-tax provision that will substantially interfere with any operation in the State of Kansas.

Mr. REES. No; I mean throughout the country.

Mr. CARROLL. Yes; throughout the country. The reduction in the cabaret tax was approved by the committee for the reason that there was growing unemployment in the entertainment industry. Basically, when we started the consideration of this bill, we really began to consider what we call hardship-industry problems.

Mr. REES. That was a hardship industry?

Mr. CARROLL. That was one of the hardship industries. That may not coincide with the philosophy of the gentleman from Kansas, but in New York and Chicago and some of the other big cities there was growing unemployment in this industry. They thought that this tax was contributing to this situation. We felt that in all equity, because we gave the same consideration to furs, jewelry, and many of the other hardship industries, we should give consideration to this industry.

Mr. EBERHARTER. If the gentleman from Kansas will refer to page 8 of the report, the last paragraph on that page, he will find an explanation of the matter about which he has asked three or four members of the committee. As I recall, some of the courts have construed cases so that if a dance hall sells coca-cola or peanuts and candy, those are considered to be refreshments, and, therefore, the dance hall could be considered a cabaret. We do not want those constructions to stand.

Mr. CARROLL. All in all, Mr. Chairman, I have tried to point out that there are some inequities in this bill. As I have indicated to you, this is the result of democratic treatment. It is a compromise. It is unfortunate that we could not have had a better bill, but I think this is the best bill we could have under the circumstances. If you had been sitting with the members of the committee as long as I have, you would know that it is extremely fortunate that we have any bill at all. I trust that every reasonable person, Democrat or Republican, will support this bill, for I believe the people, the consumer, the wage earner, and the small-business man, are entitled to the relief offered by the passage of this bill.

Not long ago I had occasion to inform the people of Colorado of my stand on this important legislation in a public statement which I think is worthy of restatement here. I stated to the people whom I represent:

This bill will remove or reduce approximately $1,000,000,000 in excise taxes on a number of articles and services. There is no doubt that these excise taxes have been depressing certain lines of business, and their removal or reduction should provide a real stimulus for manufacturers and retailers throughout the Nation. Increased sales should help check the creeping unemployment which has been menacing some of these industries.

The bill is good news for the consumer because the industries involved have promised to pass the tax savings on to the consumer, rather than to reflect them in higher profits. The consumer will have more money for other items, and business generally will be aided.

To balance the revenue loss resulting from the reduction of excise taxes, the bill provides for the raising of about $1,000,000,000 through the closing of a number of tax loopholes and through a 3-percent increase on the tax paid by large corporations. In addition, a new formula speeding up the payment of taxes by corporations will bring revenue in to the Treasury earlier, although it will not increase the tax liability of corporations in the slightest.

The new corporation tax schedule will decrease the taxes of corporations showing profits ranging between $5,000 and $166,666 a year. Taxes of corporations earning more than $166,666 a year in profits will be increased approximately 3 percent, and taxes of the smallest corporations will be unchanged.

Of the 380,000 corporations in the Nation, only 20,000 earn more than $166,666 annually. As a result, we are giving tax relief to considerably more corporations than the number which will pay a higher tax. The bill will decrease the taxes of corporations earning between $5,000 and $166,666 a year by an estimated $275,000,000 a year. This tax relief should enable these businesses to use more money for business expansion.

The tax increase will not be unduly burdensome upon the larger corporations. A corporation earning $500,000 profits a year pay only $10,000 in additional taxes; a corporation making $1,000,000 profits will pay an increase of $25,000, and a corporation netting $10,000,000 annually will pay $295,000 in increased taxes.

Corporation profits are running at one of the highest rates in history. During the first quarter of 1950, corporate profits after taxes were at an annual rate of $18,300,000,000.

Many large corporations actually will make more through increased business resulting from reduction of excise taxes than will stand to lose through the increase in the corporation tax.

Another provision in the bill, allowing businesses to carry losses forward for 5 instead of 2 years, is designed especially to help new and small businesses.

"The provision in the bill which will speed up payment of corporation taxes will aid in equalizing the tax treatment of corporations and other individuals and businesses," CARROLL said. Farmers, wage earners, and unincorporated businessmen now pay taxes substantially on a pay-as-you-go basis.

The small grocer, for example, has to estimate his income at the beginning of the year and make payments during the year. The chain grocery which is in direct competition with him, however, makes no tax payments at all during the year in which the liability occurs, and has the entire succeeding year to complete tax payments.

The bill requires the corporation to pay its taxes for 1 year during the first 6 months of the next year. The change-over will be accomplished gradually over a period of 5 years. During this period, the Government will gain more than $4,000,000,000 in additional money, although the tax liability of corporations will not be increased.

Only partisan politics or subserviency to the big corporate interests of this Nation can prevent the passage of this bill in its present form.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VORYS].

VOTE ON EXTENSION OF DRAFT ACT

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Chairman, I was unavoidably detained from the Chamber yesterday when the vote was taken on the extension of the Draft Act. Had I been present, I would have voted for it.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. YOUNG].

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, yesterday when the vote was taken on the extension of the Draft Act I was unavoidably absent. Had I been present, I would have voted for it.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Chairman, when the vote was taken yesterday on the extension of the Draft Act, I was unavoidably absent. Had I been present, I would have voted for the extension of the act.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Chairman, I am a newcomer on the Committee on Ways and Means, having served on this committee only since last year. I yield my deference and my devotion to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON], the great chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means. He is indeed a distinguished committee chairman. It is a rich experience for any Member to serve under his leadership on the Committee on Ways and Means. I feel I would be negligent and remiss in a duty and obligation which I owe if I did not in his presence say that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] is one of the truly great Americans of this generation.

Mr. Chairman, to the question, "Should higher corporation taxes make up for excise cuts," my answer is "Yes." Higher corporate taxes should offset the revenue lost from excise-tax reduction. The Committee on Ways and Means carefully analyzed all wartime excise taxes added by the Revenue Acts of 1941, 1942, and 1943, and concluded that retail excise taxes on women's handbags, luggage, cosmetics, baby oil, baby powder, jewelry, furs, cook stoves, and heaters, photographic apparatus, matches, automobile tires and tubes, parts and accessories, movie tickets, telephone and telegraph messages, and passenger fares and freight bills should be cut by more than a billion dollars a year.

The committee worked hard to obtain offsetting revenue by closing loopholes, but after several months study was able to produce only approximately half a billion dollars from this source. The question was whether to impose additional taxes to make up the remaining half billion dollars, or to send to the President a bill that would further add to the prospective deficit of $3,500,000,000. The President's position has been crystal clear and is sound. In his tax message to Congress in January 1950 he said, "I wish to make it very clear that I could not approve excise-tax reductions unless they are accompanied by a provision for replacement of the revenue loss because I am convinced that sound fiscal policy will not permit a weakening of our tax system at this time."

The unwillingness of some Republicans in Congress to support this very slight adjustment in the corporate income tax is really a test of the sincerity of Republican support for excise-tax reduction. For 2 years they were in control of the Eightieth Congress. Before the election of 1946 Republican members of the Committee on Ways and Means unanimously promised excise tax relief if a Republican Congress were elected. But what did they do? Their first act was to make permanent the temporary wartime excise taxes, despite the fact President Truman requested extension of these taxes for 1 year only. The next act was to pass a bill reducing income taxes and estate and gift taxes for the benefit of wealthy individuals and big business. Although Democratic members of the Committee on Ways and Means unanimously urged that excise tax reductions be included in their bill, Republican members answered, "That can wait."

I say flatly that no one believing in sound fiscal policy can support an excise tax cut bill that will add to the deficit at this time. The corporate income tax is the proper source for necessary offsetting revenue.

According to the Federal Reserve Bulletin for June, corporation profits, after taxes, are for the first quarter of 1950 at an annual rate of $18,300,000,000, or nearly double profits during the peak war years. You will recall that General Motors' profits for 1949 exceeded $600,000,000 and profits for this year are running even higher.

Furthermore, this is a tax reduction bill for approximately 300,000 small corporations, while only approximately 20,000 most profitable corporations with earnings above $167,000 a year will pay higher taxes than under existing law. The facts clearly show that business is good, and getting better. The larger corporations can absorb this slight tax increase without seriously affecting dividends to stockholders and certainly without any excuse for trying to pass on the tax to customers.

During the 1948 Presidential campaign we heard a lot about unity from the Republican candidates. The hostility of the Republican Members of Congress toward slight corporate-tax increase once again demonstrates the unity of the Republican Party with big business and the hypocrisy of their 1946 campaign promises of excise-tax reduction. Those who are honestly and sincerely interested in excise-tax reduction must realize that the only way this can be accomplished at the present time is through a small increase in the corporate-tax rate.

I read and embody as a part of my remarks editorial comment from the Financial World, June 28 issue. The editorial of this magazine of big business is as follows:

The proposal by the House Ways and Means Committee that the tax rate on large corporations be lifted from the present 38- to the 41-percent level has had little market effect. Prospects for its eventual enactment still are uncertain, of course, and at least a partially offsetting factor would be reductions on a long list of excises. But even more important is the fact that with earnings running at such high current levels the additional levy would be easily absorbed.

An increase of three percentage points would apparently mean about 50 cents per share for Bethlehem Steel, which reported earnings of $9.68 per share of common stock last year. It would mean about 20 cents a share for du Pont, which last year earned $4.52 a share, 10 cents a share for Standard Oil of New Jersey, and 35 cents a share for United States Steel.

If, as the opposition claims, some of this tax will be passed on to the consumer, it is a fact that the mother who buys baby oil and baby powder will not pay it. And if the man who buys a Cadillac pays $10 more for his car, we should not lose any sleep.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG. I yield.

Mr. SABATH. The figures that the gentleman cites of the great profits made by the corporations show they were made under a Democratic administration, which the Republicans claim is opposed to private business and private industry. So their charges that are being made from time to time are incorrect and not based on facts. As you stated, business is prospering, and more money is being made by private industry than ever before in the history of our country. I want to congratulate the gentleman upon bringing these facts to the attention of the House and the country.

Mr. YOUNG. That is true, as the gentleman says. Those of us, like the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], who are honestly and sincerely interested in excise-tax reduction, do realize that the only way this can be accomplished at the present time is through a small increase in the corporate tax rate against corporations with annual earnings in excess of $167,000.

General Motors stock, quoted on the New York Stock Exchange, has risen so high that the directors are proposing to split the stock 2 to 1 to present holders. It has skyrocketed from its low of a few dollars a share in 1932 and 1933 before the recovery program of President Roosevelt, to a high of around $100 per share.

Talk about our country going to rack and ruin because of the revenue policies of this administration. Last year General Motors Corp. net profits exceeded $600,000,000 and for the first quarter of 1950 the net profits of this corporation exceeded $200,000,000 or at a rate of $800,000,000 for the current year.

General Motors, in April 1950, voted bonus awards of $6,000,000 dollars, plus 24,000 shares of stock to officers and directors. This was for services for 1949. Charles E. Wilson, president, received $586,000 salary and bonus awards. Three executive vice presidents received salary and bonus awards totalling $1,503,000.

In addition to the salaries and bonuses, General Motors directors voted Charles E. Wilson and the three executive vice presidents $25,000 each per year retirement pensions effective when they decide to retire.

If American industry—big business—can afford to pay huge pensions to retired officials who do not need them is it state socialism when the people's representatives impose a tax on industry and on employees to pay retirement pensions, or social-security payments, to those who do need them?

And furthermore, are the representatives of the people to be condemned in providing a slightly higher income tax on the huge earnings of this company and other prosperous corporations of America?

Taxes should be levied according to ability to pay and this Revenue Act of 1950, which we majority members of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives have drafted and do recommend, recognizes and adheres to this sound principle.

To those who claim that this is a phony tax-reduction bill and who contend that increasing taxes somewhat against corporations with large earnings will simply cause them to increase prices of their products, I simply say, do not be misled by such nonsense.

We provide real tax relief for the people of our country. Who is there who will seriously assert that saving our citizens $1,000,000,000 plus in taxes they pay out on handbags, baby oil, and so forth, and for recreation is not a real and substantial saving. The Financial World states editorially that corporate earnings are running at such high current levels the additional levy of 3 percent will be easily absorbed.

It is the policy of this administration to help small business and this revenue bill gives a total reduction of $275,000,000 per year to firms earning from $5,000 to $167,000 per year.

There are approximately 300,000 corporations in our country with earnings of from $5,000 to $167,000 per year who will receive these benefits. It is true that approximately 20,000 corporations with earnings from $167,000 per year to $800,000,000 per year will pay $700,000,000 more in taxes next year on those earnings than under the present law.

Mr. Chairman, I repudiate any claim that budget-wise housewives are being made victims of a congressional shell game and that the tax bill gives away something at one end and takes it back at the other end and the consumer is none the better off. Excise taxes or sales taxes are the reverse of income taxes. They bear heaviest upon persons least able to pay. They burden most those who have least.

Women have good reason to feel aggravated over the taxes levied on cosmetics and handbags. Businessmen have reason to complain about taxes on telegraph messages, railway travel, and telephone calls. Parents and children should surely not be compelled to pay any tax whatever when they attend school plays, basketball games, county fairs and similar entertainments.

Excise taxes, or sales taxes, fall hardest upon the poor. They increase in their burden with the number of children in the family. They reduce the family purchasing power. Imposing a tax burden at the same rate on poor and rich alike is unjust. Poor people spend a major portion of their income on the necessities of life. The more children there are in a family the more likely it is that the total income will go for bare necessities. Persons on relief, the unemployed, young veterans, newly married or about to be married, retired employees, all are especially burdened by a sales, or excise tax. Instead of exempting amounts considered necessary for subsistence, as the income tax does, the retail-sales tax exempts amounts saved and taxes what is spent for subsistence. It is in effect a tax with no exemptions, except for the rich who are exempt on what they save.

The movies, automobiles, electricity, radios, electric-light bulbs, clocks, telegrams, long-distance telephone calls, and so forth, have long since passed out of the luxury class. Whatever has become standard and of universal consumption by the bulk of the population is no longer a luxury.

I denounce the war-imposed 20-percent tax on movie admissions. This tax bears heavily on amusement and recreation of our people. It is responsible for a decline in attendance of movies and for huge losses in a heretofore profitable business. It is responsible for the dismissal of employees in moving-picture theaters.

This particular tax is not only restrictive of business, but it is an indefensible tax on the poor man's entertainment and the pleasure of children. Attending movies is the principal form of relaxation and recreation in many of our communities, I cannot believe the financial solvency of the United States will be impaired by cutting this 20-percent tax paid on admissions to 10 percent. We provide for the elimination of the 20-percent tax on baby oil and baby powder. Is having a baby a luxury?

We are determined to put an end to wartime luxury taxes, so-called, which the last Congress extended and made permanent. As we reduce taxes, we are also equally determined to cut Government spending to the bone. You and I believe in economy in Government. This like economy in an individual means going without some of the things we would like to have but do not absolutely need.

During World War II excise taxes were imposed upon 40 products. They were imposed upon transportation to bring in revenue and to discourage travel, upon communications to discourage long distance telephoning and sending of telegrams which might delay necessary wartime communications. In addition, excise taxes were imposed upon baby oil, powder, movie admission tickets, leather goods, photographic supplies, furs, jewelry, and so forth. These taxes, now that the war is over, are unfair and discriminatory. They are restrictive of business and have been the cause of considerable unemployment, notably in the fur and motion-picture industries.

There are those who defend the 20-percent tax on jewelry, stating that jewelry is clearly a luxury. Examination of this tax shows in a large measure that tax became one on wedding gifts, graduation presents, and so forth. Are clocks jewelry? They are taxed as such yet are they not in fact in the category of household furniture? If oriental rugs and expensive bric-a-brac are tax-free, how can one justify singling out clocks for taxation? To apply the tax, as the Bureau of Internal Revenue does, to ornamental buttons on women's dresses has gone far beyond the intent of Congress. Excise taxes burden most those who have least.

In 1947 President Truman recommended to the Congress that it continue wartime excise taxes for the period of 1 year only. The Republican Eightieth Congress denied his request. Instead it voted up legislation continuing permanently the wartime excise taxes which have proved so oppressive to our people. My predecessor as Ohio Congressman-at-large, who incidentally is a candidate seeking to defeat me this November, voted in favor of making these obnoxious and atrocious Federal wartime excise taxes permanent. I condemn him for voting for the permanent extension of these indefensible taxes on the necessities of life.

These unrealistic levies slow down trade. Shrinking demand from retail outlets, reaching back to the factories, curtails production and causes unemployment that is wholly unnecessary.

As an example, let us look at the fur and leather goods industries because of seasonal factors affecting them, and because their products are an important item in the average woman's budget.

At the present time there is a 20-percent wartime excise tax on fur and on leather-luggage products.

Summer is usually the busy season in the fur industry, and if any relief is to be provided, it should be done without further delay.

In the summer of 1949, one-third of the workers in the fur industries were unemployed, one-third were working part-time and only one-third had steady jobs.

The unfair competition in the present tax law is dramatically revealed by the fact that a $300 cloth coat with fur trimming is tax-free, but a fur coat costing $100 has $20 added to the price to pay for the Federal tax.

In the northern half of the United States where extra warm coats are a necessity, an office girl or mill worker, in order to buy a relatively cheap fur coat costing, say two to three hundred dollars would have to work an extra week or so just to pay the tax. This is a mighty high tariff to impose on our own working people.

The luggage industry is also stricken by the excise taxes which discourage buying. Winter and summer, the American women must have a durable leather handbag. In it she carries and protects a wonderful assortment of articles necessary to her morale, from assorted keys to beauty aids to charge cards and checkbooks. Without it an American woman would be lost, and so would retail business which puts so much merchandise into that handbag and takes so much money out of it.

But when it comes to classifying as luxuries oils, creams, and powders that are necessary for a baby's health and comfort with a 20-percent tax added, we cannot find words to express our exasperation. The taxation without representation against which our forefathers rebelled was nothing compared with this all-time low.

The Revenue Act of 1950 carries forward the sound principle that taxes should be levied according to ability to pay. Much of the billion dollars in revenue per year which is removed by our repeal of the most discriminatory and indefensible excise taxes and cutting in half of others will be made up by accelerated business. Tax reduction of sales taxes stimulates business activities. It enables manufacturers, merchants, and operators of service establishments to offer the public lower prices. This encourages people to buy. The volume of economic activity rises and the financial stability of our Government will not be threatened, even to the slightest extent.

My view is that this revenue bill, eliminating altogether the most obnoxious and discriminatory wartime excise taxes and cutting in half others, must be enacted into law so that the housewife can buy, so her husband may have satisfactory employment, so business can prosper, so the United States, which means all of us, can enjoy the incentives which make for general progress.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG. I yield.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman from Ohio has worked very diligently and helpfully in connection with the preparation of this bill. His services on the committee are greatly appreciated by the members of the committee.

Mr. YOUNG. I thank the chairman and my colleagues on the committee. I want to say again that it is a rich experience in the science of Government and public service to have an opportunity to serve on the Committee on Ways and Means under such a distinguished chairman as the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON].

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG. I yield.

Mr. COOPER. I simply want to concur in the statement made by our distinguished chairman, and to say that because of the very active interest always taken in the welfare of his constituents by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio, he has made an outstanding contribution to the consideration and preparation of this bill.

His services on the committee have been most valuable to the efforts exerted by those of us who have had several years of experience there; and we recognize the gentleman as one of the most valuable members that we have on the committee.

Mr. YOUNG. From the bottom of my heart I thank the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee, the ranking majority member of the Committee on Ways and Means, for his statement.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. I concur in everything that the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER] has said about my friend from Ohio [Mr. YOUNG]. As majority leader I can say that he has always been cooperative with the leadership of the House, with Speaker RAYBURN and myself. When he served here under the late President Franklin D. Roosevelt, he enjoyed the confidence of President Roosevelt and was always loyal to him. He is loyal to President Truman and enjoys the confidence and respect and friendship of President Truman.

I want the record to show that the gentleman from Ohio has made an enviable record as one of the outstanding Members of the House. Speaker RAYBURN and I hold him in the highest admiration for his service to his constituents and to the Nation.

Mr. YOUNG. I thank the majority leader. I thank our Speaker.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG. I yield.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, I take advantage of this opportunity to say a word or two. First, I want to agree in what the gentleman from Ohio said about our great chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means and what a wonderful experience it is to have served with him.

I agree with the sentiments expressed by the chairman of the committee, by the majority leader, and by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER] regarding the great service that has been rendered by the gentleman from Ohio.

I may add that several of the most important decisions made by the committee in executive session were made at his instigation and after the presentation of his point of view to the committee. For that he deserves the thanks of the country and of the Congress.

Mr. YOUNG. I thank my distinguished colleage from Pennsylvania, and now I retire in embarrassment.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. BARING].

Mr. BARING. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order and to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nevada?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARING. Mr. Chairman, without any preliminaries, I am going to say that something occurred on the floor of the House of Representatives yesterday which was nothing less than sabotage, and a "sneak attack" upon the West. I do not mind saying that my western blood is boiling. I am referring to the unfair tactics used yesterday when unanimous consent was requested for the suspension of the tariff on copper.

This out-and-out case of railroading occurred late yesterday afternoon, at approximately 10 minutes after 5 o'clock, following the weighty discussions which were held on the floor in regard to the extension of the draft. Following our vote on that momentous issue, as you know, the majority of the Members left the floor, with the general opinion that the legislative schedule for the day was more or less finished. Taking advantage of the fact that there were only 15 or 20 Members remaining on the floor, the "enemy" of the West, in the persons of those certain eastern Congressmen who represent the moneyed interests, the United States fabricators of copper products and the owners of foreign copper mines, got busy. In the few minutes which elapsed between the time that several of us left and returned to the floor, House Joint Resolution 494 had been rushed through by unanimous consent.

Mrs. BOSONE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARING. I yield to the gentlewoman from Utah.

Mrs. BOSONE. I want to say that I was on the floor of the House all yesterday afternoon. I believe that it was about a week ago that I was alerted that the tariff on copper would be discussed in a hearing on July 10, and I was to prepare for that hearing.

I know that the gentleman from Nevada was on the floor of the House yesterday afternoon, and I also know that other members of our committee, the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK], the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. PATTEN], my own colleague the gentleman from Utah [Mr. GRANGER], were on the floor of the House.

In the practice of law we call this type of thing sharp practice, and I think that was what was pulled on us yesterday, because I understand the bill was introduced yesterday and then after a big vote on a big important measure, when everyone understood it was the last business of the day, this measure was called up against, I would say, the western Congressmen. I do not think that type of thing is fair. I want to protest it at this time.

Mr. BARING. I thank the gentlewoman from Utah for her statement.

I believe the substitute measure was introduced yesterday. It never went through the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARING. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK. I know exactly how the gentleman feels. I have been getting some telegrams, one of which I would like to read:

Where were you yesterday when the House voted to extend the copper tariff suspension?

I want to make it clear for the RECORD that the gentleman from Nevada now addressing the House has been alerted weeks ago to this situation. He together with my colleagues from Utah, New Mexico, and other Western States requested the Ways and Means Committee for hearings on the Patterson bill and made arrangements with the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee last week to have a hearing on the Patterson bill on July 10. In fact, the committee had named July 3 and with kindly consideration changed to July 10. We had arranged among ourselves and we have asked witnesses to come here with the extra time to consider the bill. We thought that was the proper and regular way to do it. Now, if, after hearings, we are voted down, that is one thing, but if it goes out to the press of the country and to our constituents that this thing was done by unanimous consent while we sat here silent, it would be entirely unfair. We from the copper-producing States have been trying to protect our mining industry. The gentleman from Nevada has been constantly working in the interest of mining.

Mr. BARING. I want it made clear that the copper resolution which was passed by unanimous consent yesterday was a subterfuge measure, accomplished by a substitution of bills. This was not H. R. 7151. It was House Joint Resolution 494 introduced yesterday and put through last night.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARING. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. EBERHARTER. The gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK] mentioned certain arrangements with the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means for a hearing on the measure about which the gentleman is talking. On behalf of the Committee on Ways and Means I want to say that we have had no hearings on the measure that was passed. The measure that was passed had not been referred to the Committee on Ways and Means and no blame whatever should attach to that committee for whatever happened yesterday.

Mr. BARING. I believe that is correct. We are not trying to put the blame on the committee because I have been informed that that committee was not alerted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nevada has expired.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes. I was surprised at the copper resolution being passed by unanimous consent late yesterday afternoon after the House had concluded its discussion on the tax bill. I understand the resolution that passed was only introduced yesterday afternoon or some time yesterday. Our committee that is supposed to have jurisdiction over this matter was not consulted at all. It was the most extraordinary procedure I have ever known.

Our committee has had this matter under consideration for some time. It was brought to our attention through a lot of correspondence. We had set apart Monday, July 10, in order that we might have time to consider this. As chairman, I invited the interested parties on both sides to be present and notified them that we would have to expedite the matter in order to have time to give consideration to the bill after completion of our work on the pending tax bill; therefore, we set Monday, July the 10th, as the date for hearings on continuing the suspension of the import tax on copper. I have not been so surprised at anything that has taken place in this House since I have been chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. BARING. I thank the gentleman.

I think that my colleagues from the West will back me up when I say that yesterday's action was taken at a disadvantageous and unsuspecting moment, and also, that we are getting pretty tired of being treated as though the West were no part of the United States. We fully realize that it is difficult enough to get any western legislation passed, owing to the fact that we are greatly outnumbered in representation, but it seems extremely unjust when we are not even allowed the benefit of presenting our views. We were specifically granted a hearing on copper by Chairman DOUGHTON of the Ways and Means Committee, which hearing was scheduled for July 10, 1950. I have been in the process of preparing material to be presented at that time, so I believe that you can appreciate my feelings in being denied even the privilege of having such a hearing, as well as in view of the unfair maneuver which took place on the floor of the House.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARING. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. CURTIS. While my State is not a copper-producing State I am very much interested in all these problems of the West. I want taxes that do not discriminate against the West. As one member of the Committee on Ways and Means I regret that our committee did not have a chance to hear the gentleman and to pass on this thing in a way that everybody could be heard. I am just wondering, has the gentleman inquired of the majority leadership as to the procedure involved, and how this all happened?

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARING. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SABATH. Who introduced that resolution late last night?

Mr. BARING. I will stand corrected, but I believe the resolution was introduced by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. PATTERSON]. I believe he was the author of the bill.

Mr. SABATH. And it was not referred to any committee?

Mr. BARING. It was not referred to a committee.

Mr. SABATH. Well, we ought to recall the resolution.

Mr. BARING. I have introduced a rescinding resolution today, No. 673, and if it is possible, I wish the House would get behind me on this. I think the Administration as well as both sides of the House should get behind me on this. The procedure on yesterday's resolution was extremely irregular. The expiration of the copper law would have ended June 30, at which time the tax would automatically have been put back on and the tax imposition would have saved the mines of the West. We are already working under extremely difficult conditions. The mines are closing and filling with water. A sneak attack such as occurred yesterday was both untimely and entirely unjustified.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARING. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. NICHOLSON. I am quite sure that the gentleman from Connecticut did not introduce that resolution to hurt the State of Nevada.

Mr. BARING. I think that the gentleman is probably correct, but regardless of his intent, the effect upon the State of Navada would be disastrous. I would not say that the gentleman from Connecticut is trying to hurt anyone in particular, but I would say that he is attempting to favor and further either his own interests or the interests that he represents.

Mr. HORAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARING. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. HORAN. I think it might be pointed out that this action occurred right after a vote on the extension of the selective-service machinery.

Mr. BARING. That is correct.

Mr. HORAN. And, of course, if we are going to have action on the battlefields, we probably need copper, and we should have our own.

Mr. BARING. That is a fine point. In case of war, what will we do if our sea lanes are closed? We must develop our western mines. We are giving away too much money to other regions of the world and not enough to our own country, as far as the development of the copper industry is concerned.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, is there not some way by which the gentleman could revive this proposition? Could not the Senators from Nevada take care of it, or could we do something about it?

Mr. BARING. I believe the Senators from Nevada, Arizona, and all the Western States have been alerted. However, I think action by this body should take place to rescind that bill. The action in the House was entirely irregular.

I have repeatedly affirmed my determination to kill any legislation designed to suspend the excise tax on copper. The Patterson bill, H. R. 7151, which called for the continued suspension of the tax for a 2-year period, after its present expiration on June 30, 1950, has long been my target of attack. With the expiration of the present suspension, a tax would have been automatically reimposed whereby domestic copper producers could have been able to compete in the world market today. Yesterday's unexpected action—taken only 3 days before the present suspension would expire—when House Joint Resolution 494 was cleverly substituted for H. R. 7151, dealt what is almost a death blow to an already agonized mining industry, and marks the forerunner of what is yet to come.

It is time for the Federal Government to demonstrate concern over the dollar earnings of the American miners, rather than to place the welfare of foreign countries ahead of this country. There is also a question of national security involved, which should be of vital concern to every one of us today. The continued suspension of the copper excise tax, and the gradual moving of the copper industry to foreign countries, is going to place this Nation in serious jeopardy in case of another war. No program of stockpiling can replace a going and healthy domestic mining industry, in the event of war, and there is nothing more important to warfare than copper and other strategic metals.

Much United States capital has moved to Chile for the development of copper mines, because of low wages and other low costs in foreign countries. There is no reason why we should destroy an essential domestic industry, for the purpose of providing greater profits for those who migrate their investment funds.

The individuals who oppose restoration of the much-needed copper import duty, evade the truth when they state that copper shortages can only be made up from imports. Their opposition is based upon a false premise, or personal interests. The fact of the matter is that if the duty were restored, the small copper producers would be enabled to operate and produce the metal, because undoubtedly the metal would improve to the extent of the import duty. Furthermore, if the duty were restored, the copper production of this country would be substantially increased, which would enable us to compete with foreign production.

Yesterday's blow to the western mining industry has added insult to injury, and has alerted every Member of the western delegation to the necessity of fighting for our domestic interests. I have introduced today a House Resolution 673 to repeal H. J. Res. 494, the "sneak" bill which threatens to do so much harm to our western mining interests. It is only fair that the administration should get behind my resolution, in order that the other nine-tenths of the Members, who were absent, will have the chance to vote on the original measure.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nevada has expired.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, we have no further requests for time.

Mr. REED of New York. We have no further requests for time, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, under which this bill is being considered, at the conclusion of general debate the bill is considered as read and amendments may be offered only at the direction of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Are there any committee amendments?

Mr. COOPER. There are no committee amendments, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DELANEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8920) to reduce excise taxes, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 666, he reported the bill back to the House.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time and was read the third time.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that further consideration of the tax bill be postponed until tomorrow, to be the first order of business.

The SPEAKER. It will be the pending business.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have five legislative days in which to extend their remarks on the tax bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. Carrell, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3258) entitled "An act to continue a system of nurseries and nursery schools for the day care of school-age and under-school-age children in the District of Columbia;"

requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. HUNT, Mr. KEFAUVER, and Mrs. SMITH of Maine to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3571) entitled "An act to continue the authority of the Secretary of Commerce under the Merchant Ship Sales Act of 1946, and for other purposes;" requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. MAGNUSON, Mr. MCFARLAND, and Mr. WILLIAMS to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

SECRETARY OF COMMERCE

Mr. HART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 3571) to continue the authority of the Secretary of Commerce under the Merchant Ship Sales Act of 1946, and for other purposes, with a House amendment thereto, insist on the House amendment, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. HART, WEICHEL, and BONNER.

PUERTO RICO

Mr. DELANEY, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 678, Rept. No. 2365), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7940) to provide financial assistance for local educational agencies in areas affected by Federal activities, and for other purposes, and all points of order against said bill are hereby waived. That after general debate which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Education and Labor, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. It shall be in order to consider without the intervention of any point of order the substitute committee amendment recommended by the Committee on Education and Labor now in the bill, and such substitute for the purpose of amendment shall be considered under the 5-minute rule as an original bill. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and any Member may demand a separate vote in the House on any amendments adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the bill or committee substitute. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final pasage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

EDUCATION OR TRAINING OF VETERANS

Mr. RANKIN submitted a conference report and statement on the bill (S. 2596) relating to education or training of veterans under title II of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act (Public Law 346, 78th Cong., June 22, 1944).

CONTINUING DAY NURSERIES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. PRIEST (on behalf of Mr. McMILLAN of South Carolina) submitted a conference report and statement on the bill (S. 3258) to continue a system of nurseries and nursery schools for the day care of school-age and under-school-age children in the District of Columbia.

THE TWO-LEGGED GECKOS

Mr. O'SULLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'SULLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, in a recent issue of the Lincoln Star of Lincoln, Nebr., under the column Strange as It Seems, by Elsie Hix, was a picture of a small, slimy, four-footed, five-toed long-tailed lizard called a gecko.

Specifically excluding all past and present Members of the Congress from what I am now about to say, it is my considered thought that the significant thing about this whole thumbnail study-sketch in zoology is the information that the gecko has no bone between his ears—he is all meat there—and his head is translucent when held up to the light.

Somehow that rather graphic head description fits the bungly, fumbly, smeary, caputs of the extreme right-wingers, the Fascisties—and the extreme left-wingers, the Commies who are still, though somewhat in disguise, belly-crawling and slithering their nasty way about our land in this enlightened yet troubled year of 1950.

I want to say to the Congress again that it behooves us, I believe, to direct our fire at all of these two-legged geckos now, and also during the coming critical day ahead, and not draw a gun bead upon the Commies alone.

IMPORT TAXES ON COPPER

Mr. BARING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nevada?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARING. Mr. Speaker, two wrongs do not make a right. I am serving notice that on tomorrow I will ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution (H. Res. 673) rescinding the action of the House in passing House Joint Resolution 494.

My resolution is as follows:

House Resolution 673

Joint Resolution rescinding the action of the House in passing House Joint Resolution 494

Resolved, That the action of the House in passing on June 27, 1950, the joint resolution entitled "Joint Resolution to extend for 2 months the existing suspension of certain import taxes on copper" is hereby vacated and the Clerk of the House is hereby directed to request the Senate to return such joint resolution to the House.

(Mr. BARING asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks and include a copy of the resolution.)

STILL FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A still further message from the Senate by Mr. Carrell, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed, with an amendment in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H. J. Res. 492. Joint resolution making temporary appropriations for the fiscal year 1951, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6826) entitled "An act to provide for the common defense through the registration and classification of certain male persons, and for other purposes."

TEMPORARY APPROPRIATIONS, 1951

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 492) making temporary appropriations for the fiscal year 1951, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment as follows:

On page 2, after line 20 insert "Mutual defense assistance."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan (at the request of Mr. REED of New York) was given permission to extend his remarks.

Mr. SHELLEY (at the request of Mr. PRIEST) was given permission to extend his remarks.

Mr. THOMPSON (at the request of Mr. PRIEST) was given permission to extend his remarks and include an address.

Mr. BUCHANAN (at the request of Mr. EBERHARTER) was given permission to extend his remarks and include a radio address made by Mr. BUCHANAN on Friday, June 23, 1950.

Mr. LANE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in two instances, in one to include an address and in the other to include extraneous matter.

Mr. O'SULLIVAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.

Mr. COLE of New York (at the request of Mr. CURTIS) was given permission to extend his remarks.

Mr. CURTIS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include a magazine article, notwithstanding the fact that it is estimated by the Public Printer to cost $191.34.

Mr. McGRATH (at the request of Mr. CLEMENTE) was given permission to extend his remarks and include a speech by Hon. WALTER A. LYNCH.

Mr. TAURIELLO asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in two instances, in one to include a resolution and in the other an article by Hon. JOHN A. BLATNIK, of Minnesota.

Mr. BURNSIDE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. PATMAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.

Mr. JONAS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include a radio address by Col. Robert R. McCormick under date of May 25, 1950.

Mr. HORAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include a statement by the Spokane Chamber of Commerce to the President's Temporary Water Resources Policy Commission, notwithstanding the fact that the additional cost will amount to $225.50.

Mr. GWINN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks.

Mr. REES asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a resolution.

Mr. CANFIELD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in two instances, in each to include editorials from the Passaic (N. J.) Herald-News.

PERSONAL ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Speaker, on Monday, June 26, 1950, I was absent from the session due to a death in my immediate family, my sister's husband, the father of her children.

Had I been present during the vote upon the passage of H. R. 87 over the veto of the President, I would have voted "aye" for its passage.

On Tuesday, June 27, 1950, the day of the funeral indicated above, had I been present during the vote upon the question of the extension of the selective service law, I would have voted "aye," and for such extension of that law.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, I should like the RECORD to show that at the time of the roll call on the Draft Act yesterday I was before a governmental agency taking care of a request of a constituent. Had I been present I would have voted in the affirmative on the passage of the bill.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

(Mr. PATMAN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks and include certain excerpts.)

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION INVESTIGATION BY SELECT COMMITTEE ON SMALL BUSINESS—HEARINGS, THIRD DAY

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, this has been the third day of the hearing being conducted by the Select Committee on Small Business, of which I have the honor to be chairman, for the purpose, as I have stated previously, of ascertaining whether the Federal Trade Commission is performing adequately the function of protecting small business and free enterprise and of curbing monopoly. This marks the close of the first preliminary phase of the hearings.

I realize that the foreign news engages the full attention of the Members of this House, and properly so. Nevertheless, I regard these hearings, which go to the very heart of our American system of free enterprise, as being doubly important at a time when we are striving for the preservation of our way of life against the onslaught of completely contrary ideologies.

In this first preliminary phase of our hearings on the Federal Trade Commission we have had our witnesses members of the Small Business-Antimonopoly Conference. This conference of national organizations, representing small business, labor, farmers, and cooperatives, was called together by me just about a year ago. Members of the conference recommended that the Select Committee on Small Business conduct the present investigation of the Federal Trade Commission. You will be interested in a current list of the organizations represented on this conference, which I now set forth:

National Food Brokers Association.
Cooperative League of the United States.
National Farmers Union.
Congress of Industrial Organizations.
American Federation of Labor.
Credit Union National Association, Inc.
National Association of Retail Druggists.
National Council of Farmers Cooperatives.
National Federation of Independent Business, Inc.
National Rural Electric Co-op Association.
United States Wholesale Grocers' Association.
American Farm Bureau Federation.
International Association of Machinists.
National Congress of Petroleum Retailers.
National Grange.
Railway Labor Executives Association.
National Candy Wholesalers Association, Inc.
National Association of Independent Tire Dealers.

Our witnesses today were as follows, and, with the permission of the Members of the House, I am including the full text of their formal statements as part of my extended remarks:

First. Our first witness was Col. R. H. Rowe, vice president and secretary of the United States Wholesale Grocers' Association. He was introduced by Mr. Harold O. Smith, Jr., executive vice president of that association. I know Mr. Rowe and his association very well for they played a tremendous part in the enactment of the Robinson-Patman Act, which has been hailed as the bastion protection of small business, and which is largely under the enforcement of the Federal Trade Commission. It is interesting to note that Mr. Rowe does not ask for any changes in our antitrust laws, but only for better enforcement of those laws, including the Robinson-Patman Act.

Second. Our next witness was Mr. David R. Lehman, vice president, National Association of Independent Tire Dealers. Mr. Lehman devoted a good portion of his testimony to the thesis that the Federal Trade Commission should impose a quantity limit on discounts allowed in the sale of automobile tires. He also attacked preferential price treatment accorded to large purchasers using their own private brands on tires, instead of the manufacturer's brand. Mr. Lehman concluded by stating:

> The association wants to see the Federal Trade Commission strengthened and revitalized.

Third. Our third witness was Mr. John Casani, president of the National Candy Wholesalers Association, who was accompanied by Mr. C. M. McMillan, counsel for the association. Mr. Casani made pointed reference to the length of time required by the Federal Trade Commission to decide the Automatic Canteen Co. case, which finally came down a week or so ago. It took 7 years to obtain a decision in this case from the Federal Trade Commission, after formal complaint was filed. Meanwhile the respondent had been earning millions of dollars by reason of preferential prices accorded to it by the supplier. Said Mr. Casani to our committee:

> You can readily see that it is to the advantage of firms receiving such price discriminations to use all the strategy possible to prolong the discriminations. With such price advantages they can well afford to pay the cost of resisting and delaying enforcement action in various ways.

Mr. Casani also had many interesting comments on FTC trade practice rules.

Fourth. Our final witness at today's hearings was Mr. Rankin Peck, president of the National Congress of Petroleum Retailers. I shall not burden you by references to the contents of his statement, as I hope you will find time to look at the text, as made part of my extended remarks. I am sure that you will find his statement very enlightening, as well as the statements of the other three witnesses. Mr. Peck extends his observations to include both the Department of Justice and the Federal Trade Commission, in regard to the enforcement of the antitrust laws. Apparently he is far from satisfied with the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice in a number of particulars.

I wish to assure the Members of the House that our present investigation will be extended to include the Department of Justice, particularly in its relationship to the Federal Trade Commission and the enforcement of the antitrust laws generally.

The committee was presided over today by the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee, a member of the Committee on Small Business of the House, the Honorable JOE L. EVINS.

STATEMENT OF ANTITRUST LAW ENFORCEMENT BEFORE HOUSE SMALL BUSINESS COMMITTEE, JUNE 28, 1950, BY R. H. ROWE, VICE PRESIDENT AND SECRETARY, UNITED STATES WHOLESALE GROCERS' ASSOCIATION, INC.

My name is R. H. Rowe. I am vice president and secretary of the United States Wholesale Grocers' Association, a national organization of independent wholesale food and grocery distributors.

Our association stands for the rigid enforcement of all the antitrust laws and especially enforcement of the Robinson-Patman Act, which protects small business from price and other discriminations operating to their detriment but to the advantage of the chains and other big mass-buying organizations.

We are very sensitive to anything relating to the Robinson-Patman Act because our association made the original proposals which afterward became the Robinson-Patman bill and later the Robinson-Patman Act, credit for which was generously accorded by the chairman of this committee in his address in the House on June 19, 1950, the fourteenth anniversary of the signing of the Robinson-Patman Act by President Franklin D. Roosevelt.

The Robinson-Patman Act has been well enforced by the Commission so far as the complaints issued by it are concerned. The courts have sustained the Commission and its interpretation of the act in all major cases involving the act.

Enforcement of the act in this respect has been excellent, but it can and should be improved. There is too great a time lag between the issuance of a formal complaint and the conclusion and determination of the proceedings, and too great a time lag between the filing of a request to the Commission by individuals or concerns for a preliminary investigation to see if the act is being violated in particular instances and the completion of the investigation; in other words, the lag between the time of such request and the time the matter reaches the stage of decision or not, for formal complaint.

INSTANCE OF TOO GREAT DELAY

As an example of the delay between the issuance of a formal complaint and final action, there is the case of the Federal Trade Commission against the Independent Grocers Alliance and its directors and seller respondents charging the receipt or granting of illegal brokerage.

This complaint was issued on April 18, 1946. The trial examiner on March 25, 1948 made his recommendation, to the effect that a complaint should issue. Thus more than 4 years have passed since the complaint was issued and no decision has been reached to date. In fact the case has now been tentatively set for reargument on October 26, 1950.

If this concern and the other distributor respondents have been receiving illegal brokerage for the 10-year period 1937 to 1946, inclusive, at the rate of $500,000 annually as found by the trial examiner, and if such receipts have continued up to the present, then competitors of the respondents who have not had the benefit of such concessions have been operating at a terrific disadvantage.

During the war period of controlled prices, concessions to the big buyer were not much of a factor in the grocery trade, but now that we have entered a period of fierce competition, any illegal concessions may represent a lethal competitive advantage.

It is in such period as this that concessions to large buying power organizations can work the greatest injury to competition and coercive and evasive tactics are most likely to abound, which if not promptly stopped will have the capacity and likelihood of putting many concerns out of business or seriously curtailing their operations and employment ability.

Therefore we deem it highly important that the Federal Trade Commission now enter on an aggressive campaign to eliminate unfair trade practices in the grocery and other trades.

If the Commission is hampered by the time lags mentioned, because of lack of sufficient funds and personnel, this lack should be supplied by congressional action. Any law, especially an antitrust law, becomes a nullity if it is not enforced, and enforced promptly. Nonenforcement invites violations and the growth of violations.

VIOLATIONS OF CEASE-AND-DESIST ORDERS

Also after a cease-and-desist order has been issued the greatest possible degree of vigilance should be exercised by both the Commission and other enforcement agencies to see that the order is strictly obeyed.

In this connection it seems desirable that there should be a clearer definition of the duties and responsibilities in antitrust-law enforcement, as between the Federal Trade Commission and the Department of Justice, with the Commission given greater freedom of action in seeing that its cease-and-desist orders receive full compliance.

In enforcing the Robinson-Patman Act, the Commission issues a cease-and-desist order. If this order is being violated, the Commission must apply for a court order which, if granted, supersedes the Commission's order. If the court order is being violated, the Commission must apply to the court for the institution of contempt proceedings.

We agree with the Commission in its answer to the six questions propounded by this committee that this provision that an offender may violate the law, without punishment, not only once but twice appears to be excessive.

Really there must be a finding of violations three times before any penalties can be assessed.

The first is when the Commission finds law violations on which its cease-and-desist order is based. The second is when the Commission finds that its cease-and-desist order is being disobeyed. It must establish that fact to the satisfaction of the court to which it applies for a court order, affirming the Commission's order. Then if the court's order is disobeyed, the Commission must establish that fact in order to obtain contempt proceedings, for the purpose of having the offender fined.

We can't imagine any more cumbersome, long-drawn-out proceeding to finally get to the punishment of a law violator.

Surely there should be some tightening up here, some shortening of this absurb procedure.

Something must be done to assure more speedy punishment of violators of the Robinson-Patman Act than is now the case, and the path should be cleared for attaining that result.

There is, however, one trouble about amending the antitrust laws no matter how desirable that may be and that is: proponents are likely to be met with an amendment or amendments from the floor or otherwise that will prove very detrimental and they may find themselves in worse position than before they started anything.

MORE COOPERATION BETWEEN COMMISSION AND JUSTICE DEPARTMENT

The Commission in its answer to the propounded questions points out that the Federal Trade Commission Act directs the Commission to investigate the manner in which an antitrust decree has been or is being carried out and gives the Commission power to investigate and make recommendations for the readjustment of the business of any corporation alleged to be violating the antitrust acts.

The Commission says these provisions are inoperative because the Attorney General must first apply to the Commission for such action and that the Attorney General does not so apply. Some reference is made in the Commission's reply to liaison with the Department but we believe that there should be more real cooperation between the Department of Justice and the Federal Trade Commission in antitrust activities.

There was the most regrettable split between the Department and the Commission in the Indiana Standard Oil case. The Department declined to support the Commission's view in that case when it reached the Supreme Court, leaving to a Commission's attorney the work of presenting the brief and arguing the case before the Court.

Also, in 1947 the Commission issued a cease-and-desist order (F. T. C. Docket 4496) against the Tag Manufacturers Institute charging price fixing. This case was appealed to the first circuit court of appeals, where the Commission's order was set aside by a 2-to-1 decision of the judges. The Department of Justice declined to take the appeals court decision against the Commission's order up to the Supreme Court for review. Thus this case ended favorably to the institute and unfavorably to the Commission's findings and order.

We have the impression that the Department of Justice because it is the older organization and has more specific power than the Commission, regards the Commission as a sort of irritating rival in antitrust proceedings.

We do not charge that the Department of Justice is jealous of the activities of the Commission because we cannot prove it, but we do know that there is an area between the Department and the Commission where jealousy can operate and our belief is that it is operating. This situation is deplorable if it exists and if it does not exist care should be taken that it does not arise.

SUGGESTION WITH REFERENCE TO INFORMAL COMPLAINTS

With further reference to the informal complaints to the Commission from individuals which constitute the starting point for many of the Commission's proceedings, we would like to suggest that a unit or person or persons be designated within the Commission to confer with those who make such complaints on the progress of any investigations that are being made concerning the complaints.

A complaint to the Commission that a concern is using an unfair trade practice is received and acknowledged by the Commission, then it seems to fall into a vacuum—little that is specific can be learned as to how the investigation is progressing or what additional evidence, developments may show, is needed.

When an alleged unfair practice is reported to the Commission, rarely if ever can it be based on sufficient evidence at the time to sustain a formal complaint by the Commission. Sometimes it is only hearsay. Persons or concerns that are discriminated against rarely know in terms of fact, figures, amounts, and dates what the discriminations are. Only the Commission can find out with certainty.

It seems that there should be fuller and freer discussion of such complaints by those who make them and someone in the Commission. The complaints are already on a confidential basis and may therefore be considered freely by the confidants.

We get letters saying a certain manufacturer is using a certain trade practice. The writers of the letters want to know if the practice is against the Robinson-Patman Act. We don't know on the meager facts offered and the Commission doesn't know until it has ascertained all the facts. Hence it would be helpful if some designated person or persons in the Commission could discuss such letters and shed some light on the problems involved, based on the Commission's experience in similar or closely related matters.

We may say that those on the Commission staff whom we have approached along these lines have been most cordial and helpful as far as they could go but they seem to be under limitations that prevent them from going very far.

IN CONCLUSION

We would like to see more zeal and loyalty for the Robinson-Patman Act on the part of some elements in Congress, in the Justice Department and the Federal Trade Commission. These elements seem to have gone off the reservation to follow the will-o'-the-wisp of something termed "hard competition" as contrasted with so-called "soft competition" and the alleged conflicting theories and content of the Sherman Act and the Clayton Act as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act and the necessity of reconciling these conflicts and differences.

All this talk leaves us cold. Hard competition in this connection means to us uncontrolled price and other discriminations, and soft competition, only another name for soft, watered-down antitrust laws.

Reconciliation of the differing aspects of the Sherman Act and the Clayton Act into a nice logical entity would mean worse than nothing to us if the outcome left us defenseless against predatory discriminations. If hard competition means the elimination of this protection, we want none of it.

We, too, believe in competition. It is and always has been the life of trade, but competition carried to extremes and by the use of unfair and coercive methods can mean the death of the small trader. We think that the competitive race should begin on an even basis; that the small horses should not be compelled to go from the starting post while the big horses get the gun from advanced positions.

STATEMENT OF DAVID H. LEHMAN, FIRST VICE PRESIDENT, NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF INDEPENDENT TIRE DEALERS, INC., BEFORE THE SELECT COMMITTEE ON SMALL BUSINESS, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

The National Association of Independent Tire Dealers represents an important segment of American small business. All in all, there are about 25,000 independent tire dealers in this country. Some of these are very small, purchasing $10,000 to $12,000 of tires and tubes annually for resale. More than half the dealers buy less than $50,000 of tires a year, and more than 80 percent buy under $100,000. Very few buy as much as half a million a year. Whether we consider the volume of tire purchases, the volume of sales, capital invested, or employment, the independent tire dealer fits into the category of small business.

The tire dealer is subject to all the troubles which confront small business in this big business economy as well as some which are peculiar to the chaotic tire distribution field.

When the independent tire dealer buys his tires from the manufacturers, he usually buys from one of the big four, who together produce from two-thirds to three-quarters of the replacement tires this country uses. Small business faces big business in this transaction and too often to enumerate the small firm gets pushed around. Actions taken by the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice and by the Federal Trade Commission testify to this.

When the independent tire dealer sells his tires he is pestered no end by big business at the retail level—by the giant mail-order houses, retail chains, and the large, powerful oil companies. These are his chief competitors in the replacement tire market. Their size has earned them the trade name "mass merchandisers." The term is appropriate. Few in number—perhaps 30 or 40—the larger mass merchandisers buy up to $50,000,000 of tires and tubes a year. Their size is coupled with special buying price advantages which the manufacturers give them but do not give to independent dealers. This price discrimination was brought out by the Federal Trade Commission in its recent proceeding in support of a quantity limit rule. These price concessions granted by manufacturers to mass merchandisers enable the big fellows to sell at retail prices ruinous to small business.

The independent tire dealer figuratively finds himself in a jungle created by big business. He gets caught in the middle of price wars fought by mass merchandisers such as Sears and Ward; he must compete with mass merchandisers who wring special price concessions from manufacturers; he buys from big business whose record of concerted action more than once has attracted the attention of the law. In this business jungle, the independent has steadily lost ground for a quarter of a century. Big business, encouraged by price discrimination, is taking over this field from small business.

These preliminary comments are offered at this point to establish our reason for coming before this committee. If small business is to survive in the tire trade, a clean-up job is needed. Our argument is not against mere bigness in business. It is against the discrimination which characterizes the practices of big business in this field.

THE INDEPENDENT DEALER

We speak for the independent tire dealer. The independent dealer must be distinguished from many other tire merchants. He is independent in the sense that he operates with his own capital and buys directly and on his own from a supplier. He is not part of a chain organization. He runs his own business. Handling tires is usually the bulk of his business operations. Many of the independents do some wholesaling of tires; their wholesale customers are other small dealers and some service stations. However, most service stations get their tires through arrangements made by the oil company supplying the station. Therefore, these service stations are not independent dealers. The mail-order houses, like Sears and Montgomery Ward, and retail chains, like Western Auto, are, of course, not classed as independent tire dealers.

DECLINE OF THE DEALER

The independent tire dealer has lost ground in the replacement-tire business. In 1926, dealers sold 32,000,000 of the 39,000,000 tires sold in the replacement market. They had 80 percent of the business. In 1950, dealers will sell about 25,000,000 of the estimated 50,000,000 tires which will be sold this year. Independent dealers therefore will sell no more than 50 percent of the tires this year.

What are the reasons for the decline in the market share of the independent dealer? There are two main reasons:

1. Over the years there has been a normal diversification in retail business. Many retail outlets have added tires to their other normal lines of business. Dealers do not object to this diversification as long as it is not promoted by pressure and price discrimination. Dealers themselves have branched out into other lines of merchandise, largely to offset the decline in their tire business.

2. The second and most important cause of the decline of the independent dealer is price discrimination in favor of the big business mass merchandisers of tires. These big mass merchandisers buy their tires at prices ranging from 10 to 30 percent below the cost to the dealer. We believe this is sheer, unadorned discrimination. It gives the big mass merchandiser a competitive advantage over the independent dealer. This advantage largely explains the growth of big business in the tire retail field at the expense of the dealer.

THE BACKGROUND

I would like to review for this committee the main facts in the history of tire distribution. Such a review will bring out the growth of price discrimination in favor of the mass merchandiser and the decline of the independent dealer.

The growth of the automobile industry early in this century created the market for replacement tires. At the outset, this market was supplied almost entirely by independent tire dealers, selling the tires of several hundred manufacturers.

In 1926, 80 percent of the retail business was handled this way. The big break occurred in 1926. In that year, Sears, Roebuck and Co., entered into a contract with Goodyear for the production of Sears All State tire. In the trade, this is a private brand tire—one that does not bear the manufacturer's name; it carries only the name of the mass merchandiser. The details of this contract and the litter of unfair business practices which issued from it are a matter of public record. The published hearings of the Federal Trade Commission give the story.

In brief, this is what happened: Sears obtained its private brand tires at prices ranging from 30 to 50 percent below the prices of Goodyear tires charged by Goodyear to its own dealers. With this price advantage, Sears broke into the tire business in a big way. By 1930 it had taken over 10 percent of the entire retail tire business in this country. It did so by ruinous retail price cutting.

Victims of this price cutting were Goodyear's own dealers and dealers of other tire manufacturers. Some manufacturers opened up company stores to check the competitive onslaught of Sears. These stores, in combating Sears, undercut prices of their own dealers. Other chains and mail-order houses sought and obtained price concessions from manufacturers in order to keep up with Sears. Montgomery Ward brought out a new private-brand tire to compete with Sears—and to harass further the independent dealer. The floodgates were opened. Competition among the retail giants was intensified by the depression of the 1930's. The combination forced thousands of tire dealers to the wall.

The Sears-Goodyear contract was finally terminated as a result of FTC action against Goodyear. But in 7½ years—from 1926 to 1933—Sears did well. In this period their purchase-price advantage came to $41,000,000; that is, for the same number of tires bought by Sears and by independent dealers Sears paid $41,000,000 less than did dealers.

The growth of mail-order houses, chains, and company stores made life difficult enough for the independent tire dealer, and still does. But still another competitive element entered the picture in an important way during the 1930's—the oil companies. Oil companies handle tires in two main ways: (1) They merchandise private-brand tires, such as Standard's Atlas tire, manufactured by United States Rubber; and (2) they make arrangements with manufacturers for the distribution of manufacturer-brand tires, such as Goodyear, United States, Lee, and others.

When the oil companies handle private-brand tires, such as the Gulf and Atlas tires, the dealer is hurt in two ways: First, manufacturers sell these tires to the oil companies on what is termed a cost-plus basis at prices well below the figure the dealer must pay. We think there is price discrimination involved in these deals. Second, the oil companies usually attempt to tie up their stations, requiring them to handle the oil-company private-brand tire. Many of these stations would normally buy tires from independent tire dealers, many of whom act as wholesalers of manufacturer-brand tires. Oil-company pressure on their stations, therefore, directs wholesale business away from the independent.

As I said, oil companies also have arrangements to distribute manufacturer brands. These arrangements fall into two groups.

1. Oil companies may actually take the tire of a manufacturer and distribute these tires directly to their stations in the same way they distribute petroleum products. Small manufacturers—the few remaining—sometimes make these arrangements with oil companies rather than set up their own distribution systems. When this arrangement is free of price discrimination, pressure, and unfair competition, the dealers have no objection to it.

2. The second arrangement between tire manufacturers and oil companies is the over-ride system. The over-ride is represented as sales commission. It works this way: A tire manufacturer agrees to pay all over-ride—a percentage commission—to an oil company on all tires purchased by the company's service stations. Presumably, the oil company persuades its stations to buy the brand of tire in question. Notice this point: The oil company does not distribute the tires itself; it does not handle the tires; it does not even see them before they get to the service station. The service station may buy the tires direct from the manufacturer, or from a large independent dealer. In this case, the dealer performs the wholesaling and selling job, but the oil company gets the over-ride. Undoubtedly, it is a nice deal for the oil company—something for practically nothing.

The over-ride often involves pressure on service stations by oil companies. An independent dealer may have been selling as wholesaler to a service station for years only to lose the account when the station is forced by its supplier to shift to a different brand of tire.

With the oil companies getting into the tire field, more and more of the business has shifted away from the independent dealer. At the present time, oil company distribution is the largest single part of the mass merchandising operations in the replacement tire business.

The NAITD is convinced that the over-ride is a specious commission. It has encouraged undue pressure on small business by big business. We believe the practice should be thoroughly investigated. The Federal Trade Commission should be asked, perhaps by this committee, to make a searching examination of this big business practice.

EFFECTS ON INDEPENDENT DEALERS

The net effect of the price policies of manufacturers and the merchandising practices of the mass distributors of tires has been to squeeze the independent out of much of his market.

As I mentioned already, the independent dealers, as a small business group, sold 80 percent of the replacement tires in 1926. By 1930 this was down to 74 percent. Ten years later, in 1940, independent dealers had only 48 percent of the sales in the replacement market. The various mass merchandisers, largely because of their purchase price advantage, increased their share from 20 percent in 1926 to 52 percent in 1940.

The independent dealer, percentage-wise, made a come-back during the war. By 1946 he had recovered part of his market; he sold 52 percent of the replacement tires in that year.

The manufacturers have made much of the dealers' wartime percentage gain. The four percentage point rise from 1940 to 1946 was hailed as proof that dealers were not damaged by price differentials favoring mass merchandisers. A new trend was found by experts for the manufacturers. The market was said to be stabilized and dealers had nothing to fear in the future.

The association interprets the facts differently. The improvement in the dealer share of the market may be traced to temporary war and postwar conditions. During the war, tire servicing had top billing as a policy of Government. The independent dealer was better equipped than any other type of tire outlet to give the service necessary to keep America rolling. This service brought him customers for new tires—the few that were being sold in those days.

With the end of the war, tires became available in increased numbers and the tire dealer held his war-won share—through 1946. In 1947, he began to slip a little and we estimate his share now at no more than 50 percent. Mail-order houses have been most aggressive and are selling tires at prices the dealer cannot match and stay in business. The oil companies have pushed their tire merchandising campaigns more vigorously than ever before. They ought to—the over-ride brings them many unearned millions a year.

This competition has brought about the bankruptcy of many dealers, a sizeable number of whom were members of this association. They were forced out of small business by big business.

While I am on this point let me emphasize the effects this way:

In 1926, independent dealers sold some 32,000,000 tires—out of 39,000,000 total sales.

In 1950, we estimate dealers will sell 25,000,000 tires—out of more than 50,000,000 total sales.

In 24 years, actual dealer sales are down 7,000,000 tires; in the same period, mass merchandisers tire sales are up 17,000,000 tires.

CONCENTRATION IN MANUFACTURING

There is another angle to this matter. The cut-throat competition encouraged by bargain-rate sales to mass merchandisers, such as Sears, has hurt the small tire manufacturer as well as the independent dealer.

In 1926 there were 104 tire manufacturers. Today there are 17. The 87 vanished companies either closed up business, shifted out of tire production, or were swallowed up by the big ones. The depression, of course, accounted for some of these failures. But a major factor was private brand price competition. For example, Sears sold its All State tire at a price about 25 percent under the list price on manufacturer brand tires. Dealer sales dropped heavily. Dealers supplied by small manufacturers were hit harder than others, because their tires were not so widely advertised. Declining sales drove small manufacturers to the wall, as the Federal Trade Commission found (Goodyear case, p. 314).

Concentration in tire manufacturing means that the independent dealer more and more faces a big manufacturer when he buys tires. The dealers' alternative sources of supply are narrowed down to a few big manufacturers. And these few manufacturers behave alike—their prices, dealer discount schedules, and terms of business are just about identical in all respects. This is not entirely a coincidence, as the Department of Justice has found out.

The business policies—and first and foremost the discriminatory price policy over the last two decades in this industry have (a) fostered big business at the expense of small business in tire distribution; and (b) fostered concentration in manufacturing at the expense of scores of small manufacturing establishments. Both trends have hurt the independent tire dealer as a group.

EVIDENCE ON PRICE DISCRIMINATION

In this discussion, I have charged the industry with price discrimination favoring a relatively small number of big buyers. I cited the example of the old Sears contract with Goodyear. There were others in the pre-war period, too, as evidence before governmental agencies will show.

Now I would like to review the evidence on price discrimination since the war. In September 1949 the Federal Trade Commission issued notice that it would conduct a rule-making proceeding on a proposed quantity limit rule. With its notice, it published a table showing prices paid for tires by some 48,198 buyers for resale in 1947, and the amounts bought by these purchasers from manufacturers.

The figures show that 98 percent of the buyers purchased less than $100,000 annually. In fact, the average annual purchase of this group was only $9,200. Most of the independent tire dealers are in this under-$100,000 group. The FTC then distinguished another group who bought from $100,000 to $600,000 of tires in 1947. There were 888 of these buyers, most of whom are the larger independent tire dealers. Their average annual purchase was $175,000.

A third group, or annual purchase bracket, was shown as buying from $600,000 to $5,000,000 annually, with the average nearly $1,400,000. There were only 52 buyers in this bracket.

The fourth group bought from $5,000,000 to $25,000,000 in 1947. There were only nine buyers in this group with average purchases of $9,300,000 for the year. These are big league buyers. But in the first division of the big leagues are found two more buyers, buying from $25,000,000 to $50,000,000 of tires in 1947. The average annual volume in this fifth bracket was over $43,000,000 per buyer in 1947. The table reads as follows:

Annual volume bracket	Number of purchasers	Average annual purchases
1. Under $100,000	47,247	$9,221
2. $100,000 to $600,000	888	175,104
3. $600,000 to $5,000,000	52	1,361,961
4. $5,000,000 to $25,000,000	9	9,309,944
5. $25,000,000 to $50,000,000	2	43,104,000

Looking at the figures, we see on one end large numbers of small business buying small amounts of tires. On the other end, a few giant firms buying enormous amounts of tires.

I would now like to connect up these facts with the prices paid by these different groups of buyers.

The FTC investigation showed that small buyers paid the highest prices and that prices paid by purchasers from the manufacturers declined as annual purchases increased.

The FTC took the smallest buyers in the less than $100,000 group and computed an average buying price for them. This price was converted into an index of 100 in order to get the percentage price differentials between this group of small buyers and all other buyers.

The buyers in the $100,000–$600,000 group bought their tires at a price 18.5 percent below the smallest buyers. This differential represents the spread going to larger dealers who resell tires as wholesalers to many small dealers. Nearly half of the business of the big dealer is wholesale. This price differential, therefore, represents payment for a distribution function. The big price differential is between the mass merchandisers and the dealer. The two biggest buyers in 1947 ($43,000,000 average volume) paid 30.5 percent less for passenger tires and 38.5 percent less for truck tires than the small dealer. The tabulation is as follows:

Number of buyers	Average size of purchase	Purchase-price index
		Passenger	Truck
47,243	$9,221	100.0	100.0
		84.0	79.5
888	175,104	81.5	77.0
52	1,361,961	74.0	68.0
9	9,309,944	71.5	60.0
2	43,104,000	69.5	61.5

The purchase price index tells the story. Right here we find the real trouble spot in this industry. Here we see special advantage doled out to the big buyer as against the small buyers. The smallest dealer price index is 100, the largest buyers' index is 69.5. For truck tires the comparison is 100 and 61.5.

These comparisons are between the smallest buyers and the largest buyers. The spread narrows a little if the large independent dealers are compared with the big mass merchandisers. But even here, on the basis of the FTC figures, the largest mass merchandiser pays 15 percent less for his passenger tires and 20 percent less for his truck tires than do the largest independent dealers.

These figures come from the Federal Trade Commission. The association has been interested in this price discrimination for a long time and our estimates of the extent of price discrimination show a greater spread—possibly in the neighborhood of 25 to 30 percent below the big dealer.

These are the bare facts of the matter. Here is the evidence on price discrimination in favor of the mass merchandisers. This is the reason why small business has been squeezed out of a large part of the tire market. Big business has grown in this market not because of its efficiency in marketing tires. It has grown under the protective umbrella of price discrimination.

The rubber tire manufacturing companies do not deny the fact of price differentiation. They did not complain about the figures presented by the FTC on this point. We suspect the companies were relieved to see the Commission report so small a price differential. Certainly, if the Commission had over-stated the difference the companies would have screamed to high heaven. The mass merchandisers do not deny the fact of a price difference in their favor. In fact, one chain organization claimed it needed its price advantage, otherwise it would not be able to compete against the independent dealer selling manufacturer brands. This chain organization laid bare the whole secret—it had to undercut small business to get sales; to undercut small business, it had to get price concessions from the manufacturer. This sums up a good part of the 25-year story behind the growth of mass merchandisers in the tire distribution business.

DIFFERENCES IN PRICING TIRES

All this comes about because dealers and mass distributors do not buy their tires from manufacturers in the same way.

Dealer purchase prices are determined by taking a series of discounts from the list price put out by the manufacturers. From the list price is deducted a trade discount; from this figure then is deducted dealer discounts, promotional discounts, carload and cash discounts. Then an annual volume discount is applied, the rate of the discount or bonus increasing with the size of annual purchases. When all these discounts are put together we get a combined discount. The maximum dealer discount is reached at a $250,000 annual volume figure. Beyond this there are no deeper discounts. Under this system the combined discount becomes gradually larger as annual volume increases up to $250,000. Different discounts among dealers are related to function and volume.

The details of this discount and pricing system are complex—probably more complex than any other commodity price arrangement in the country.

In any case, a dealer's purchase price is set when his annual volume is known. All dealers in the same volume bracket are subject to the same discounts as shown in the published discount schedules.

Mass merchandisers do not buy in accordance with this complicated discount formula. Their deal is entirely different. The details are trade secrets, but we know in outline what is done.

In the first place, the price they pay is on a cost-plus basis. The plus—the profit—is understood in the trade to be 6 percent. This is calculated on the cost of manufacture.

The basis of the calculation, the cost of the tire against which the profit rate is computed, raises a problem. Usually the cost is a matter of bargaining by both sides. The buyers have their accountants review the cost estimates of the manufacturers. In the old days Sears slashed the Goodyear cost estimate to the bone, in fact it looked as though they cut away some of the bone. This means that the mass buyers have the opportunity of shifting certain legitimate costs away from them, which then must be allocated to the tires bought by dealers.

As you see, the mass merchandiser has a hand in determining the price he pays and in the rate of profit earned on these tires. The dealer has no such opportunity; his purchase price is on a "take it or leave it" basis.

It is readily evident that this contrast in pricing is open to abuse. The large buyer helps determine the price he pays. His interest is to get the lowest possible price. He pays a lower profit to the manufacturer than the manufacturer earns on his sales to his dealers. And the cost of manufacture is shaved down by the bargaining power of the mass distributor. He has a double advantage: his costs are less and he allows the manufacturer a lower profit.

This association would like to see an end to these differences in price determination. The difference is an obvious invitation to price discrimination. Tires do not have to be sold by manufacturers in different ways. All buyers could be on a list-less-discount basis, or all on a cost-plus-profit basis. The present arrangement makes possible the discriminatory prices favoring the few, large buyers. This leads toward monopoly. The Federal Trade Commission should investigate these cost-plus deals and get the whole thing aired.

RETAIL PRICE CUTTING

Let us turn now to the effects of this discrimination on the retail market and the small-business man.

The association has asked its members to send in the newspaper ads of their chain-store competitors advertising tire bargains. In many cases, the association could not compare the advertised retail price with its members' buying prices, simply because the ads were even too deceptive for this purpose. In many cases, however, chain-store prices could be compared with the dealer purchase price. Sometimes the chain retail prices was below the wholesale price paid by the small and medium-sized independent dealers.

The larger independent dealers could not sell their tires at the chain price and cover their normal operating costs on the business.

In short, to meet this competition entirely on a price basis would ruin every tire dealer in the business. You might wonder why there are any tire dealers left. There are several reasons.

Tire dealers have gone into many other lines of business to keep afloat. Furthermore, many people won't buy from Sears or Western Auto and other chain outfits, even at a lower price because they prefer the manufacturer brands to private brands. Often it is too inconvenient to go to the cut-rate chain outlet. More important, however, is the fact that the tire dealer gives more service and better service than do most chain outlets. A tire is an awkward commodity unmounted, and many chain stores sell tires but give little or no service with the sale. The tire dealer also has been aggressive and resourceful, these traits have helped keep him in the market.

These are some of the reasons why independent dealers have not vanished altogether. But these reasons are not sufficient to keep him from losing heavily to the mass merchandisers.

The mail-order houses and chain stores combine their low prices with misleading, and we believe, false advertising. In 1940 the FTC issued an order against false and misleading advertising on the part of mass merchandisers. The Association believes this order is being violated flagrantly. The association has asked the Commission to investigate and to crack down. As yet, nothing has been done. We think the Commission is unduly remiss on this matter. It has the authority; it has an order of 10 years' standing and it has the facts which we have placed before it. This sort of problem requires more than the issuance of an order; it requires active, vigorous enforcement all the time.

REASONS FOR PRICE DISCRIMINATION

The picture this industry presents hardly makes sense. The big manufacturers spend millions a year advertising their products. They build up big sales organizations blanketing the country to sell these advertised tires to dealers and through company stores. They maintain a big staff which goes around to the dealer organization, holding it together and, if possible, expanding it.

Yet at the same time, they produce private brand tires and sell them at special prices to mass merchandisers. This enables the mass merchandiser to undersell the manufacturers' dealers. These private brands compete with the manufacturers' own brands, they weaken the manufacturers' dealer organization, they undermine the manufacturers' expensive advertising program.

The spectacle of a company competing against itself is, to say the least, unusual, and not altogether sensible. Why do they do it? Tire dealers throughout the country have asked this question time and time again. A dealer will have a manufacturer's nationally advertised brand, to be sold at a list price established by the manufacturer. Across the street a chain-store outfit has its brand on a tire produced by the dealer's own manufacturer. The chain sells the tire for two, three, or four dollars below the manufacturer's brand.

It does so because the manufacturer sells the private-brand tire to the chain organization all the way from 15 to 30 percent below the price paid by the dealer. What does the manufacturer get out of this competition with himself?

The answer I think goes back to conditions in the industry during the 1920's. The tire industry was overbuilt; it is still overbuilt. It can produce more than 100,000,000 tires a year, but in its best year, the industry produces about eighty to eighty-five million tires.

Each manufacturer then has excess capacity. Each one could produce and sell more if he could get buyers.

This situation makes each manufacturer an easy victim for the big buyers. If a chain offered to buy five, ten, or twenty million dollars of tires a year, most manufacturers would jump at the deal. The chain, however, is in a position to play one manufacturer off against another. No one supplier wants to pass up the business because a competing supplier would take it. But to get the business, a supplier must agree to the big buyer's terms.

These terms include a cost-plus minimum profit, with the costs shaved down by the buyer accountants. The mass merchandiser accordingly gets his tires well below the price paid by the independent dealer.

When this practice began, Sears was the only big mass buyer. Goodyear agreed to its deal. Goodyear undoubtedly knew that its own dealers would be hurt and its sales of its own brand would drop. But it would more than make up this loss by its sale to Sears. Sears meanwhile cut into the sales of Firestone, Goodrich, and other brands of tires. Goodyear competed with itself, but through Sears, it was competing vigorously and successfully with the other manufacturers.

To this extent, the deal made sense to Goodyear, and of course to Sears. The consequences, however, did not make sense for the industry as a whole.

For one thing, other chains wanted some of the business Sears was getting. At the same time, other manufacturers wanted more sales. The connection was a natural. Manufacturers began selling private brands to the other mass merchandisers.

Once the suppliers were jockeyed into this cut-throat competition with their own dealers and with each other, there was no getting out. No one manufacturer could quit the game without losing heavily to those who remained in. The only way they themselves could halt this senseless arrangement would be through collusive action to present a united front against the hard-bargaining mass merchandisers. Although collusion is not unknown in the industry, it presents two dangers: (1) the Department of Justice might catch them, and (2) no manufacturer, with good reason, could trust his co-conspirators to honor the agreement.

The mass merchandisers, of course, profit from the game. In this kind of market situation (called bilateral oligopoly by the economists), the big buyer has the advantage over the seller, even when the seller is as big as any of the big four in this industry. The mass merchandiser can always threaten any supplier with a switch to a competing supplier. Since all suppliers have excess capacity and want more business, this is no empty threat.

There is no apparent way for the resulting price discrimination to be eliminated, short of comprehensive, legally enforcible ground rules to be established for this industry. This is not regimentation. We all abide by rules. The Federal Trade Commission could do just this sort of thing in various ways, for example, by issuing a so-called quantity limit rule under section 2 (a) of the Clayton Antitrust Act.

Big business in this instance has opposed such rules of sensible business conduct. The mass merchandisers opposition is understandable—they don't want to lose their present profitable advantages. The opposition from the big manufacturers, however, seems beyond the frontier of reason. The association is convinced that such a rule would bring order into this industry to the benefit of the manufacturers and the dealers. It would not injure the general public. Only the mass merchandisers stand to lose by any policy which outlawed the price discrimination which they wring from the manufacturers by their pecuniary power.

FALLACY OF BIG BUSINESS ARGUMENTS

I would now like to review some of the arguments raised by big business in defense of the widespread price discrimination favoring mass merchandisers of tires.

It is sometimes argued that the enormous volume of tires purchased by mass distributors enables manufacturers to produce tires at reduced cost. This is said to be based on the economies of large-scale production.

Superficially, this sounds plausible. It seems to conform to the general pattern of American manufacturing experience.

In this case, however, the cost-saving argument is fallacious. To show its fallacy, we have to consider some of the characteristics of this industry and of the demand for tires.

In the first place, the sale of tires to the public at large is not materially influenced by a few dollars, one way or the other, in the price of tires. People buy tires when they need them—when their tires are worn down, or damaged, or blown out. When they need a tire they will buy it whether the cost is $12 or $15. This difference in price is negligible when compared with the average car owner's income and the other costs of operating a car. People will not buy a tire when they don't need one, even if its price is down a couple of dollars. Extra tires around the place are in the way. Tires are not like shoes or shirts; usually we can always use another pair of shoes, or another shirt. But not another tire until one of our tires is ready for discard. And when that tire is ready for discard, the price of a replacement is not much of an incentive or deterrent to the purchase.

The economists describe this situation by saying that the demand for tires is highly inelastic in terms of price.

If lower tire prices will not induce the public in general to buy more than they otherwise need, it follows that price advantages to mass merchandisers will not increase the total consumption of tires or, therefore, the production of tires by the industry as a whole.

Each manufacturer, however, argues that if he can sell more, the manufacturing costs of his tires will fall. He spreads his fixed costs over more tires. So far, he is right. But if Goodyear sells more by granting a price advantage to mass distributors, other manufacturers produce and sell less. The production cost advantage to Goodyear is offset by production-cost increases to the other manufacturers who now produce less. This conclusion follows from the inelasticity of demand for tires.

Therefore, there are no appreciable manufacturing-cost reductions for the industry as a whole from the sale of tires at bargain rates to mass distributors.

Another cost-saving argument is advanced by the participants in this price-discrimination game. It is said that the chains and oil companies can merchandise tires more cheaply than can the manufacturer-dealer set-up. This argument is dubious. When tires leave the manufacturer's factory door for delivery to a chain organization, they usually go to the chain's central warehouses, then to district warehouses, then by truck to the chain outlet. There are no more steps involved when the dealer buys from his manufacturer. Large dealers buy much of their merchandise in carload orders from the factory; no chain store can improve on this. Actually there is no essential difference in the way tires get to a chain outlet and to an independent dealer handling the same volume.

Manufacturers advertise heavily and have large sales organizations—probably excessively large and often bothersome sales organization. But chains advertise tires in a big way. The cost of their blatant and often misleading advertising is no small penny. They too have large tire sales organizations as part of their business establishments.

It is true, of course, that purchasing in carloads involves less in the way of selling and handling costs than do small orders. But chain outlets do not get their tires entirely in carload lots. Our investigations indicate that chain outlets get their tires in the same kinds of shipments as do dealers of comparable size. Very large dealers buy from half to three-quarters of their tires in carload lots; large chain outlets do about the same. Small chain outlets get theirs on a pick-up basis about as frequently as do small dealers.

We say, then, that the alleged savings in distribution costs are so far purely speculative. The association would like to see a thoroughgoing cost analysis on this point. This part of the mythology of big business needs to be taken apart and examined. Until that improbable investigation occurs, our position is that there are no significant economies of scale in the distribution of tires.

Our position, therefore, is this: The ruinous retail prices of mass distributors are not justified by manufacturing cost savings and they are not justified by distribution cost savings. These retail prices of the chains are possible because of price discriminations favoring the mass distributor.

This discrimination is especially damaging to the independent tire dealer because of a fact mentioned above: the demand for tires is highly inelastic. The low chain price does not increase appreciably the total sales of tires. But it does increase the chain store tire sales. A lot of people will buy the cheaper tire, who would, in the absence of the cheap tire, pay a higher price for a tire. Price discrimination shifts customers away from small business to big business—it does not increase the number of customers or their purchases of tires.

This brings me to another point. Would the elimination of present price preferences to mass distributors increase the average retail price to consumers? The opponents of the quantity rule proposal have argued that it would damage the consumer interest.

The association denies this allegation. The elimination of price discrimination would force up the chain store tire price. But it would lead to a lowering of price on the manufacturer brand tires sold through dealers. Here is the reason for this view. If manufacturers raised the price to the mass merchandisers in line with the price paid by large dealers, manufacturing profits would rise. Each manufacturer wants to increase his production and sales, because each has unused production capacity. With large profits, manufacturers could cut their regular prices in the hope of getting the jump on the others. This would lead to price reductions on regular brands.

The elimination of price discrimination would have the following effects: (1) The present retail price differences between regular brand and private brand tires would be smoothed out—regular brand prices would fall, private brand prices would rise, and (2) the average retail price would remain about as it would be under the present discriminatory arrangement.

We conclude, therefore, that consumers would not be saddled with a higher average price through the elimination of discriminatory pricing practices.

CONCLUSION

The association in advocating the correction of the price-discrimination abuse has had its position misrepresented by its opponents. We have been charged with seeking a monopoly of the replacement-tire business. This charge is absurd. Those who make it know better; their connections with monopolistic conditions are sufficiently intimate to enable them to distinguish monopoly and competition.

The association does not ask for special favors for this segment of small business. It asks merely for a fair break—for fair and free competition in this business. We do not ask for the elimination of mass merchandisers. We ask only that the special price advantages favoring and promoting big business be wiped out.

Our opponents sometimes say that we want to place the chains on a par with the smallest pick-up dealer. That is not our position. There is room for price differentials which compensate for functions performed and for honest differences in cost. We simply want to eliminate the price differences which arise merely from the mass merchandisers' advantage of size.

There is a place for the chains, and perhaps even the oil companies, in the distribution of tires. But we ask that this place be determined by fair and free competition, not by special deals consummated by big business to the destruction of small business.

We do not ask for special favors or public benefits. The tire dealer, by and large, is a tough and able businessman. He can take care of himself if he enjoys equality of advantage in the purchase of tires from the suppliers. We want our big-business competitors to share this equality of advantage, but not to get the special unequal advantages which have been theirs for 25 years. The mass distributor is subsidized by the manufacturer and the subsidy comes out of the hide of the dealer and his customers. We want this to stop. That is all we ask.

The abuses in this industry have been investigated time and again by Government. The tire companies have been cited by the Department of Justice from time to time. The Federal Trade Commission has attempted to stop unfair practices in the industry. In spite of these sporadic, piecemeal, and often half-hearted attempts to correct the abuses of the industry, the situation is as bad as it ever has been.

We think a real job needs to be done on this industry. Some additional and comprehensive ground rules have to be laid down—not only for the good of small business but for the good of the private-enterprise system as a whole. Big business is noisy in its protestations in favor of this system. But its discriminatory policies and monopolistic practices discredit and weaken the enterprise system.

The association wants to see the Federal Trade Commission strengthened and revitalized. It has a big job to do, not only in the rubber-tire industry, but throughout much of industry. That job is needed in order to assure fair and free competition, and to justify this country's faith in the private-enterprise system.

My time has been limited; the committee has other work to do. There are other aspects of the tire-distribution business which ought to come before this committee. If the committee could schedule another appearance later, I would be glad to present additional material. In any event I would like the opportunity to submit additional material at a later date for inclusion in the record. Thank you.

STATEMENT BY JOHN CASANI, PHILADELPHIA, PA., BEFORE THE HOUSE SELECT COMMITTEE ON SMALL BUSINESS, JUNE 28, 1950, ON BEHALF OF THE NATIONAL CANDY WHOLESALERS ASSOCIATION, INC.

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, my name is John Casani. I am a wholesaler of confectionery, located in Philadelphia, Pa. I am chairman of the board of directors of the National Candy Wholesalers Association, an organization of 1600 wholesalers of candy, gum and other confectionery products, located throughout the United States and Hawaii. Our membership includes all types of wholesalers of candy, including those who also handle tobacco products, groceries, drug products, paper products, school supplies and food specialties. Because of the diversity of types of wholesalers who handle candy and related confectionery products, there are approximately 8500 wholesalers of candy in the country, but many of these handle the product only as a side line. This fact has made it necessary for us to lean heavily upon the Federal Trade Commission for help in eliminating the unfair trade practices of our industry, and it is primarily on the subject of the trade practice rules that I would like to comment at this time.

However, before going into this subject, I would like to say that it has been the privilege of our Association to work closely with the Federal Trade Commission for the past 3 years in the enforcement of the Robinson-Patman Act. Our association, 3 years ago, asked for and was granted leave to intervene on behalf of the Federal Trade Commission complaint in the Automatic Canteen Co. case, decision on which has just been announced by the Commission. This was the case in which the respondent was charged with soliciting and receiving illegal discriminatory prices from candy and gum manufacturers.

The reasons we asked for leave to intervene in this case were (a) the extent to which the discriminatory prices were injuring our members, and (b) the delays which were occurring in the proceedings leading to a Federal Trade Commission decision, as well as (c) our desire in the interest of effective enforcement of the Act, to argue the important question of what constitutes a prima facie case against a buyer. We mention our interest in this case to illustrate the importance of working out some way to speed up the enforcement of the antitrust laws.

May we quote from the findings in the Automatic Canteen Co. case, Docket No. 4933, dated June 6, 1950? From paragraph 9 (e) on page 10 of the findings, which reads as follows:

"The respondent's gross profits on candy, nuts, gum, and other confectionery products were composed almost entirely of preferential discounts which it exacted from its suppliers. For example, the William Wrigley, Jr., Co. sold the respondent $8,823,728.63 worth of gum from 1937 to 1945, inclusive, at 38 cents per hundred sticks. Respondent sold this gum to its distributors at 56 cents per hundred, which resulted in a markup of approximately 46 percent above the purchase price and permitted the respondent a gross profit of approximately $4,091,386.58. Other customers competing with respondent or its distributors paid the Wrigley Co. 55 cents per hundred sticks, or approximately $12,771,240 for the same quantity of gum of the same grade and quality, which amounts to $3,947,471.57, or approximately 44 percent, more than the respondent paid for the same gum. Of the $4,091,386.58 gross profit resulting from the sale of Wrigley's gum alone in the years 1937 to 1945, inclusive, $3,947,471.57, or approximately 96 percent, consisted of the difference between what others paid and the lower or preferential price which was granted to the respondent by the Wrigley Co. during those years."

You can readily see that it is to the advantage of firms receiving such price discriminations to use all the strategy possible to prolong the discriminations. With such price advantages they can well afford to pay the cost of resisting and delaying enforcement action in various ways.

We believe that the House Small Business Committee could well afford to examine carefully the entire history of the Canteen case from the time the complaint was issued until the decision was rendered on June 6, 1950. It may well be that the inquiry would reveal delays which should and can be avoided if enforcement of the Robinson-Patman Act is to be effected, and suggest improvements in future procedure.

When the National Candy Wholesalers Association sought to intervene in the case in September, 1947, the complaint had already been pending more than 4 years. The original complaint was filed by the Federal Trade Commission against the respondent on March 19, 1943. On February 18, 1949, 6 years later, a stipulation was entered into with the respondent and the case was finally rested on July 15, 1949, with other delaying procedures in the interval. It was approximately 10 months after that date when the Commission gave its decision.

While I do not know enough about law to suggest any changes in procedures, we are sure you can agree that if it took 7 years to put a stop to illegal discriminatory prices in this case, after the complaint was filed, many a small-business concern was no doubt put out of business, or could be put out of business, by such discriminatory prices before he is able to gain relief under the Robinson-Patman Act. You can see how this has a definite bearing on the comments we intend to make regarding the trade practice rules when we come to that point. We ask you to keep in mind that this 7 years intervened after the complaint was filed by the Federal Trade Commission. There is no way to know how many years lapsed between the report of the violation and the issuance of the complaint.

It is not our purpose to criticize the Federal Trade Commission or the respondent. We are convinced, however, that there is something wrong in a system which requires such a length of time for an administrative body to bring a case to a close and issue an order.

It was our privilege, also, to ask for and receive leave to intervene in the Curtiss Candy Co. case, Docket Nos. 4556 and 4673 (consolidated) in which the respondent had received an order to cease and desist from giving of illegal discriminatory prices to large buyers, which prices were not accorded to our wholesalers. If the committee cares to look into this case I think they will find that more than 6 years intervened between the date of the complaint against the Curtiss Candy Co. and the date of the cease and desist order. There was what appeared to us to be an unnecessarily long delay between the closing of the records in this case and the rendering of the decision. We suggest that the Committee investigate the reasons for such delays.

Our intervention in this case came 2 years after the cease-and-desist order was issued, and we sought leave to intervene because it appeared that the respondent was going to try to get the order set aside, or emasculated, in view of action of the Commission in dismissing cases against 33 other manufacturers, those 33 complaints having been dismissed completely, despite the fact that the Commission found them defective only in part and the fact that 14 of the manufacturers had already agreed to stipulations.

Since the motion for reopening and modification of the order in the Curtiss case still is pending before the Commission I am not discussing that phase of the case, but we should like to ask the committee to investigate the extent to which the cease-and-desist order against the Curtiss Candy Co. was enforced after it was issued. So far as we know, there has been no effort on the part of the Commission in the 2 years since the order in the Curtiss Candy Co. case to enforce it upon the respondent.

This brings us to the subject of the trade practice conference procedures which was the reason for our first contacts with the Federal Trade Commission. We applied for a trade practice conference on May 6, 1947, and following hearings, our trade practice rules for the wholesale confectionery industry were promulgated and issued on April 2, 1948. The rules we were able to work out with the Commission covered most of the unfair practices existing in our industry, but we found that the limitations of the laws on which the rules were based prevented us from getting a satisfactory rule on the question of sales below cost and the use of our product as a loss leader. When you recall our statement in the earlier portion of our testimony that there are a great many units in the wholesaling of candy who sell candy and other confectionery as a side line, you will see how important are the following two rules:

"Rule 10. Use of loss leaders: The practice of selling any brand of confectionery, candy bar, chewing gum, or other confectionery product below the seller's cost as a loss leader to induce the purchase of other merchandise, the sale of the latter being used to recoup the loss sustained on the loss leader product so sold, with the capacity and tendency or effect of misleading or deceiving purchasers, prospect purchasers, or the consuming public is an unfair trade practice.

"Rule 17. Selling below cost: The practice of selling industry products below the seller's cost with the intent and with the effect of injuring a competitor and where the effect may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly or unreasonably restrain trade is an unfair trade practice. The costs, however, which are referred to in the rule, are actual costs of the respective seller, determined in accordance with good accounting practice, and not some other figure or average costs in the industry determined by an industry cost survey or otherwise."

You can readily see how these rules are inadequate due to the fact that it is not sufficient in alleging violation to prove that a firm is selling below cost, but it must also be proven that it is doing so with both the intent and the effect of injuring a competitor and that it may be lessening competition, tending to monopoly or unreasonably restraining trade through its sales below cost. These are very difficult points to prove, particularly with respect to an item which does not constitute the major portion of a wholesaler's volume. It can readily be seen how a tobacco or grocery wholesaler might sell all of its confectionery at a loss, using it as a wedge to build its tobacco or grocery business. This is exactly what is happening in States which have unfair sales acts on cigarettes which set minimum mark-ups on this product. In many cases the tobacco wholesalers are selling their confectionery products at the price they paid for them or below, making no allowance for their cost of operation.

The importance of this can only be realized when you consider that the candy industry represents, according to 1948 census figures, over $2,000,000,000 at the consumer level, of which more than half is handled by the small independent wholesaler and independent retailer. The wholesaler's place in the distribution of confectionery is largely one of selling, warehousing, and delivering of the products of some 600 candy manufacturers to 1,000,000 independent retail outlets and assisting them in their merchandising of the products. You can readily see that if one or two industries were permitted to handle candy strictly as a loss leader, those firms who go to the expense of selling would be gradually eliminated and the entire $2,000,000,000 candy industry would suffer irreparable damage. In fact, it is easy to see that ultimately the manufacturing of candy would be confined in the hands of a few large factories, who would build up their consumer demand by advertising. A parallel to this is what has happened in the tobacco industry in which a few large cigarette manufacturers control almost all of the cigarette business.

With this in mind, we would certainly like for the committee to suggest to Congress the amendment of its laws to provide for the law to prohibit prices below the seller's cost without the necessity of proving that injury to a competitor has already occurred, and certainly without need for proving the seller's thoughts. Such a rule would prohibit the use of any product as a loss leader for promoting the sale of other products and would have a wholesome effect, not only on the candy industry, but upon all other industries. This is the only suggestion we have to offer with regard to improvement of the trade practice rules. We realize that this is a task for Congress and not for the Federal Trade Commission.

However, we believe the Federal Trade Commission also could help the situation by pursuing some cases under the sales-below-cost rule as written, and letting the courts decide the many questions which exist now relative to the effect of below-cost selling on competition. It was my distinct impression that the Federal Trade Commission rule-making staff was definitely reluctant to encourage inclusion in the trade practice rules the ones on sales below cost and loss leaders. We were cautioned time and again that the rule did not prohibit sales below cost per se, but only if the sales below cost were with the intent and the effect of injuring a competitor, lessening competition, tending to monopoly or unreasonably restraining trade. So far as we know there has been no case made by the Federal Trade Commission against a violator in our industry of the rules of selling below cost or using the products of an industry as a loss leader. We believe that such a test case would be very valuable to our industry and to others, and we believe that the committee may want to inquire of the Federal Trade Commission's Enforcement Division as to its attitude on preparation of such a case. We would certainly cooperate with them to the fullest in preparation of a case under these rules, as this is one which most vitally affects our industry, as pointed out before.

What about the total effect of the trade practice rules on our industry? We have been asked this question a number of times, and we have asked ourselves the question. And I believe that we can honestly say that the psychological effect is about the only favorable effect that the promulgation of the rules has had on our industry. The interpretation of the law in terms of the language of the industry probably had a wholesome educational effect. But whether or not this has had any effect on reducing the number of violations of the law in our industry is doubtful. Possibly when our rules were first promulgated, there was some restraining effect on members of the industry who normally engage in such practices. But this restraining effect has long since passed, and I believe that the feeling in our industry now is that the trade practice rules have little, if any, value. Our conversations with other industries with similar rules would indicate that that is true in their industries also.

However, we are convinced that this need not be the case in the future. We are convinced that the principal thing that is needed to make these rules effective in the industry is a set of compliance machinery which operates in that area preceding the issuance of a formal complaint by the Federal Trade Commission. We would certainly like to see the committee request from the Federal Trade Commission a complete outline of its procedure in securing voluntary compliance without the necessity of issuing formal complaints. And if it is found that no such compliance machinery exists, we feel that the committee should emphasize the importance of setting it up.

In contemplating compliance machinery of this kind it must be assumed that the majority of businessmen want to comply with the law and want to observe the trade practice rules of their industry. And the fact that some violate them is due to ignorance of what the rule is, or meeting competition of those who ignore the rules. So, if it could be provided for a branch of the Federal Trade Commission to take the reports of violation which come in immediately to the alleged violator, giving him, first, a copy of the rules and, second, an opportunity to admit or deny his violation and his intention of future compliance without the necessity for issuance of a cease-and-desist order, it would have a salutary effect on competition, which would cover 999 cases out of a thousand of infractions of the rules. Just the very fact of receiving a letter from the Federal Trade Commission, inquiring into an alleged violation, would have the effect of deterring the majority of the businessmen from repeating the violation. And the fact that some of those written might not be guilty of the violation with which they are charged would not have a harmful effect, but instead a wholesome effect, as more or less of a warning that they should not violate these rules and information as to just what the rules are. We were under the impression when we asked for rules that this was going to be the major portion of the Federal Trade Commission's procedure in enforcing our rules. But we have heard of only one case in which any compliance effort has been made without the issuance of a complaint leading to a stipulation or a cease-and-desist order.

We have no way of knowing how many reports the Federal Trade Commission has received of violations of the rules of our industry. We do know, however, that many members of the industry have considered it a waste of time to report what they feel are violations in view of the fact that the impression has gone out that only the submission of sufficient facts to justify the formal complaint would insure any sort of action by the Commission's staff. And when the industry looks at the length of time it has taken in the Automatic Canteen case and the Curtiss Candy Co. case to bring about a cease-and-desist order after the formal complaint is filed, they give it up as a hopeless undertaking. There certainly should be some means of negotiating with alleged violators for compliance if these trade practice rules are to be worth while.

With this in mind we asked the Commission to permit us to create a Trade Practice Committee of our industry to assist in securing this compliance. We have been negotiating with the Commission's staff on the proper method of setting up such a committee and defining the scope of such a committee's operations. Our preliminary conferences have indicated that there isn't much that can be done, or safely done, by such a committee other than purely informational activities in publicizing the rules among the members of the industry. We shall ask the Federal Trade Commission's staff to set down in numerical order an outline of the types of evidence it needs from the industry in support of a complaint of violating each of the rules for our industry. We believe that such a list of items will enable our industry to assist the Federal Trade Commission in bringing a violation to the complaint stage. However, this will not shorten the time involved in the hearings, leading to the issuance of an order.

Again we say that if the rules are to be effective there must be considerable activity in the area preceding the filing of a complaint, and we would certainly like for the committee to check with the Commission's staff on the exact number of reports of violations they have received from our industry, and what they have done about them, either in securing voluntary compliance, or the filing of formal complaint. Then we would like to explore with the committee and the Federal Trade Commission's staff further ways and means of extending and strengthening this voluntary compliance.

In conclusion, we would like to state that our industry is vitally concerned with the enforcement of the antitrust laws, and particularly in the preservation and enforcement of the Robinson-Patman Act. We believe that the continuance of the American system of free enterprise is dependent upon some type of regulation of trade practices. We are convinced that destructive price cutting is just as much a tendency toward creation of monopoly as the giving or receiving of illegal discriminatory prices to large buyers. We believe that the consumer does not ultimately benefit from such reduced prices, but the price cutter uses such tactics simply to eliminate competition, after which he takes advantage of the elimination of competition to raise his prices to the consumer.

We would like to say, too, that the preservation of the independent businessmen, whether manufacturer, wholesaler, or retailer, is just as important to the economy of our country as the protection of the consumer in receiving the lowest possible prices. We believe that the Federal Government has the machinery in the Federal Trade Commission and the Department of Justice to bring about fair competition and we believe that it is just a matter of making some improvement in the procedures and some small changes in the law, such as the prohibition of sales below cost, to make for a successful future for small-business men in the American economy. I thank you.

STATEMENT OF RANKIN PECK, JUNE 28, 1950

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, my name is Rankin Peck. I am president of the National Congress of Petroleum Retailers. Our association represents affiliated associations of retail gasoline dealers, from coast to coast and from the Gulf of Mexico to the Canadian border, whose territory comprises more than 260,000 retail gasoline dealers.

In our opinion, it is highly important for Government to encourage and promote small business. The burden of providing competition rests largely upon small business. It will always rest on small business because, after all, the small-business man is the pioneer who must and will cut the roads ahead.

In the petroleum field, the field in which we are especially interested, the records show that the major oil companies have moved constantly in the direction of price control, of monopoly, and of the destruction of small independent business. Our members are also interested, of course, in the welfare of the consumer. The small-business man, the retail gasoline dealer, is intimately associated day in and day out with the consumer. He lives with the consumer. He rubs elbows with the consumer. He knows the consumer as a person. He becomes a part of the consumer's life. He knows that his welfare is dependent upon the welfare of the consumer.

By way of preface I would like briefly to call the attention of the committee to the Standard Oil of Indiana case in which we are vitally interested. The issue at stake in that case is whether or not "good faith" will be regarded as a complete defense against charges of price discrimination. If it is so regarded, the Robinson-Patman Act will in effect be repealed. The small-business men have won that case in the circuit court. It is still before the United States Supreme Court. But as of this day our Government through our courts has declared that geographic price discrimination may not be practiced to injure and destroy competition. We are very hopeful that our United States Supreme Court will agree. We suspect that Standard Oil of Indiana and all of the other monopoly groups fear the highest court will agree and that their fear was the real reason for their unending effort to force through this Congress the bill known as S. 1008, the bill which they admitted, by making good faith a complete defense would save them from an adverse court decision.

If price discrimination is exercised by a major oil company, or in fact by any other major or monopoly supplying company—if it is exercised to undercut and injure or destroy competition, the circuit court has declared that such practice is unlawful. And this rule must become the law of our land if small and independent business is to survive. If this does not continue to be the law, then the major or monopoly companies whose production, refining, transportation, wholesaling and retailing operations are integrated can sell below cost in the retailing brand and recoup their losses at other levels of their integrated operations and/or operate over large areas can use the profits they demand from one area to make up for the losses they suffer through price cutting in another area.

The small-business man cannot engage in this practice. He cannot engage in this kind of warfare. He is independent and self-reliant.

Very often the major oil companies have changed their tactics. They have not engaged in the cold war of long delay and constant sweating and starving of their neighbors, and I mean the war of price discrimination. They have been somewhat merciful, perhaps. They have decided, very often, to wipe out their independent competitors by just buying his business. In that way they get quick results, just as did the old blitzkrieg.

But all in all, whether the policy is one of slow and cautious price discrimination to destroy the small-business man or the policy of blitzkrieg, the final effect of these practices is a monopoly, the policy and the philosophy of all tyranny and all dictators in business and in every phase of life. It is the complete antithesis to everything that we hold dear in these United States. It is a policy in complete reverse with everything that is expressed by the words "democracy" and "freedom" and "competition." We cannot submit to it and declare ourselves to be, at the same time, Americans.

The antitrust laws and their enforcement agencies of Government were created to (1) preserve the conditions of fair competition and (2) to prevent monopoly. How effective have they been? In general, it must be concluded that the enforcement of our antitrust laws has been exceedingly weak and ineffective. Why has this been so? The small-business man, our retail gasoline dealers, for example, ask why this has been so. And our members are not different from all the other thousands of small-business men who are far removed from Washington and who do not have the means to employ permanent agents or lobbyists here to answer this question. You know a small business has been defined as a concern which does not have enough money to support its own lobbyists in Washington. Small business must depend upon their officials of Government and we think they have a right to depend upon them.

We were very happy, in fact very much encouraged by the announcement of the committee that it would investigate the Federal Trade Commission and the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice. We hope this committee will get the answers the small-business man wants. And I may be presumptuous in suggesting some of the questions which I know run through the minds of the small-business men, of our members at least, but still I wish to ask them.

Is the weak enforcement of the antitrust laws caused by a Congress which has not the will or desire to enforce the laws? Well, let us look at the record to justify that question. Consider, for example, (a) the failure of the Senate to act on the Kefauver bill to amend section 7 of the Clayton Act; (b) the rapidity with which S. 1008 was enacted by the Congress; and (c) the many exemptions which Congress has granted to the antitrust laws—such as the Reed-Bulwinkle bill.

Is the growth of monopoly power encouraged by the very meager appropriations which the antitrust agencies of Government get? Your committee will get the answers to this question, I am sure. The small-business man wants the answers.

Is the weak enforcement of the antitrust laws due to the appointment of men to high positions in the antitrust agencies when those men do not have great enthusiasm for the antitrust laws and any zealous interest in their enforcement or in a policy of fair competition? The small-business man is going to demand the answers and I am sure this committee will continue this investigation until it gets the answers. But let us look at some recent records and let those records answer the questions the small-business man asks.

Why was the Department of Justice so reluctant and, in fact, unwilling to argue the Standard Oil of Indiana case in the Supreme Court? How can this be explained?

Why is there so much delay in the handling of cases by the Federal Trade Commission? How can this be explained?

Why was there so much timidity and vacillation in our antitrust agencies when they were asked for opinions as to S. 1008? How can this be explained?

Why has the Department of Justice refused to use the criminal provisions of the Robinson-Patman Act? How can this be explained?

Mr. Chairman, we have heard a lot about "soft competition" and "hard competition" in recent months. We have heard it said that the ending of the basing-point system would bring about "soft competition." We have heard it said that the Robinson-Patman Act results in "soft competition." What a travesty. It is the basing-point and zone delivered-price systems which provide "soft competition." Such geographical price systems divide up the markets for the conspirators who want to engage in reciprocal price matching. Such systems take the edge off of price competition. It is price discrimination which, by eliminating small business, results in "soft competition." It makes competition so soft that the monopolies do not even need to masticate the small-business man when they decide to swallow him.

That is soft competition—soft for the monopolist but hard on the small-business man and hard on democracy and freedom and on the spirit of man.

Hard competition is good, old-fashioned competition in which a seller reduces his mill or shop prices, uniformally, to all buyers in order to find a selling outlet. This is real competition. It is good and honest competition. Of course, it is hard to take if you are interested in maintaining monopoly prices at a high level and picking off your competitors one by one through unfair discrimination.

I am in favor of hard competition which is open, aboveboard, and nondiscriminatory. I am opposed to the soft competition of basing-point selling. I am also opposed to the predatory competition which involves the use of geographic price discrimination. I am opposed to all types of price discrimination which decreases competition.

An additional and important factor accounting for the weak enforcement of our antitrust laws has been the lack of a unified antitrust policy.

The Government's antitrust policy is expressed in three major statutes enforced by two separate agencies. The Sherman Act is enforced by the Department of Justice, although the Federal Trade Commission may investigate the manner in which decrees issued under the act are being carried out. Incidentally, the Federal Trade Commission has never had the money to do so. Enforcement of the Federal Trade Commission Act is the responsibility of the Commission, but the defense of the Commission's order in the Supreme Court, as well as the collection of penalties for violating these orders, rests with the Attorney General.

Under the Clayton Act and the Robinson-Patman Act the two agencies have generally concurrent jurisdiction, although I think it is generally understood that the Department of Justice has indicated no interest in, and displayed no enthusiasm for enforcement of these two acts and has developed no expert skill to enforce them. The Department of Justice has the authority to bring all criminal actions, but in fact no such suits are brought, and the enforcement of these acts has thus become the exclusive responsibility of the Federal Trade Commission.

Now, I come to another part of the story. I have been told that the Department of Justice and the Federal Trade Commission have established a liaison between their antitrust divisions and presumably for the purpose of preventing duplication of work. We are opposed to duplication of effort, of course. But very often this liaison work can be used to thwart any enforcement of our antitrust laws according to our fears and according to some information we have. The zealous public official is interested, of course, in developing his field of work. But all to often he may be building his own bureau or his own prestige and at the expense of the common good. We hope this committee will make a thorough study of liaison work of these two agencies. We are impressed, to say the least, that there is no common policy as to the enforcement of our antitrust laws. And all we want are the facts.

Let me tell you, very generally, of our experience in trying to stop the destructive price-cutting competition in the Detroit area. There were several major companies involved in unjustified price discrimination among their competing retailer customers, but one case was started. We made our complaints to the Department of Justice and after some time decided that we would have to turn to the Federal Trade Commission. In fact, it seems the Commission was the place to which we should have complained in the first place. I do not want to tell you how long we were required to labor before we could get the case cleared for action. Just why that was true we do not know, but we would like for this committee to tell us.

We have been impressed that the Federal Trade Commission has brought very few cases in the petroleum industry. We have heard rumors that the Department of Justice has assumed almost complete control over that field of jurisdiction. If that is true, let us have the facts and the reasons for any such policy.

Nevertheless, despite the delay the Federal Trade Commission did get action in the Standard of Indiana Detroit case, just as it got action in the Cement and Steel Basing-Point cases. Perhaps that may be the reason why all these attacks have been launched at the Federal Trade Commission by the monopoly interests and why we had a Senate bill 1008, and why the word is whispered that the Commission must be restrained and even destroyed. Those facts are all to the credit of the Commission and to the laws the Commission enforces. Maybe there is substance to another rumor that within the next few months another effort, spearheaded by the American Bar Association, will be made to weaken and even destroy the antitrust work of the Commission and to turn it all over to the Department of Justice. We do not have the facts, we confess, but we hope this committee will get the facts and place the responsibility where it belongs.

It appears that whichever agency gets the complaint first assumes control of the field. Whether a violator of our antitrust laws is prosecuted by the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice or the Federal Trade Commission seems to be largely a matter of chance. And there is no common policy, no agreed-upon course of action.

If the Department of Justice acts, the violator may be subject to criminal prosecution with penalties of fines and imprisonment, but there is no jail sentence for the violators of these laws. Someone has said, very aptly, that "you can't put a million dollars in jail." If the Federal Trade Commission acts, then the violator may get a cease-and-desist order and he is not punished until he violates the order. We ask why not make these orders more effective? Why not provide for immediate and adequate punishment?

We who are interested in these problems have noticed some instances where the conflict of jurisdiction has not resulted in action in the public interest. I might refer to the Cement cases. There the Federal Trade Commission had acted and eventually its action became most effective. Why was it that the Department of Justice brought a suit against the cement companies while the Commission's action was pending in the courts? We ask why? We refer you to the Pure Carbonic case in which the Commission issued cease and desist orders and these were immediately followed by a divestiture suit brought by the Department of Justice. We refer to the stories about the Alkali case, involving an export association operating under the supervision of the Commission. The Department of Justice prosecuted the association under the Sherman Act and the defendants immediately produced in evidence a letter from an official of the Commission in justification of the actions of the association. The chairman of the Appropriations Committee of the House, Representative Cannon, introduced a resolution authorizing the Federal Trade Commission to make an investigation of monopoly in the petroleum industry—a resolution (H. R. 423) in which we are greatly interested. The Department of Justice, so we understand, has recently sent a letter to the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee recommending against the resolution.

These incidents indicate the lack of and need for a common antitrust policy. In my opinion the effectivenes of both agencies could be enhanced by the devolpment of such a policy. A unified policy and a concerted attack would appear of prime importance to the task of seeing that free enterprise prevailed—or indeed, survived. But we insist that it be an antimonopoly program, involving only the antimonopoly agencies and not those agencies which are "promonopoly."

The other phase of the story is the relation between the Commission and the Attorney General in the defense and enforcement of the former's orders. Perhaps the Solicitor General's Office has not always been sympathetic with new issues of law and economic theories of antitrust enforcement. In respect to the Federal Trade Commission and Clayton Acts, legal and economic innovation is a necessity. New practices and new issues are continually arising which require imaginative and forceful presentation to the courts. Its purpose, according to the Congress setting it up, is "to arrest the creators of trust conspirators and monopolies in their infancy and before consummation." It would seem that the Commission should have more opportunity to present, or at least assist in the presentation of such issues to the Supreme Court. I suggest, again, that the committee look into these matters.

I would like to refer to the economic investigations made by the Federal Trade Commission, or, better, to the economic investigations the Commission should make. The small-business man does not have the apparently limitless resources had by the monopolists. The monopoly industries can organize their tremendous research organizations and finance them through making the consumer pay for them in monopoly prices and monopoly profits. The small-business man who is competing cannot get those resources. If our Government is really interested in preserving a genuine and wholesome competition in industry, then we think our Government has the obligation of giving to the small-business man the economic facts he should have. Obviously that was the intention of those who wrote the Federal Trade Commission Act.

I think that the small-business men quite generally, thought the Commission had the authority and the responsibility and the financial resources to make these investigations. I think we were inclined to criticize the Commission. But in the last few years, as the small-business men have become organized, they have learned that the Commission had the authority and the responsibility but that the Congress denied the Commission the funds with which to make the investigations. We hope this Committee will get the facts so that we can know where the responsibility lies for this hamstringing of the Commission's important work of conducting economic investigations.

For example, let me refer again to the so-called Cannon resolution which proposes that the Commission should make a thorough fact-finding study of the entire petroleum industry. We are strongly in favor of that resolution. Such information as we can get indicates that over the years at least 10 investigations have been made of the same subject by the various committees of the Congress. But we cannot discover any results from those investigations which are, or would be, beneficial to the small-business man. They have not provided the array of carefully organized facts which an independent investigatory body can develop and which are necessary to lay the groundwork for any legislation. Hence, there is at least the suspicion that some congressional investigations are launched only to halt a real investigation by the Commission.

We know that the Federal Trade Commission has had very fine investigations, as for example, the meat-packing industry investigation, the chain store investigation, the electric utilities investigation, the cement and steel investigations, and so on. The Commission has the nucleus of experts to make such investigations. It has had the experience. It has the power. It was created by the Congress to do such work. And yet, we wonder just why the Commission has been prevented from making these investigations. We ask your Committee to give us the facts.

In conclusion, I should like to suggest certain steps which I think the committee should consider and explore in a program of promoting competition and of helping small business.

First, the appropriations for the antitrust agencies and, in particular, the Federal Trade Commission, must be substantially increased. One point which I should like to have investigated is why the Bureau of the Budget has consistently cut the budget requests made by the Federal Trade Commission.

Second, the executive branch of Government must exercise extreme care in appointing persons to the antitrust agencies. It must be sure that the persons appointed have a sincere desire to enforce the antitrust laws. If they do not have this desire, they should not be in the antitrust agencies. This committee should make known its views on appointments to the Antitrust Division and to the Federal Trade Commission.

Third, the economic studies of the Federal Trade Commission must be greatly expanded. The field of monopolistic practices is still largely an unexplored jungle. Small business knows that it has great difficulty in surviving and growing upon the basis of productive efficiency. It knows further that too great a premium in business success is put upon financial power, unfair practices, the power to keep supplies from independents, and deceptive advertising. What we need is a formal record on such unfair and monopolistic practices to serve as a basis for corrective action.

Fourth, the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, needs to be strengthened (1) to provide for prohibiting the acquisition of assets as well as capital stock, whenever the effect may be to lessen competition; (2) to provide that cease-and-desist orders issued under the Clayton Act shall, like those under the Federal Trade Commission Act, become final and subject to penalty for violation after 60 days, unless an appeal is carried to a court of appeals; (3) to enact Mr. PATMAN's bill to require sellers to make information as to discounts and allowances available to all customers—primary and secondary; and (4) to reconsider the policy of allowing dominant companies controlling basic supplies to select their own customers, perhaps providing that in proper circumstances such companies may be required by the Commission to sell to all customers offering cash payment.

On this last point, I doubt that there are many persons ever in Government who realize how potent a weapon big business has in its so-called right to select its own customers. That is a basic right of the private trade, of course. He has the basic right to select his own customers and he should have that right as long as, but only as long as, he respects the basic rights of others. A right carries with it, in any society, an obligation and without obligations there can be no rights. This basic right to select your customer can become the right and power to boycott and to exercise the most extreme form of discrimination against independent businessmen and, therefore, against everything that makes up what we know as American. It can be used—and I am sure the very existence of our antitrust laws and of the Clayton Act and the Robinson-Patman Act and actions taken under them are evidences that it has been used and I fear is being used—to discriminate against the independent businessman whenever he shows any desire and determination to be independent or to be self-reliant. But unless the small-business man has the right to buy basic commodities on an honest competitive basis and without fear of intimidation, our free enterprise economy will not and cannot work effectively.

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I greatly appreciate the opportunity of appearing before you and presenting a few suggestions designed to improve the functioning of the antitrust laws. As I have indicated, small business needs new legislation which will close the present loopholes in the law and provide better protection to the free, independent enterpriser against the attacks and inroads of monopoly.

But, small business also needs better enforcement and more vigorous use of the laws which are already on the statute books. In the Federal Trade Commission Act and the Clayton Act there are to be found a surprising number of provisions of law which have never been enforced. Perhaps the Commission has never had the resources. But whatever the cause, the fact is that they have not been enforced. The existence of such a situation is outrageous. Someone has aptly referred to the Federal Trade Commission as "the slumbering giant of the Government." With the Cement and Steel cases, and with the Standard Oil of Indiana case this giant is beginning to show signs of awakening. This committee would be performing an invaluable service to small business, and to the public generally, if it would hasten this process of awakening.

HON. EDITH NOURSE ROGERS

Mr. HOFFMAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I should like to pay tribute today to one of the outstanding Members of the Eighty-first Congress, whose important services to the House Committee on Veterans Affairs has been recognized this week by the presentation of her portrait, done in oils by Howard Chandler Christy, to that committee.

This deserved honor that has come to Mrs. EDITH NOURSE ROGERS, who served as chairman of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs during the Eightieth Congress, is one that carries with it the good wishes of thousands of friends and admirers in her home State and throughout the Union. As the senior ranking member of the committee, Mrs. ROGERS has served with this body since 1925. Only the present chairman outranks her in point of continuous service.

It has been my privilege to know Mrs. ROGERS during my own brief service on the Committee on Veterans' Affairs. I can testify whole-heartedly, from my own experience, to her lasting interest in the welfare of our veterans of all America's wars. She has been single-minded in her devotion to their needs and in her uncompromising insistence that their cause receive just and considerate attention at all times and in all places. The veterans of America have no greater friend anywhere than this able and warm-hearted woman.

The presentation of this portrait, which is the gift of the Department of Massachusetts of the American Legion and its ladies' auxiliary, symbolizes the mark that Mrs. ROGERS has made as a member of this important committee. I want to add my praise to that of all her other friends and well-wishers.

THE COUNTRY, THE TAXPAYER, AND THE FARMER ARE ENTITLED TO A SOUND NATIONAL FARM POLICY

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, since coming to Congress in 1939 I have developed a greater appreciation of the vital place the American farmer occupies in the economy of our Nation. We all know of the wonderful contribution the American farmer made in the winning of World War II, and the long hours he labored in helping this Nation to achieve victory.

My congressional district, while it is comprised of many family sized farms, is not wholly an agricultural district. For an illustration, in the three-county area in Pennsylvania, composed of Blair, Centre, and Clearfield Counties, we have 7,242 farms with a total acreage of 592,000 acres.

The average size of a farm in Blair, Centre, and Clearfield Counties is about 85 acres. From these well-kept farms we have an annual production of millions of dollars in grain, forage crops, fruits, livestock, and dairy products.

The farmers in my congressional district are not corporation farmers. They are family farmers who rely on their own initiative and independence and have been doing so for generations. Their farms in many instances have been in cultivation for over a century and they are more fertile today than at any time in their history.

Today in my congressional district you will find that our farm families are not only substantial citizens but their sons and daughters are progressive and are in many business enterprises and in professional life.

The farmers in Blair, Centre, and Clearfield Counties in Pennsylvania believe as I do that a sound farm program is necessary to our national economy. That is the reason why they view with skepticism the efforts that have been made to formulate farm programs.

They view with alarm the proposed Brannan plan and in discussing it with me have said:

> The Brannan plan will result in the Government pushing a program of cheap food, a vast increase in Government personnel passing out checks, checking on acreages, levying fines for excessive sales, directing farmers in their conservation practices, and farm-management procedures. We fear the implications of the power given over the farmers in planning their incomes and their very lives.

Here is what one farm spokesman told me in my congressional district: "Our farmers don't like the idea of a subsidized agriculture dependent perennially upon huge congressional appropriations. We feel we will accomplish more over a long period of time if we continue to stress more efficient production, more efficient marketing, increased uses of agricultural products in industry, an improved national nutrition program, which will result in larger consumption of the animal products, and an expanding farm export market."

Another of the farm leaders in my district expressed his opinion as follows:

> Our farmers believe in a program that would emphasize efficient production, better marketing, cooperative activity, expanding markets, new uses for farm products, better diets, and subsidized diets such as school lunches and food stamp plans for those who cannot afford to buy—but not for everybody.

Another farmer in my district has this to say about the Brannan plan:

> We farmers are afraid it tries to do too much and puts entirely too much control in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture and the Federal, State, and local production marketing administration committees.

In addition to talking to representative farmers in my congressional district, I recall a general poll I took among residents of Blair, Centre, and Clearfield Counties in Pennsylvania last January. One of the questions asked was, Do you favor the so-called Brannan plan? When the results of the poll were tabulated it revealed that out of 1,876 questionnaires returned 326 persons favored the Brannan plan and 1,026 were opposed to it. The remaining 524 persons were either against all forms of farm price-support programs or they were not informed enough on the Brannan plan to take a position.

With the Nation-wide controversy raging over the evils or merits of certain farm programs, and mindful of the fact that an intelligent legislator makes a sincere effort to bring order out of chaos, I have made a careful study of the farm problem. I hasten to explain that I am not posing as a farm expert but my experience in my congressional career has enabled me to view the farm problem with a greater appreciation of its vital effect on the economy of our Nation. Realizing that it is a poor excuse to be continually opposing a program and have nothing constructive to offer in its place, I have arrived at the following conclusions regarding the need for a sound national agricultural policy.

It is my considered judgment that a national agricultural policy should be self-financing and not dependent upon the Federal Treasury for its existence. It should be operated and controlled from the grass-roots level and not from Washington, D. C.

Such a policy should assure the farmer a maximum of freedom of activity and should not be infested with controls and penalties. It should operate within the framework of our free enterprise system and should not be socialistic in scope. It should not be compulsory and should be discretionary with the farmer. It should relieve the taxpayers of billions of dollars in annual taxes. It should provide for an orderly disposal of farm surpluses thus eliminating waste. It should assist materially in balancing the budget and thus end deficit spending. It should encourage better farming and not stifle the initiative of the individual farmer. It should stabilize farm income and thus prevent a decrease in farm prices which would affect our entire economy. And last but not least, it should protect the family sized farmer.

With these views of national agricultural policy in mind and conscious of the fact that farmers in my congressional district hold the same opinions, I conferred with farm leaders in Congress and discussed the subject with them.

In this connection, I worked arm in arm with my colleague and good friend, Congressman HAROLD LOVRE, of South Dakota. For months he had conducted grass-roots conferences with better than 3,500 farmers and consumers in the Middle West. We agreed to sponsor jointly a farm bill that would incorporate the views of the family sized farmer in the United States. As a result we introduced identical bills in Congress to provide a national agricultural policy to be carried out on a self-sustaining basis and to promote conservation and development of the Nation's soil resources.

Briefly the bill provides that farmers would choose their own organizations with elected county, State, and national committees directing the program from the farm level. The committees would work with the Secretary of Agriculture who would determine the normal production needs ahead of planting time. This total would be divided among the farmers producing the particular product. They would receive 100 percent of parity for the produce marketed under these quotas.

If a farmer produced more than his quota and wanted to sell it, he could buy additional marketing quotas, paying enough for them to finance the disposal of the surplus through food stamps, exports and new uses of the product. If the surplus did not cost the entire sum the balance would be returned through the local farm committees. Those who created the surpluses would thus stand the expense of disposing of them.

Mr. Speaker, I want to have it understood that it is not my opinion that the Lovre-Van Zandt bill is the only answer to the complex farm problem. It has been introduced with the thought that it points the way and provides the pattern for a sound long-range farm program. The bill is worthy of consideration because it represents a lot of thought on the part of many of us who are interested in assisting the country, the taxpayer, and the farmer.

CIVILIAN DEFENSE

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, W. Stuart Symington, who was confirmed on April 26 last as the new permanent Chairman of the National Security Resources Board, charged with jurisdiction over civilian defense and industrial mobilization, after that Board had been without a permanent Chairman for approximately 16 months, made some very pointed remarks in a speech in Detroit Monday night of this week. I read an Associated Press dispatch dated Detroit, June 27, and captioned "Need for civilian defense pointed up by Symington":

> Civilian defense might be the "crucial difference" between saving or losing America, says W. Stuart Symington.
>
> Mr. Symington, Chairman of the National Security Resources Board, told the American Red Cross Convention last night that a surprise atomic attack might deal the Nation a blow from which it could not recover. Effective civilian defense, the former Air Force Secretary said, could cut atomic-bomb casualties by 50 percent in a typical American city.
>
> But one bomb on one large city, he said, "would require hundreds of thousands of pints of blood and blood derivatives a week."
> The reduction in casualties from the availability of such resources, he said, "might be the crucial difference between a serious and a fatal attack."

The House knows that for the last year I have been expressing concern over the lack of a federally coordinated program for civilian defense of American cities and towns against atomic-bomb or poison-gas attack and I was the first to rise on this floor to hail the appointment of Mr. Symington to head the National Security Resources Board, which had been leaderless so long.

Yesterday I asked 20 of my House colleagues this question: "What would you do in the event of an atomic-bomb attack on the Capital?" Invariably the answer was, "I would rush for the subway." But everyone questioned admitted he did not know whether that was the right thing to do. Nor do I know the answer.

If war should come, it is conceded that many things could happen right here in our own America and I am one who hopes that our State and local civilian-defense organizations have been properly alerted as to possible dangers and it will not be long before the public as a whole knows the A B C's or the first things to do in the event of atomic attack.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

SENATE

THURSDAY, JUNE 29, 1950

(Legislative day of Wednesday, June 7, 1950)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal Spirit, amid the tensions of these terrific days we seek in Thy presence a saving experience of inner quiet and certainty. Unto our keeping Thou hast committed a national heritage luminous with freedom's glorious light. For all the glory which is America, we bless Thy name. For borders without guns, for frontiers which are swinging gates, for unity in diversity, for peace which spans a continent, and for equality which beckons all to the summit.

Strengthen in us the steadfast faith that these healing trees of human good, grown in this land of the free, may take root and blossom under all skies around this war-worn earth. Facing decisions of destiny, unite our hearts and minds, we beseech Thee, in a mighty purpose that we fail not man nor Thee. We ask it in the dear Redeemer's name. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. KEFAUVER, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Wednesday, June 28, 1950, was dispensed with.

The VICE PRESIDENT. A quorum is present.

EXTENSION OF RENT CONTROL IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3776) to amend and extend the provisions of the District of Columbia Emergency Rent Act, as amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, there is to be 15 minutes of debate on the conference report on the District of Columbia rent-control bill, to be divided equally between the Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN] and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER].

The Chair recognizes the Senator from Washington.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, I request the yeas and nays on the question of agreeing to the conference report.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, if the junior Senator from Washington believed in special privilege, he would vote this morning in favor of the District of Columbia rent control conference report.

If the Senator from Washington believed in providing himself, as a tenant in the District of Columbia, with protection which he was not willing to provide for millions of Americans residing outside of the District of Columbia, he would support the conference report.

If the Senator from Washington were in favor of keeping the District of Columbia, its Commissioners, and its citizens from having any opportunity to exercise judgment and action on local problems, he would favor the conference report.

If the Senator from Washington wanted to make certain that he would be given a future opportunity as a Member of the Congress to vote on whether or not rent controls should be continued beyond January 1951, in the District of Columbia, he would be in support of the conference report.

In a word, the conference report says that federally initiated rent controls shall continue in the District of Columbia for an extended period of 7 months, while comparable controls will continue throughout the Nation for only 6 months. The conference report makes certain that the Congress will be in session when the 7 months' period is scheduled to expire. The Congress, however, does not intend to be in session when the Federal rent-control law expires on the last day of this year. The conference report makes clear that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia will be given no right or authority or chance to consider the rent control needs of Washington, D. C., in the future, although every other American community has been granted this opportunity by the Congress of the United States. The conference report would have us believe that what is right and proper for the 48 States of our Union is wrong and improper for Washington, D. C., our Nation's Capital.

The Senator from Washington believes that the conference report ought to be rejected because he believes in providing the District of Columbia with an opportunity to judge and take action on a local question; because he believes that the rights of the citizens of Washington, D. C., are comparable to the rights possessed by other American citizens; because he disbelieves in providing Members of the Congress with rent-control protection which the Congress has thought it unnecessary to give to citizens living outside of the District of Columbia; because he believes there is simply no justification of any kind for extending federally initiated rent controls beyond the end of 1950 in the District of Columbia or anywhere else.

If the Senate really understands the issue at stake, if it believes in fair play to all, if it believes in living under the rules which it imposed upon America, the Senate will reject a conference report which recommends special privilege for a very limited segment of our society.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, the entire argument of the opposition yesterday and today is over the Senate agreeing to the House version of the bill as to the extension of rent control in the District of Columbia after December 31. The reason why the conference unanimously agreed to the House version of the bill is, of course, that if rent control expired on December 31, as it does in the rest of the Nation, Congress would not be in session at that time to appropriate money for the carrying on of rent control in the event the Commissioners of the District of Columbia decided it should be extended for 6 months. Furthermore, in this respect Congress sits as the governing body, the city council, and it is Congress, not the District Commissioners, which should extend rent control if it is to be extended.

I should like to call attention to the fact, Mr. President, that in all the Rent Control Acts which have been passed for the Nation and for the District of Columbia, rent control in the District of Columbia has always extended 1 month longer than the time set for the Nation generally, for the simple reason that Congress had to be in session for at least a month in order to provide appropriations and to grant extension.

Mr. President, the action which is proposed by the conference report is not in conflict with the general Federal law. The local governing bodies of cities have a right to extend rent control for 1 month after December 31. What the governing body of the District of Columbia is doing through this conference report is deciding that for at least a period of 1 month rent control should be extended beyond December 31 in the District of Columbia. If rent control were extended for only 6 months and the District of Columbia Commissioners failed to extend it for six more months, Congress would not be in session, so that there would be a hiatus during which the rent-control organization of the District would not be able to function.

Furthermore, Mr. President, the rent administrator for the District of Columbia, Mr. Cogswell, feels that the delegation of authority in this respect to the District of Columbia Commissioners would provide the basis for a lawsuit. A lawsuit has been threatened. He cites the case of Neild against District of Columbia as the basis for possible litigation. Frankness compels me to state that I do not think there is any basis for a successful lawsuit, because if standards are established with this delegation of authority I think it would meet the constitutional test. But that question has been raised.

The agreement which has been worked out with the House conferees is the best that we could do. If the conference report is not accepted, there will be no further chance, I am afraid, of securing an extension of the rent-control law for the District, and one is badly needed. All the evidence shows that at least for a period of 6 months or 7 months further rent control is needed for the District of Columbia.

There are certain construction projects now nearing completion which we hope will change the situation; and Mr. Cogswell hopes that at the end of 7 months we shall not need a further extension. But I feel it is a matter which must be passed on eventually by Congress, because unless an appropriation is granted, even if the power were left with the Commissioners, there could be no effective rent control. So I should think the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN] would be glad of the decision of the conferees to leave the full determination to the governing body of the District of Columbia, which is the Congress of the United States.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair cannot recognize any Senator in his own right.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield 2 minutes?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee has 2½ minutes.

Mr. KEFAUVER. I yield the Senator from Michigan 1½ minutes.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I shall be compelled to vote against rent-control extension as provided in the conference report. I went along with rent control when the country was at war and needed such regulation, but I am of the opinion that it has become purely a political matter which involves votes, and therefore it is a matter of the confiscation of property, not only in the District of Columbia, but in other places. I voted against the extension of rent control for other cities and other States, and I am compelled to vote against it for the District of Columbia because, as I have said, I believe it has become purely a political matter. For that reason I am compelled to vote against the conference report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee has 1 minute remaining.

Mr. KEFAUVER. I have received no further requests for time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington wish to use any more of his time? He has 3 minutes.

Mr. CAIN. There is but one thing I should like to add, Mr. President. The Senator from Tennessee stated that Mr. Cogswell, the District of Columbia Rent Control Administrator, suggested the likelihood of a lawsuit resulting from the adoption by the Senate of the proposal to delegate authority to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

I have been advised by, I think, proper authority that the delegation of authority to the Commissioners is perfectly legal. That authority is and has been the Corporation Counsel of the District of Columbia for a period of some years. He is Vernon E. West. He has said, in substance, that if the Congress of the United States wishes to provide the same kind of machinery for the District of Columbia which it has provided for every other American municipality, he knows of no reason why such action would be illegal.

The VICE PRESIDENT. All time for debate has expired. The question is on agreeing to the conference report. The yeas and nays having been ordered, the Secretary will call the roll. Those who favor the conference report will vote "yea," those who oppose it will vote "nay."

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE] are absent because of illness.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND] and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. GRAHAM] are absent on public business.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT] is detained on official committee business.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON], the Senators from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON and Mr. MAYBANK], the Senators from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR and Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MCCLELLAN] is detained on official committee business, conducting hearings on Reorganization Plan No. 22.

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] is absent because of illness in his family.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR] is absent by leave of the Senate on official business, attending the sessions of the International Labor Organization at Geneva, Switzerland, as a delegate representing the United States.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MCCLELLAN] is paired on this vote with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. SCHOEPPEL]. If present and voting, the Senator from Arkansas would vote "yea," and the Senator from Kansas would vote "nay."

I announce further that if present and voting, the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. GRAHAM], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS], and the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] would vote "yea."

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I announce that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. DWORSHAK] is absent on official business.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER] is absent by leave of the Senate attending the Indiana Republican State Convention.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MCCARTHY] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. WATKINS] are detained on official business.

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. SCHOEPPEL] is detained on official business attending a meeting of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, and is paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MCCLELLAN]. If present and voting, the Senator from Kansas would vote "nay," and the Senator from Arkansas would vote "yea."

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] is detained on official business attending a meeting of the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The result was announced—yeas 45, nays 23, as follows:

TRANSACTION OF ROUTINE BUSINESS

By unanimous consent, the following routine business was transacted:

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following communication and letter, which were referred as indicated:

SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATE, MILITARY ASSISTANCE TO FOREIGN NATIONS (S. Doc. No. 194)

A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the fiscal year 1951, involving an increase of $1,178,023,729, to provide military assistance to foreign nations, in the form of an amendment to the budget (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

LAWS ENACTED BY MUNICIPAL COUNCILS OF ST. THOMAS AND ST. JOHN AND ST. CROIX, V. I.

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to law, copies of laws enacted by the Municipal Councils of St. Thomas and St. John and St. Croix, V. I. (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Petitions, etc., were laid before the Senate, and referred as indicated:

By the VICE PRESIDENT:

Resolutions of the General Court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts; to the Committee on Appropriations:

"Resolutions memorializing Congress to include in the river and harbor bill the necessary funds to dredge Wellfleet Harbor

"Whereas the gradual filling in of Wellfleet Harbor has been and is detrimental to the town of Wellfleet and particularly to the fishermen of said town; and

"Whereas the dredging of Wellfleet Harbor would greatly benefit the fishermen and bring additional revenue to the merchants of the town from sports fishermen and visiting yachts; and

"Whereas the dredging of the harbor would increase the returns of the fishing industry, which is important to the economy of the Commonwealth; and

"Whereas Wellfleet Harbor is a natural harbor of refuge for vessels in distress in the surrounding waters; and

"Whereas a dredging project of said harbor was approved by the Army engineers in 1939 and by the General Court of Massachusetts in 1941; and

"Whereas the town of Wellfleet has appropriated and set aside its share of the necessary funds; and

"Whereas with each year that passes the cost of said project has increased because of the continual filling in of the harbor and consequent increase in dredging cost; and

"Whereas the town of Wellfleet relies mainly upon the fishing industry and summer trade for its existence; and

"Whereas the river and harbor bill is now under consideration by Congress: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the General Court of Massachusetts urges the Congress of the United States to forthwith appropriate the funds necessary for the dredging of a channel and mooring basin in the harbor of Wellfleet; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent forthwith to the President of the United States, to the Presiding Officer of each branch of Congress and to the Members thereof from this Commonwealth.

"In house of representatives, adopted, June 15, 1950.

"LAWRENCE R. GROVE,
"Clerk.

"In senate, adopted, in concurrence, June 20, 1950.

"IRVING N. HAYDEN,
"Clerk."

Resolutions of the General Court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, relating to the stockpiling of worsted fabrics instead of raw wool; to the Committee on Finance.

(See text of resolutions printed in full when presented by Mr. LODGE (for himself and Mr. SALTONSTALL) on June 28, 1950, p. 9307, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

Resolutions of the General Court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, relating to tariff reductions on imports of shoe and textile goods; to the Committee on Finance.

(See resolutions printed in full when presented by Mr. LODGE (for himself and Mr. SALTONSTALL) on June 28, 1950, p. 9307, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

A resolution adopted by the Fifth Congressional District Townsend Clubs, at St. Cloud, Fla., favoring the enactment of the so-called Townsend plan, providing old-age assistance; to the Committee on Finance.

A petition signed by Dr. Aram A. Krajian Sc. D., and sundry other members of the International Armenian Welfare Commission, of Fresno, Calif., relating to certain claims of Armenian-Americans against the Turkish Government; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

A radiogram in the nature of a petition from the Korean Nationalist Party, Honolulu, T. H., signed by Youngkee Kim, president, expressing gratitude for the prompt military aid to save democracy in Korea; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

A telegram in the nature of a petition from the Veterans of Foreign Wars, Department of California, Santa Monica, Calif., signed by William J. Harry, commander, relating to military assistance to South Korea, and so forth; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The petition of Oda B. Thompson, of Collingdale, Pa., relating to her claim against the United States for damages; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A resolution adopted by the Campbell Parent-Teacher Association of Ironton, Ohio, protesting against the enactment of legislation providing compulsory health insurance; to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

The memorial of Rafael Perez-Marchand and Rafael Arjona-Siaca, of San Juan, P. R., remonstrating against the enactment of Senate bill 3336, to provide for the organization of a constitutional government by the people of Puerto Rico; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

A telegram in the nature of a petition from the National Association of Waste Material Dealers, Inc., New York, N. Y., signed by Clinton M. White, managing director, praying for the continuation of the suspension of the import tax of 2 cents per pound on copper; ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. CONNALLY, from the Committee on Foreign Relations:

S. Res. 276. Resolution expressing praise of the services of the late Ambassador to Canada, Hon. Laurence A. Steinhardt; without amendment (Rept. No. 1926).

By Mr. FREAR, from the Committee on the District of Columbia:

H. R. 2887. A bill to amend the Architects' Registration Act for the District of Columbia in order to safeguard life, health, and property, and to promote the public welfare; with amendments (Rept. No. 1927).

By Mr. O'MAHONEY, from the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs:

H. R. 49. A bill to enable the people of Hawaii to form a constitution and State government and to be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States; with amendments (Rept. No. 1928); and

H. R. 331. A bill to provide for the admission of Alaska into the Union; with amendments (Rept. No. 1929).

PRINTING OF ADDITIONAL COPIES OF HEARINGS ON S. 1832, TO AMEND IMMIGRATION ACT

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, there are several measures which I have been instructed to report favorably from the Committee on Rules and Administration, and I should like to ask unanimous consent to have them considered and disposed of at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Senator will send the resolutions to the desk, they may be stated.

Mr. HAYDEN. First, Mr. President, I report favorably from the Committee on Rules and Administration Senate Concurrent Resolution 96, submitted by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] on June 13, 1950, and I ask for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 96) was read, considered, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 5,000 additional copies of the hearings conducted before a subcommittee of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary on S. 1832, Eighty-first Congress, first session, to amend the Immigration Act of October 16, 1918, as amended. Such additional copies shall be for the use of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary.

INVESTIGATION OF DISLOYALTY IN STATE DEPARTMENT—INCREASE IN LIMITATION OF EXPENDITURES

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I report favorably from the Committee on Rules and Administration, Senate Resolution 303, submitted by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] on June 27, 1950, and I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 303) was read, considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the limit of expenditure contained in Senate Resolution 237, agreed to March 15, 1950 (relating to a study and investigation by the Committee on Foreign Relations as to whether persons who are disloyal to the United States are or have been employed by the Department of State), hereby is increased from $25,000 to $35,000.

INCREASED EXPENDITURES BY COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I report favorably from the Committee on Rules and Administration Senate Resolution 293, reported by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] from the Committee on Appropriations on June 8, 1950, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 293) was read, considered, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations hereby is authorized to expend from the contingent fund of the Senate, during the Eighty-first Congress, $10,000 in addition to the amounts, and for the same purposes, specified in section 134 (a) of the Legislative Reorganization Act approved August 2, 1946, Senate Resolution No. 126, agreed to June 22, 1949, and Senate Resolution No. 185, agreed to October 13, 1949.

EXPENDITURES BY JOINT COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN ECONOMIC COOPERATION

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I report favorably from the Committee on Rules and Administration, Senate Resolution 298, reported from the Committee on Appropriations by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] on June 15, 1950, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, is the money the resolution seeks to have appropriated out of the contingent fund of the Senate for the work of the so-called "watchdog committee"?

Mr. HAYDEN. It is.

Mr. LUCAS. Is that a joint committee of the House and the Senate?

Mr. HAYDEN. It was so created by the act extending the European recovery program for another year, which included provision for a joint committee.

Mr. LUCAS. What right have we to appropriate money out of the contingent fund of the Senate for action by a joint committee of the House and the Senate?

Mr. HAYDEN. We did it once before, when the "watchdog committee" was originally created. It was then included in the appropriation for the European recovery program, but last year in conference the House would not agree to an extension for more than 1 year. Therefore, if the work is to be carried on, it must be taken care of out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, it does seem to me that where there is a joint commitee of the House and the Senate, and we furnish all the money on the Senate side, there is something radically wrong about a committee of that kind. I do not understand why the House does not join in and pay its share of the expenses of the committee.

Mr. HAYDEN. That they have declined to do, and what is proposed is the only way to accomplish the results desired if the committee is to be continued as authorized by law.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I am not going to object, but I think it is very poor business if the Senate of the United States has to take out of its contingent fund money to pay the expenses of a joint committee composed of Members of the House and the Senate. It seems to me that the committee in charge of this matter is going a long way when it reports a resolution such as this unanimously, without at least considering the money that is in the contingent fund, which is supposed to be appropriated for Senate purposes. If we are to continue to do things of this kind, to pay all the expenses of a joint committee out of the contingent fund of the Senate, what is the limit to be?

Mr. HAYDEN. The way to have avoided this would have been not to provide in the original legislation reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations and passed by the Senate, authorizing the extension of the European recovery program for another year, the authority for this joint committee. If the House does not want it and the Senate does, the Senate has to pay the bill.

Mr. LUCAS. Do I correctly understand that the Members of the House are participating in this joint committee so far as the work is concerned?

Mr. HAYDEN. They have a perfect right to. How much they participate, or do not, I do not know; I am not a member of the committee. The chairman of the Commitee on Foreign Relations informs me, aside, that they have been participating.

Mr. LUCAS. Very well, but I think the Senate is making a very bad mistake in proceeding along this line, from a business standpoint, and having consideration of the contingent fund of the Senate. The Contingent Fund is provided to take care of expenditures having to do with Senate work, and not expenditures of the House of Representatives. Yet now the Committee on Rules and Administration reports unanimously a resolution providing for $130,000, to be taken out of the Contingent Fund for the purpose of having the House of Representatives help make an investigation with respect to what is going on in Europe. To me it seems ridiculous.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 298) was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Joint Committee on Foreign Economic Cooperation is authorized to expend from the contingent fund of the Senate, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1951, $130,000 for the purposes specified in section 124 of Public Law 472, Eightieth Congress, as amended.

MILLARD E. TYDINGS,
Chairman.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

The Secretary of the Senate reported that on today, June 29, 1950, he presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 3258. An act to continue a system of nurseries and nursery schools for the day care of school-age and under-school-age children in the District of Columbia;

S. 3527. An act to amend section 14 (b) of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended; and

S. 3776. An act to amend and extend the provisions of the District of Columbia Emergency Rent Act, as amended.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. McCARRAN:

S. 3844. A bill to amend the act of March 12, 1914, to authorize the construction and operation of a cement plant in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

By Mr. TYDINGS:

S. 3845. A bill to provide that personnel of the Reserve components of the Army of the United States and the Air Force of the United States shall have common Federal appointments or enlistments as Reserves in their respective services, to equalize disability benefits applicable to such personnel, and for other purposes; and

S. 3846. A bill to provide for a Reserve Officers' Training Corps, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Armed Services.

By Mr. BENTON:

S. 3847. A bill for the relief of Olindo Balboni, his wife and son; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BUTLER:

S. 3848. A bill to authorize the sale of inherited interests in the allotment of James Buchanan, deceased Winnebago allottee; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

By Mr. HOLLAND:

S. 3849. A bill to provide for the transfer or quitclaim of title to certain lands in Florida; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

By Mr. McCLELLAN (for himself, Mr. EASTLAND, Mr. HOEY, Mr. O'CONOR, Mr. HUMPHREY, Mr. LEAHY, Mr. BENTON, Mr. IVES, Mr. MUNDT, Mrs. SMITH of Maine, and Mr. SCHOEPPEL):

S. 3850. A bill to authorize the President to determine the form of the national budget and of departmental estimates, to modernize and simplify governmental accounting and auditing methods and procedures, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

By Mr. SCHOEPPEL:

S. 3851. A bill for the relief of Karl and Ada Chimani; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HUMPHREY:

S. 3852. A bill to amend section 503 (b) of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act; to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

REDUCTION OF EXCISE TAXES—AMENDMENTS

Mr. McCARRAN submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 8920) to reduce excise taxes, and for other purposes, which were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF MUTUAL DEFENSE ASSISTANCE ACT—AMENDMENT

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the bill (S. 3809) to amend the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, at the end of the bill, to add a new section, as follows:

SEC. 13. Section 405 of such act is amended by adding at the end thereof a new subsection as follows:

"(e) The President shall also terminate the assistance authorized to be furnished to any country under this act whenever he determines that the rate of expenditures by such country from its own funds for defense and military purposes is less than the rate at which such expenditures were made by such country during that one of the fiscal years 1948, 1949, and 1950 in which such expenditures by such country were at the highest rate."

The purpose of the amendment, Mr. President, is to make certain that each country we propose to assist will spend as much for defense and military purposes in the future as the highest amount spent in either of the fiscal years 1948, 1949, and 1950.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be received, printed, and will lie on the table.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 494) to extend for 2 months the existing suspension of certain import taxes on copper, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

INVESTIGATION OF CAUSE OF INCREASING UNEMPLOYMENT IN CERTAIN INDUSTRIES—EXTENSION OF TIME TO MAKE REPORT

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the time granted the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare to report the results of its investigation under Senate Resolution 274, to investigate the cause of increasing unemployment in certain industries, be extended from July 5 to July 15. This request is made in behalf of both the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], the other two members of the subcommittee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from West Virginia? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

MESSAGE OF GREETING FROM THE PRESIDENT TO SIXTH ANNUAL DINNER MEETING OF THE LIBERAL PARTY OF NEW YORK

[Mr. LEHMAN asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a message of greeting to the Sixth Annual Dinner meeting of the Liberal Party of New York, held on June 14, 1950, which appears in the Appendix.]

"BUZZ-SAW BILL" BENTON, IDEA MAN—ARTICLE FROM WATERBURY SUNDAY REPUBLICAN

[Mr. MCMAHON asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a sketch of the career of Senator BENTON contained in an article entitled "'Buzz-Saw BILL' BENTON, Idea Man," published in the Waterbury (Conn.) Sunday Republican of June 25, 1950, which appears in the Appendix.]

SOLICITOR GENERAL PHILIP B. PERLMAN—STATEMENT BY THE ATTORNEY GENERAL AND ARTICLE FROM THE BALTIMORE SUN

[Mr. TYDINGS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a statement by the Attorney General on the record of Solicitor General Philip H. Perlman before the United States Supreme Court and an article on the same subject published in the Baltimore Sun of Monday, June 26, 1950, which appear in the Appendix]

UNITED WE STAND—EDITORIAL FROM THE WASHINGTON DAILY NEWS

[Mr. LUCAS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled "United We Stand," published in the Washington Daily News of June 28, 1950, which appears in the Appendix.]

AN APPEAL FOR ACTION ON THE ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY PROPOSAL

[Mr. WILEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a statement prepared by him on the subject of the current international crisis and the necessity for the construction of the St. Lawrence seaway, together with statements of communications from a number of farm organizations, which appear in the Appendix.]

MIDWEST DAIRY SQUEEZE—ARTICLE BY ALFRED D. STEDMAN

[Mr. THYE asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled "United States Report Confirms Midwest Dairy Squeeze," written by Alfred D. Stedman and published in the St. Paul (Minn.) Pioneer Press of June 27, 1950, which appears in the Appendix.]

SOKOL DAY—PROCLAMATION OF MAYOR WILLIAM O'DWYER

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, Mayor William O'Dwyer, of the city of New York, has proclaimed the day of July 2 Sokol Day in honor of the Sokol organization and its twelfth convocation to be held in New York on that date. The Sokol organization comprises Americans of Czechoslovak descent. It is a fine organization of high and patriotic purpose. I am glad to be able to request the unanimous consent of the Senate to insert the text of the proclamation of Mayor O'Dwyer in the body of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the proclamation was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CITY OF NEW YORK,
OFFICE OF THE MAYOR,
New York, N. Y.

PROCLAMATION

Whereas among the many races and nations that have contributed to the prosperity and glory of the United States are those who have come to our shores from Czechoslovakia; and

Whereas the character of these people and their love of liberty were molded largely by the Sokol organization, which has played so large a part in their lives; and

Whereas the Sokols in Czechoslovakia struggled against Nazi tyranny and when World War II was over again set forth to rebuild democracy in their land, only to be stopped by the Communist coup which overtook their nation; and

Whereas many Sokol members in Czechoslovakia have been killed or imprisoned because of their love for America and democracy:

Now, therefore, I, William O'Dwyer, Mayor of the City of New York, do hereby proclaim July 2, 1950, as Sokol Day in New York City, and call the attention of all our citizens to the great sacrifices in the name of human freedom and dignity that have been made by members of this fine organization both here and in their native land.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the city of New York to be affixed this 13th day of June 1950.

WILLIAM O'DWYER, Mayor.
By WILLIAM J. DONAGHUE,
Executive Secretary to the Mayor.

NURSERIES AND NURSERY SCHOOLS IN THE DISTRICT—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. HUNT. Mr. President, I submit a conference report on the bill (S. 3258) to continue a system of nurseries and nursery schools for the day care of school-age and under-school-age children in the District of Columbia, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be read for the information of the Senate.

The report read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3258) to continue a system of nurseries and nursery schools for the day care of school-age and under-school-age children in the District of Columbia, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following: "That section 2 of the Act entitled 'An Act to authorize and direct the Board of Public Welfare of the District of Columbia to establish and operate in the public schools and other suitable locations a system of nurseries and nursery schools for day care of school-age and under-school-age children, and for other purposes', approved July 16, 1946, as amended, is amended by striking out 'until June 30, 1950, and no longer' and inserting in lieu thereof 'until June 30, 1953, and no longer'.

"SEC. 2. Section 3 of such Act is amended to read as follows:

" 'SEC. 3. The Board is authorized to make and enforce rules and regulations governing admission to and use and enjoyment of said nurseries and nursery schools, including the fixing of fees to be charged parents for care and maintenance therein of their children; which fees shall, as near as practicable, equal the expenditures of the District of Columbia for personal services, labor, food, and supplies in the operation and maintenance of such nurseries and nursery schools or to enter into contracts with any private or public agency or agencies for such care and maintenance: Provided, That the Board may, in cases where parents are unable to pay for such care waive all or part of such fees. All fees collected under the provisions of this Act shall be paid to the Collector of Taxes of the District of Columbia and deposited into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of an account to be known as "Miscellaneous trust-fund deposits, District of Columbia—Day Care Nurseries," said fund to be available, in addition to appropriations made pursuant to section 4 of this Act, for expenditure for the purposes of this Act: Provided further, That such fund shall be audited and disbursed in the same manner as other trust funds are audited and disbursed by the District of Columbia: And provided further, That any balance remaining in such trust-fund account after June 30, 1953, shall be covered into the Treasury to the credit of miscellaneous receipts of the District of Columbia.'

"SEC. 3. Section 4 of such Act is amended to read as follows:

" 'SEC. 4. There is authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1951, and for each of the two succeeding fiscal years, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the District of Columbia not otherwise appropriated, not exceeding $100,000 to carry out the purposes of this Act.'

"SEC. 4. Section 2 of this Act shall take effect upon enactment."

And the House agree to the same.

ESTES KEFAUVER,
MARGARET CHASE SMITH,
Managers on the Part of the Senate.

JOHN L. MCMILLAN,
W. K. GRANGER,
Managers on the Part of the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the conference report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, so that all rights may be protected, will the Senator from Wyoming say what this report is all about? There is much confusion in the Senate Chamber.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate will be in order. Does the Senator from Nebraska reserve the right to object?

Mr. WHERRY. No; but I have not heard what the request was, and I did not want the report to be agreed to without a statement from the distinguished Senator from Wyoming telling us what it provides.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The conference report on Senate bill 3258 is before the Senate. The Senator from Wyoming is recognized.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. President, on the 30th of June the present law with reference to children's day nurseries in the District of Columbia will expire. The conference committee report is unanimous. The two Houses were is disagreement on only one feature. The Senate bill provided for a permanent day-nursery program, the House bill provided for a 1-year nursery program. The compromise was for a 3-year program.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I appreciate the distinguished Senator's statement. There is no objection, and I ask for a vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF MUTUAL DEFENSE ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1949

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3809) to amend the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT].

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I move that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration, in executive session, of the nomination of Hon. Willis W. Ritter, of Utah, to be United States district judge for the district of Utah.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does not the Senator from Illinois desire to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business?

Mr. LUCAS. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois does not have to move to lay aside the unfinished business.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I wonder if the Senator would withhold his motion. I have an amendment, which is pending, to Senate bill 3809, and I desire to propose a substitute for it which I think is satisfactory to the chairman of the committee. We might have that acted on.

Mr. LUCAS. I withhold that motion.

Mr. TAFT. I withdraw the amendment which was offered, and I offer the other amendment as a substitute for it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 10, line 1, after the period it is proposed to insert the following new sentence:

The fair value shall not be less for the various categories of equipment or materials than the "value" as defined in subsection (c) of section 403: Provided, That with respect to excess equipment or materials the fair value may not be determined to be less than the value specified in paragraph 1 of that subsection plus (a) 10 percent of the original gross cost of such equipment or materials; (b) the scrap value; or (c) the market value, if ascertainable, whichever is the greater.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT].

The amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Swanson, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed, without amendment, the bill (S. 3527) to amend section 14 (b) of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (E. 2596) relating to education or training of veterans under title II of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act (Public Law 346, 78th Cong., June 22, 1944).

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3258) to continue a system of nurseries and nursery schools for the day care of school-age and under-school-age children in the District of Columbia.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3776) to amend and extend the provisions of the District of Columbia Emergency Rent Act, as amended.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5002) to incorporate the Reserve Officers Association of the United States.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I renew the motion I made a moment ago, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business for the consideration of the nomination of Hon. Willis W. Ritter, of Utah, to be United States district judge for the district of Utah.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question in on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, that motion is debatable; is it not?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. WHERRY. I wish to advise the distinguished majority leader that the only Senator I know who is interested in the nomination is the Senator from Utah [Mr. WATKINS]. He is now at the Pentagon Building attempting to secure some information on a military matter. We shall do our best to get the Senator here. In order to protect him I believe it will be necessary to have a quorum call. I wonder if the Senator from Illinois is willing to withhold the motion for a few minutes until the Senator from Utah returns to the floor. I do not have any explanation to make or any defense to offer so far as the Senator from Utah is concerned, because the majority leader did say he would take up the nomination in question some time this afternoon. I imagine, however, the distinguished Senator from Utah felt the nomination would be taken up later in the afternoon, at the hour when an executive session is generally held. I do not object to making the nomination the pending business, but I should like very much to have the Senator from Utah present when the nomination is considered, so he may present his case in respect to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion to go into executive session is not debatable. The Chair was mistaken when, a moment ago, he said it is debatable.

Mr. WHERRY. So long as the majority leader has moved that the Senate proceed to consider executive business I wonder if he has any objection to taking up the treaties on the calendar. If that were done it would give us a little more time to get the Senator from Utah here.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Hickenlooper	Millikin
Anderson	Hill	Morse
Benton	Hoey	Mundt
Bricker	Holland	Murray
Bridges	Humphrey	Neely
Butler	Hunt	O'Mahoney
Byrd	Ives	Robertson
Cain	Johnson, Tex.	Russell
Chapman	Kefauver	Saltonstall
Connally	Kem	Schoeppel
Cordon	Knowland	Smith, Maine
Darby	Langer	Smith, N. J.
Donnell	Leahy	Sparkman
Douglas	Lehman	Stennis
Ecton	Lodge	Taft
Ellender	Lucas	Thomas, Utah
Ferguson	McCarran	Thye
Flanders	McCarthy	Tobey
Frear	McClellan	Tydings
Fulbright	McFarland	Watkins
Gillette	McKellar	Wherry
Green	McMahon	Wiley
Gurney	Magnuson	Williams
Hayden	Malone	Withers
Hendrickson	Martin

The VICE PRESIDENT. A quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Illinois that the Senate proceed to consider executive business.

That motion is not debatable.

Mr. DONNELL and Mr. HUMPHREY addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. For what purpose does the Senator rise?

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, is debate precluded?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Debate is precluded on the motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. DONNELL. May I request unanimous consent to present certain matters with reference to the railroad strike and the importance of the early enactment of Senate bill 3463?

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, after the motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business is agreed to, other matters are debatable, and then the Senator may proceed with his remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. However, the motion to proceed to consider executive business is not debatable. After the Senate proceeds to the consideration of executive business, motions may be made and are debatable.

The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Illinois that the Senate proceed to consider executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

THE RAILROAD STRIKE

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, on yesterday I called the attention of the Senate to the importance of early enactment of the bill (S. 3463). This bill it will be recalled, makes unlawful any strike or any lock-out arising out of or in connection with a dispute falling within the purview of the Railway Labor Act.

I called attention particularly yesterday in a portion of my remarks to the very critical situation arising at this particular moment in our Nation's history by reason of the fact that iron ore shipments are being impeded because of the fact that the Great Northern Railway is among the lines of railroads which are being struck in the presently existing strike.

In the Washington Post of yesterday there was printed an article which was inserted in the RECORD, the headline of which is "Great Northern Railroad Service Curtailed," and in the course of that article appeared these sentences:

The switchmen's strike, which began Sunday, forced the Great Northern today to cancel all service on 12 branch lines.

Great Northern spokesmen said pickets and the reluctance of nonstrikers to cross their lines made it difficult to maintain even limited service, although main-line passenger trains and some freights still were operating.

SUPERVISORS LOAD ORE

Supervisory employees took over the job of loading ore boats at the Great Northern's huge docks at Superior, Wis., but the movement of iron ore from Minnesota's Mesabi range was running far behind schedule.

Mr. President, this morning's Baltimore Sun contains an article from the Associated Press, being a dispatch from Chicago under date of June 28, which gives us no hope, so far as I see, with respect to an early solution of the strike difficulties, involving, among other things, the critical situation with respect to iron ore. The article reads:

RAIL STRIKE TALKS FAIL—MAKES 47,100 WORKERS IDLE, INCLUDING 5,000 MINERS

CHICAGO, June 28.—Government mediators held another round of conferences today but reported no progress toward ending the railroad strike.

"We're still passing the ball around the infield," remarked Leverett Edwards, a member of the National Railway Mediation Board.

Some 4,000 A. F. of L. switchmen struck Sunday against five western and midwestern lines. Three other rail unions have threatened a Nation-wide rail strike after July 15.

The four unions are protesting a Presidential fact-finding board recommendation turning down the demands of 79,000 ground workers for a 40-hour workweek at 48 hours' pay. The Board, in its June 15 ruling, granted a 40-hour week, but at a pay increase of only 18 cents an hour.

The rail strike has made at least 47,100 workers idle, including 41,000 railroad employees, 5,000 Utah coal miners and 1,100 Utah smelter workers.

The Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific has laid off 21,000; the Denver & Rio Grande Western, 8,500; the Western Pacific, 4,500; the Chicago Great Western, 3,500; and the Great Northern, 3,500.

The Great Northern is the only one of the five strike-bound railroads to continue operations. It has laid off 3,500 seasonal track workers and plans to lay off 2,260 shop workers tomorrow. It said that if the strike continues to Friday—

Mr. President, that is tomorrow—

if the strike continues to Friday, it will have laid off 23,000 of its 28,000 employees.

Mr. President, this morning an important hearing has been in progress before a subcommittee of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare of the Senate with respect to the bill, S. 3463. In the course of the testimony adduced today was a statement by Mr. D. P. Loomis, who occupies an important official position with respect to the western railways, and who is probably as well informed upon the subject as any other man connected with the railway industry, at least from the standpoint of the carriers. He informed the subcommittee this morning that in his judgment, on the five struck railways there are, he thinks, as many as 60,000, and in his opinion the number may be nearer 80,000, railroad cars out of service, idle at this time when the Nation needs transportation service and the cars of our great railroad facilities.

Mr. President, I emphasize at this time the fact that in these great industrial conflicts in the railroad industry the parties in interest are not solely the employees who are striking. Indeed, the evidence submitted for the RECORD yesterday shows that a comparatively small proportion of the employees of the railroads themselves are striking. It was disclosed, for illustration, that in the case of the Chicago Great Western Railway Co., which serves 6 States, only 256 employees are represented by the switchmen's union out of a total of 3,631 employees of the railroad, and yet this approximately 7 percent of the total number of employees has caused that railroad to close down.

In the case of the Great Northern Railway Co., only 1,225 employees out of 27,596 are represented by the switchmen's union. Yet, as I have indicated, in this critical hour when, certainly if any item of commodity should be transported freely and without restriction it is the iron ore produced in our country, a great part of which comes from the Mesabi Range, serviced by the Great Northern Railway Co., that railway company is seriously curtailed in its operations and, as previously indicated this morning, the movement of iron ore from Minnesota's Mesabi Range was, according to the report in the Washington Post of yesterday, far behind schedule.

This is not the only industry, however, that is affected. I come from the central part of the country, from the State of Missouri. In that State and the other States which are engaged in great farming operations, the grain movement is at the present moment in progress, but it is being badly impeded by the action of the railroad employees in striking.

I quote, Mr. President, from an article appearing in the Baltimore Sun of yesterday, June 28, 1950, as follows:

A Rock Island spokesman said that if the strike continues for any length of time it "may pose a serious threat" in the Nation's Wheat Belt.

In Washington, Representative HOPE, Republican, of Kansas, voiced a similar apprehension, saying that the walk-out has created "a most serious situation" in the wheat States.

"The Rock Island Railroad, which traverses some of the most important wheat areas in this country, has been forced to close down just as harvest is getting under way," he said.

"This means no outlet for millions of bushels of grain already in storage in elevators along the Rock Island and which must be moved out before the new crop can be received."

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the entire article from which I have just read, published in the Baltimore Sun of June 28, 1950, be inserted in the body of the RECORD, at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RAIL SWITCHMEN STRIKE ENTERS FOURTH DAY

CHICAGO, June 28.—A switchmen's strike against five midwestern and western railroads entered its fourth day today.

Thousands of nonrail workers were being forced into idleness, and there was no immediate sign of a break.

Four of the five roads struck have shut down. The fifth has reduced operations.

The A. F. of L. Switchmen's Union of North America walked off the job on the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific, the Great Northern, the Denver & Rio Grande Western, the Western Pacific, and the Chicago Great Western Sunday morning.

They are protesting a June 15 recommendation by a Presidential fact-finding board.

EIGHTEEN-CENT BOOST

The board suggested granting a request for a 40-hour workweek but denied pay for 48 hours. The fact finders suggested an 18-cent-an-hour wage boost with the 40-hour week instead.

Leverett Edwards, National (railway) Mediation Board member, said yesterday after talks with railroad executives:

"Things look dim. There is no indication of a quick settlement."

As the strike went on, its effects were felt:

The rail strike spread to the National Tube Co., at Lorain, Ohio, where 12,000 men were idled. The 1-day walk-out ended last night.

Company officials conferred today on whether to reopen in the face of a planned 2-week annual holiday starting Sunday.

WILDCAT STRIKE

The shutdown followed a wildcat strike by 800 BRT members. They were protesting the same board report that led to the switchmen's strike.

The Great Northern Railway halted operations on 15 branch lines, shut down repair shops in 5 cities, and announced last night system-wide reductions in personnel in all departments. The G. N. was the one struck road which was trying to keep rolling.

Five thousand coal miners were laid off in Utah mines using the D. & R. G. W. lines.

Mediation Board officials held talks yesterday not only with the rail executives but with chieftains from four unions as well. Other rail unions besides the switchmen may walk off the job July 15.

TWENTY-ONE THOUSAND MILES SERVED

The five struck railroads serve a total of more than 21,000 miles of territory in the Midwest, Southwest, and Far West.

Of the total, the Great Northern has 8,333 miles of tracks; the Rock Island, 8,000; the Chicago Great Western, 1,500; Western Pacific, 1,195; and the Denver & Rio Grande Western, 2,413.

In Chicago, headquarters for the Rock Island and the Chicago Great Western, spokesmen said all freight had been delivered before the strike became effective. No further freight is being accepted by either road until the strike ends.

FREIGHT TRUCKED

Both roads said all cities of importance served by either of the struck lines are served by at least one other operating railroad.

They said that in small towns served exclusively by either of the two carriers freight is being trucked to points where other rail transportation is available.

The Rock Island said daily through-passenger trains out of Chicago idled by the strike total 23. Most seriously affected by the strike in the Chicago area are between 30,000 and 35,000 commuters who use the Rock Island's 108 suburban trains between Chicago's Loop and their homes.

In addition, more than 50 freight trains that move over the Rock Island system daily have been halted by the walk-out.

The number of Chicago Great Western trains idled by the strike was not available.

WHEAT CROP THREATENED

A Rock Island spokesman said that if the strike continues for any length of time it "may pose a serious threat" in the Nation's Wheat Belt.

In Washington, Representative HOPE, Republican, of Kansas, voiced a similar apprehension, saying that the walk-out has created "a most serious situation" in the wheat States.

"The Rock Island Railroad, which traverses some of the most important wheat-growing areas in this country, has been forced to close down just as harvest is getting under way," he said.

"This means no outlet for millions of bushels of grain already in storage in elevators along the Rock Island and which must be moved out before the new crop can be received."

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, earlier in the course of the same article reference is made to the Great Northern Railway in this language:

The Great Northern Railway halted operations on 15 branch lines—

It will be noted, incidentally, that that is two more than were reported to the Senate yesterday on which operations had been halted. Continuing, the article says, referring to the Great Northern Railway—shut down repair shops in five cities, and announced last night system-wide reductions in personnel in all departments. The Great Northern was one struck road which was trying to keep rolling.

I see on the floor of the Senate the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare and the chairman of the subcommittee which has this morning been in session, the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS]. He will be interested, of course, in the fact, as are we all, to quote further from the Baltimore Sun of yesterday:

Five thousand coal miners were paid off in Utah mines using the D. & R. G. W. lines.

Mr. President, these railway strikes are a public menace. They are injurious to our people, to our national economy, and could readily be injurious to the national safety.

In the Washington News of June 27, 1950, there appeared an article entitled "New Rail Strike Is Threatened. 250,000 Trainmen Involved."

I pause, Mr. President, before further comment on this article, to say that, while I am interested in the trainmen, while I am interested in the owners of securities of railroad companies—and I have no doubt that many a widow, many a man of modest means, and many an estate hold the securities of the railway systems—while I am interested in all those people, of course, as members of our great economy and as members of our citizenry, my interest in the bill which was introduced on April 21 of this year and on which hearings have been in progress and will again be in progress on Monday of next week, is not primarily because of the employees of the railroads, not primarily because of the interests of those who are striking, not primarily because of the interests of those who own the railroads. In all those elements I am interested, of course, in the employer and employee alike, but I am interested primarily in the 140,000,000 or perhaps 150,000,000 of our population who have a direct interest in all sorts and types of ways of keeping the transportation facilities of the Nation open.

Mr. President, many and many a situation may develop, and doubtless is now developing, because of which industries apparently far remote from the railway industry will be adversely, dangerously, and seriously affected by the fact that this great railway strike is in progress.

The article from which I was about to read, which appeared in the Washington News, comes from Chicago under date of June 27, and says:

Mediators began talks today to head off a threatened walk-out of 250,000 railroad trainmen and conductors as a strike of 4,000 switchmen against five Western roads slowed—

I invite attention to this and I emphasize it by my voice—slowed iron-ore shipments on the Great Lakes. The Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen and the Order of Railway Conductors, which threaten to strike against the Nation's railroads July 15 for a shorter workweek, sent representatives to meet with Chairman Francis O'Neill of the National Railway Mediation Board.

W. P. Kennedy, BRT president—

BRT means the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen—said there was little reason for optimism at this late hour for a peaceful settlement.

Little reason for optimism at this late hour for a peaceful settlement, Mr. President. Does it occur to any of the Members of the Senate why there should be a different rule pertaining to us as citizens in regard to the settlement of our controversies which are all peacefully settled? Certainly any settlement which is not made peacefully is made in defiance of law. Is there any reason why there should be applied to railroad disputes a different rule than that under which you, Mr. President, and I operate when we go to court, rather than resort to some type of force one against the other?

Why should the rule applicable to us be different from the rule applicable in the case of the great railway industry of the country? Yet in the case of the railway industry economic force, which is but an euphemistic term in describing a strike, is used.

So, Mr. President, when we are told by Mr. Kennedy, the president of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, that at this late hour there is little reason for optimism for a peaceful settlement, what is the reason? The railway industry is impressed with a great public interest—not the general industries of the country, not the manufacturing industries, but the great railway interests, the closing of which means paralysis of our Nation. Why should they not settle their disputes under some binding, final decision of a governmental board, just as a court decides controversies between citizens?

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. Although the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Oregon do not agree on the so-called Donnell railway bill——

Mr. DONNELL. Senate bill 3463.

Mr. MORSE. Senate bill 3463—the Senator from Oregon will take advantage of this opportunity to assure the Senator from Missouri that he agrees with the Senator from Missouri that the existing railway strike should come to to an end immediately, and that the threatened railway strike on July 15 should not become effective.

If the Senator will permit me to do so, unless there are objections, I should like to reinforce the position of the Senator from Missouri in regard to bringing to an end the existing strike. I shall make my remarks very brief.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption at that point?

Mr. MORSE. Certainly.

Mr. DONNELL. I have no objection to the Senator making his remarks, but I desire to make it clear at this point that, while I think the industrial welfare of our country demands that we should not be subject to railway strikes, to my mind, in the first place, our committee is not the body which should settle a strike. It is not a body which is equipped to do so, but we should follow the plan set forth in the bill of having a governmental board established with authority finally to decide, as provided within the terms of the bill, that no strike, and no lockout by a carrier, arising out of a dispute within the purview of the Railway Labor Act, shall be legal.

I yield to the Senator with pleasure, provided that I shall not lose my position upon the floor.

Mr. MORSE. I desire to say on the floor of the Senate what I said in committee this morning. In substance, I think the railway brotherhoods find themselves in the position of having had their day in court. They have had a hearing before an emergency board. A decision has been rendered. They do not agree with the decision. Under the Railway Labor Act as it is now written they have a right to disagree with the decision. They have 30 days within which to try to work out some settlement of the dispute over and above the decision rendered by the emergency board. That clearly is the spirit and intent of the Railway Labor Act of 1926.

I want to be perfectly fair to the brotherhoods. I am well aware of the fact that even to make the suggestion that the existing strike should come to an immediate end, and any threat of a strike on July 15 should cease, will subject me to a certain amount of criticism in certain quarters. Nevertheless, I want to say now to the brotherhoods that, in view of the critical situation which faces America in the world today, they are in an indefensible position to be even talking about a strike. I think the duty rests upon the railroad brotherhoods who are involved to make perfectly clear that there will be no economic action on their part even though they do not like the decision which was rendered by the emergency board.

However, Mr. President, as I said this morning to Mr. Carter Fort, general counsel of the carriers, I think the carriers, too, need to keep in mind that over the week end they should make a good faith attempt to mediate their differences with the brotherhoods. It is not for me to suggest what the terms of the mediation should be, but I am satisfied that the carriers apparently are not giving full consideration to the intent of the original act insofar as the 30-day cooling-off period following an emergency board decision is concerned.

I have made an intensive study over the years of the history of the Railway Labor Act. It was not intended that an Emergency Board's decision should be final and binding automatically upon the parties, but that either side should be perfectly free to reject a decision of the Emergency Board, have a 30-day period within which to try to reach a mediated settlement with the opposing party, and, failing in that, to resort to economic action. However, the point I wish to stress is that the situation in America today is quite different from the situation on the day the Emergency Board in the instant case handed down its report. Today, as the chairman of the committee said this morning, America is in peril. When America is in peril no labor organization and no group of employers can justify any economic action one against the other that disrupts our economy as seriously as a railroad strike is bound to disrupt it. I am satisfied, Mr. President, that the carriers and brotherhoods, if they would proceed in good faith, could reach a mediated settlement of their differences in a matter of a very few hours.

I thank the Senator from Missouri for the courtesy he has extended to me, and I wish to take advantage of this opportunity of agreeing with him, if I understood his remarks correctly, that this is no time for economic action on the part of either the carriers or brotherhoods. I should like to add, that it is the hour for both of these parties to face the realities of the situation. The brotherhoods have rejected an Emergency Board report, which they had a perfectly legal right to do under the existing law. However, conditions are different from what they were when the Emergency Board report was handed down. I think the American people have the right to call upon both parties to get themselves behind the doors of some hotel room in Washington, D. C., this week end and work out a conscionable compromise settling the differences between them, and announce to the American people and to the world that the existing strike is ended and that any talk of a strike on July 15 is also ended.

As I said to the brotherhoods in committee this morning, the people of America will not stand for any tie-up of America's railroads in this time of peril, and they should not. I desire also to say that I think the brotherhoods had better realize the fact that they stand in a position in which litigants frequently stand when a court hands down a decision against them. That is why I said to the brotherhoods in committee this morning, "If I were your lawyer I would have to tell you that the case is lost so far as some of your demands are concerned." However, they did make some gains. It seems to me that they should recognize that in future cases they may be able to make further gains on the merits of their arguments and evidence. But let them not forget that there may not be an opportunity in the future for peaceful settlements of American labor disputes if America does not keep itself strong to face and meet the international peril that now confronts it.

Therefore, I want to say to my many friends in the railway brotherhoods, and I want to say to the carriers—and I believe most carriers are my friends—"You do not stand in the same position today that you stood in when the emergency board report was handed down. You have a greater responsibility to the American people than you had then." I can understand how the carriers on the day the emergency board report was handed down would be inclined to say, "We have got to stand by that report. We are not going to yield a point over and above what the Emergency Board report provides." I can understand such a position, and there was quite a bit of merit in their saying "We will not agree to any changes in the Emergency Board report." I can understand how on that day the brotherhoods might have said, "This report is not satisfactory to us. Therefore we are going to use the 30-day cooling off period provided by the present act for mediation and use our right to resort to economic action if we do not reach a satisfactory agreement with the carriers." I can understand those points of view. I cannot understand their being applied today in light of present conditions.

I close, with my thanks to the Senator from Missouri and by again appealing to both parties: "Get yourselves in a hotel room today and reach a conscionable compromise on your differences, and present to the American people a united economic front as to running the railroads of the country in this hour of national peril."

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I am sure that the Senate is very much pleased to have the views of the distinguished Senator from Oregon. He and I disagree on certain fundamental principles with respect to railway legislation. Reverting for a moment to his proposal that employer and employee meet in a hotel room and work out a settlement, I take it, of course, that every person within the sound of my voice would be happy to see this strike over, and happy to see no further railway strikes impeding the progress of the Nation. However, I do not feel it is my function—nor is it my intention—to advise either side in this conflict, either the railway employer or the railway employee, what should be done. To my mind, Mr. President, the Railway Labor Act has left it open for either party to refuse to follow a finding of the Presidential Emergency Board. Upon the evidence that comes before us, which obviously would be insufficient, and would come before us without proper facilities for us to undertake to decide the question, it is not for me to say to the railroads, "You will make further concessions," or to say to the employees, "You will make further concessions." It may be that the Presidential Emergency Board has laid down the correct and final rule that should be followed. I shall not undertake to urge at this time that the railroads, if they believe their position is sound, should change it. On the other hand, if the employees think that their position is final, it is not for me to say that they should change their position. My point—and I think it is sound—is that the Railway Labor Act is itself at fault because it fails to provide what the courts provide with respect to disputes between individual citizens. If I go into a court in the State of Missouri or in the District of Columbia and assert a claim against my neighbor, or my friend—or my eneny, if there be such—the court renders a final decision, and that decision can be enforced by the processes of the law.

There, Mr. President, is indicated the defect in this act, the defect of leaving it as it is, as the distinguished Senator from Oregon, my close personal friend and seat mate, observed. I do not mean to say that he says the Railway Labor Act is defective in this respect, but I do say that he stated very correctly, as I understood him, that it was not intended by the Railway Labor Act that the findings of the Emergency Board should be final.

Mr. President, that is the defect in the Railway Labor Act as it exists today. If one bargaining party thinks he can get himself into a certain position if he consents, on the basis of the finding of the Emergency Board, that it is all right, and he will accept the finding, but if he loses he will then refuse to abide by the decision of the Board, obviously such a situation is unsound and decidedly opposed to the general welfare of the people of the Nation.

So, Mr. President, the bill which I have presented, and upon which the hearings have been in progress, is a bill which has for its purpose the amendment of the Railway Labor Act, without setting aside the processes of mediation or any of the processes of informal or voluntary agreement.

The point I make, and I want to drive it home as best I can, is that the Railway Labor Act, by leaving it open after the emergency boards have acted as to whether either party shall accept, simply encourages the losing party to say, "We will not accept, we will not do what the Presidential Emergency Board says is proper and we should do, because"—says the one who is thus objecting to the finding of the Board—"there is no provision making that finding obligatory and binding upon us."

Mr. President, I most earnestly urge the enactment of this bill, which leaves available all the provisions for voluntary processes, and simply provides clearly and definitely for making final and binding the decisions of the various boards, thus making it impossible for either party legally to refuse to accept the findings.

Mr. President, I shall not this afternoon enter into a detailed discussion of the bill. We shall discuss it at length on the floor of the Senate, of course, when it comes from the committee, if it does comes from the committee—and I hope it will. I shall not take up in detail the arguments with respect to the bill, but I wish to point out further, if I may, the facts which today exist in the switchmen's strike now in progress and which emphasize the urgent importance, yes, almost the dire necessity, of having it obligatory upon the railways and upon the railway employees to accept the findings of an impartial board created by the President of the United States.

Mr. President, I hold in my hand a clipping from the Des Moines Register of June 26, beginning, in its headlines, in ominous black type, "Not a Train is Moving on Four Railroads; Board's Final Appeal Unheeded by Union."

Then I read this:

> Four thousand A. F. of L. switchmen went on strike Sunday against five midwestern railroads.
> The walkouts stopped trains on four of the lines. The fifth railroad, the Great Northern, reported normal passenger operations over its 8,000-mile system but some curtailment of freight movement.

Let not the Senate forget what I emphasize again, what we found yesterday in the press, and what I put into the RECORD yesterday, that in this critical hour the movement of iron ore from Minnesota's Mesabi Range is running far behind schedule.

If it had been unlawful to strike upon the railways, I believe the patriotism, the sound common sense, and the sense of the importance of abiding by the law on the part of the railway employees would have caused them to comply with the provisions of the act as so amended, making obligatory the findings, and we would not have had a situation such as we now face.

The writer of this Associated Press article in the Des Moines Register proceeds to tell us what the other lines are:

> Eight-thousand-mile Rock Island system, the 2,413-mile Denver, Rio Grande and Western, the 1,500-mile Great Western, and the 1,195-mile Western Pacific.

Mr. President, as I recall, the distance around the world at the equator is only about 25,000 miles. Yet here we find 21,024 miles of railroad involved in this strike against the five railroads, or, if one prefers to disregard the Great Northern, with 8,317 miles, upon which there is some partial service, 12,707 miles of road are involved in the strike, because of the fact that the switchmen's union refuses to abide by the decision of the board set up by the Railway Labor Act, or, to quote the language of the headline to which I have referred, "Board's Final Appeal Unheeded by Union." Perhaps that headline may refer to mediation, I am not certain, but certainly the switchmen declined to follow the finding of the board created by the Railway Labor Act.

The article in the Des Moines Register contains various subheads, including, among others, these:

> Lines Idled.
> Railways' Position.
> Trains Canceled.
> Final Peace Plea.
> Rock Island Station Deserted Here.
> Waiting List.
> Busses Doubled.
> "Hiawatha" Loaded.
> Northwestern.
> No Pickets Seen.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the article in its entirety be set forth in my remarks at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NOT A TRAIN IS MOVING ON FOUR RAILROADS—BOARD'S FINAL APPEAL UNHEEDED BY UNION

CHICAGO, ILL.—Four thousand A. F. of L. switchmen went on strike Sunday against five large western and midwestern railroads.

The walk-out stopped trains on four of the lines. The fifth railroad, the Great Northern, reported normal passenger operations over its 8,000-mile system but some curtailment of freight movement.

The railroad said only 60 Great Northern switchmen are members of the striking Switchmen's Union of North America. The majority are members of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen.

LINES IDLED

The other lines struck are the 8,000-mile Rock Island system, the 2,413-mile Denver, Rio Grande & Western, the 1,500-mile Great Western, and the 1,195-mile Western Pacific.

Arthur J. Glover, president of the union, said in announcing "our strike is on," that the major issue is the 40-hour week and that many switchmen now work 48 and 56 hours a week without overtime pay.

RAILWAYS' POSITION

A spokesman for the railroads said the real issue is compensation for the 40-hour week. He said Glover turned down a Presidential fact-finding board's recommendation of 40-hour week and an 18-cent hourly wage increase.

He said the few switchmen who work 56 hours a week do so because they want pay for an extra 8 hours weekly.

The union is asking 48 hours pay for a 40-hour week, equivalent to an hourly increase of 31 cents.

TRAINS CANCELED

The strike at 6 a. m., local standard time, found the four roads most affected virtually idle. All trains scheduled to depart after the deadline and most of those that could not reach destinations before strike time were canceled.

However, the Rock Island reported some freight trains were on its main line. Members of the striking union had instructions from their strike committee to remain on the job until these trains reached their destinations.

The strike began peacefully. In Chicago, the police department reported that only one officer was assigned to strike duty at the Rock Island yards. Acting as an observer, he took a station in a switch tower and reported all quiet.

The men on strike are, for the most part, yard employees who operate manual switches.

FINAL PEACE PLEA

Efforts of the National (Railway) Mediation Board to avert the strike continued until a few hours before the walk-out. Francis J. O'Neill, Jr., Board chairman, wired union president Glover a request that the strike be postponed until Tuesday, when he has scheduled a meeting with two other unions to discuss the Presidential Board's 40-hour week and 18-cent-raise proposal.

Glover replied immediately that he did not agree to any postponement.

The walk-out is the Nation's second big railroad strike in 40 days.

The May 10–15 strike of the locomotive firemen and enginemen against five key rail systems was called off when both sides agreed to submit unsettled issues to binding arbitration.

ROCK ISLAND STATION DESERTED HERE

The Rock Island Railroad station here had all the atmosphere of a ghost-town depot Sunday.

The same general paralysis affected the Great Western's operations in Iowa.

Meanwhile, ticket agents at other operating railroad lines, bus stations, and airlines were being driven to distraction by telephoned inquiries from frantic would-be travelers.

Bus lines, other railroads, and airlines all were adding extra equipment to handle a sudden flurry of business.

United and Mid-Continent Airlines each adedd an extra airplane to Sunday evening flights. United added a 5:30 p. m. eastbound DC–4, seating 44 extra passengers, with the intention of continuing it daily until the strike is settled.

WAITING LIST

Mid-Continent added a 21-passenger DC–3 to its 7:15 p. m. flight to Kansas City, Mo. The extra section will be continued if needed, the airline reported. It had a waiting list Sunday.

In no case, however, was the increase in passenger volume anywhere near the number of telephone inquiries received.

By midafternoon Sunday, ticket agents had received hundreds of calls from persons who weren't familiar with schedules and couldn't make up their minds.

Most affected was the Jefferson bus line, with routes closely paralleling Rock Island Railroad lines to the north and south.

BUSSES DOUBLED

The number of Jefferson busses was doubled on all lines, tripled on many. The rush started at midnight Saturday when persons en route to Kansas City or Minneapolis, Minn., were caught by the strike.

About 20 extra drivers also were put to work by the Overland Greyhound Bus Line, which operates east to Chicago, Ill., west to the coast, and covers much of central, eastern, western, and northern Iowa.

HIAWATHA LOADED

Extra cars were added Sunday to the Milwaukee Railroad's Hiawatha and Arrow, with east-west connections at Madrid.

At Des Moines, about 160 extra passengers were diverted from the Rock Island to the Milwaukee line, according to Harry W. Warren, division freight and passenger agent for the Milwaukee line.

"Our freight yards are full of cars diverted from Rock Island, too," he added. "It's going to be a heavy task to do our own job and also handle Rock Island's work.

"But for the duration of the strike, we will add enough extra cars to accommodate passenger and freight travel."

NORTH WESTERN

The North Western Railroad, operating east and west through Iowa, added all the extra cars it can spare, said Fred Way, the line's passenger agent here.

The Minneapolis & St. Louis line, which operates a train from Des Moines to Minneapolis, was expecting to receive a lot of passenger traffic that might otherwise patronize the Rock Island. Addition of extra cars were expected.

The line also will have to handle freight for Hawkeye and Penn Dixie cement plants here without the normal help of the two struck lines.

The Wabash line, operating passenger service from Des Moines to St. Louis, Mo., was not using extra equipment Sunday but was contemplating the possibility of adding equipment if the strike is prolonged.

All railroad, bus, and airline spokesmen expressed confidence that increased freight and passenger traffic will be handled without too much delay.

Ticket agents at the strike-bound Rock Island Railroad station said arrangements are being made to transfer all passengers and freight to other railroad or bus lines.

Present plans call for an agent to be on duty 24 hours per day to handle arrangements and to answer inquiries. Telephone service will be limited to the hours between 8 a. m. and 4 p. m., the agents said.

NO PICKETS SEEN

There was no evidence Sunday of picketing either at the Rock Island station or at the union station, where the Great Western's offices are located. The magazine stand and lunch counter at the Rock Island station were planning to close today.

The policy of both strike-bound railroads was stated in a sign placed in front of the Rock Island ticket office. It read:

"Account strike all trains annulled."

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I note in this article in black-face type this significant sentence:

The walk-out is the Nation's second big railroad strike in 40 days.

We have heard it said that the Railway Labor Act was insurance against railway strikes. I myself desire to pay tribute to that act and to its authors, because it has contributed much of benefit to the Nation. Yet it will be recalled, so clearly that no Member of the Senate can forget it, that in one of the official publications of the Mediation Board only a very few years ago, from which I have previously quoted in the Senate, it is pointed out that the record of the Railway Labor Act, notwithstanding the peaceful settlements, does not bode well for the future. Those are not my words, those are the words of the National Mediation Board created by the Railway Labor Act.

This morning the New York Times brings this tragic history down to date. I read the headline over an article appearing in the New York Times, a great newspaper, which circulates on weekdays among over 500,000 persons—I am not sure whether they are all subscribers—and on Sundays among over a million. This great newspaper contains this headline:

Rail strike held jamming defense. Carriers' aide says iron ore waits. Early peace is declared unlikely.

Let me read just a little from this article:

Daniel P. Loomis—

Who was one of the witnesses this morning before the subcommittee of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare of the Senate—

Daniel P. Loomis, chairman of the Western Carriers Conference Committee, indicated today—

That is, yesterday—that the strike of 4,000 switchmen on five western and midwestern roads had affected important defense and other projects.

At this hour important defense and other projects have been affected, so Mr. Loomis tells us, by this strike.

At a press luncheon arranged by the Association of American Railroads, Mr. Loomis said that iron-ore shipments from the Mesabi Range, already late because of other factors, was being further delayed by the strike.

The peak of wheat shipments was already under way when the strike began, and this has been held up, he declared.

Mr. Loomis said the Rock Island Railroad alone served exclusively 1,184 grain elevators. These are isolated by the strike.

A rough estimate, he said, indicated that between 12 and 15 percent of all shipments carried by all western roads had been delayed because of the strike, which began 4 days ago.

Mr. President, it is not merely the five railroads that are involved. He is talking about all western railroads. He says from 12 to 15 percent of all shipments on all of them have been delayed because of the strike.

Then I quote from what Mr. Loomis says about the Senate bill. I am going to read it notwithstanding my name is in it. I read as follows:

FAVORS ARBITRATION BILL

Mr. Loomis, leading spokesman for the carriers, said the only solution to recurring strikes and threats of strikes by rail workers lay in the bill offered by Senator FORREST C. DONNELL, Republican, of Missouri, providing compulsory arbitration of these disputes.

According to Mr. Loomis, the carriers have accepted every recommendation of the National (Railway) Mediation Board since 1941 while the railroad workers have rejected all but two of such recommendations.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. Does the Senator know whether or not it is true that in the present controversy at one time the National Mediation Board made a recommendation for settlement of this dispute, which the brotherhoods accepted, but which the carriers rejected, and that it was following that, that events led to the appointment of an emergency board?

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I am unable to answer that question. It may have been testified about. I do not know. But the point I am making is this: I am not here advocating the side of either the carriers on the one hand or the employees on the other. It makes no difference to me which one is right or which one is wrong. I think there should be compulsory arbitration because of the fact that every person, every man, woman, and child, old person, young person, every person, without regard to his color, race, or creed in our country, is directly affected by the railway industry. Regardless of whether the railroads are right or whether they are wrong in this controversy, I say that what we should have upon the law books of the Nation at this time and what we should soon have enacted is a law which makes it unlawful for a strike or a lock-out—a strike by the employees, a lock-out by the carriers—to be carried on with respect to any dispute under the purview of the Railway Labor Act.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. Knowing the Senator's devotion to accuracy, for which I have the greatest of admiration, I raised the point I did because of the quotation he just read from Mr. Loomis. The junior Senator from Oregon may be mistaken about it, but it is his understanding that at one stage of the present dispute the carriers did turn down the recommendation of the Mediation Board, and that resulted in the appointment of the emergency board.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I certainly defer to the knowledge and the memory of my good friend the Senator from Oregon. I may be entirely wrong. I am not certain which side in any of these disputes has been right. But we have had emergency boards created by the President which have made findings, just as did the War Labor Board, upon which my distinguished friend the Senator from Oregon sat with such great honor to himself and credit to the Nation. One side has refused to accept the findings. The testimony seems to indicate to me that in the main and perhaps entirely, though I am not sure of it, it has been the employees who have refused to accept. But I care not one whit whether it is the employees or the employers who have refused to accept the findings of these boards. I say, Mr. President, we should pass a law which compels both of them, employers and employees, to abide by the decisions of these boards, and not put the public to the inconvenience and the suffering and the possible danger of national disaster arising because of the fact that controversies exist and cannot be settled between them.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at this point in my remarks there be set forth in full the article from which I quoted from the New York Times entitled "Rail Strike Held Jamming Defense," and also the further article immediately thereunder entitled "Early Peace Unlikely."

There being no objection, the articles referred to were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RAIL STRIKE HELD JAMMING DEFENSE—CARRIERS' AIDE SAYS IRON ORE WAITS—EARLY PEACE IS DECLARED UNLIKELY

WASHINGTON, June 28.—Daniel P. Loomis, chairman of the Western Carriers Conference Committee, indicated today that the strike of 4,000 switchmen on five western and midwestern roads had affected important defense and other projects.

At a press luncheon arranged by the Association of American Railroads Mr. Loomis said that iron-ore shipments from the Mesabi Range, already late because of other factors, was being further delayed by the strike.

The peak of wheat shipments was already under way when the strike began, and this has been held up, he declared.

Mr. Loomis said the Rock Island Railroad alone served exclusively 1,184 grain elevators. These are isolated by the strike.

A rough estimate, he said, indicated that between 12 and 15 percent of all shipments carried by all western roads had been delayed because of the strike, which began 4 days ago.

FAVORS ARBITRATION BILL

Mr. Loomis, leading spokesman for the carriers, said the only solution to recurring strikes and threats of strikes by rail workers lay in the bill offered by Senator FORREST C. DONNELL, Republican, of Missouri, providing compulsory arbitration of these disputes.

According to Mr. Loomis, the carriers have accepted every recommendation of the National (Railway) Mediation Board since 1941, while the railroad workers have rejected all but two such recommendations.

Compulsory arbitration is the only solution short of capitulating to the unions, he declared. His diagnosis of the labor-management difficulties was that the unions no longer accepted emergency board recommendations but use them as a basis from which to bargain for more concessions.

EARLY PEACE UNLIKELY

CHICAGO, June 28.—Prospects for early settlement of the switchmen's strike appeared dim tonight.

Francis A. O'Neill, Jr., Chairman of the National (Railway) Mediation Board, and Leverett Edwards, a board member, said tonight they had been in touch by telephone with the parties to the dispute, looking for a break that might warrant bringing them together in joint session.

The striking rail employees are members of the Switchmen's Union of North America, an affiliate of the American Federation of Labor. They struck Sunday against the Chicago & Great Western, the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific, the Denver & Rio Grande Western, the Western Pacific, and the Great Northern. The issue is their demand for maintenance of 48 hours a week take-home pay for a 40-hour week. A Presidential fact-finding board has awarded them the shorter workweek with an 18-cents-an-hour pay raise.

All the struck roads except the Great Northern suspended operations when the strike began. The Great Northern today continued its passenger service, but said it had halted operations on 15 branch lines, shut down its repair shops in five cities, and begun cutting personnel in all departments.

In Chicago 29,000 commuters who normally use the Rock Island suburban service continued to seek alternate transportation. Lloyd M. Johnson, commissioner of streets and electricity, said garbage collections had been interfered with because gondola cars to haul the refuse to dumps could no longer travel over the Pullman railroad of the struck Rock Island.

Mediators also were seeking to arrange sessions to avert a threatened strike of trainmen, yardmasters, and conductors, which may take place legally any time after July 15.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I have in my hand a short clipping from the Chicago Journal of Commerce dated June 22, 1950, 2 days ago, reading as follows:

RAIL WORKERS IDLE

About 32,000—

Then the next word is in blackface type, and I emphasize it as best I can by my voice—nonstriking—

About 32,000 nonstriking rail workers already have felt the effect of the strike of switchmen that has tied up five western railroads. The jobs of an additional 280,000 nonstrikers are in jeopardy. Prolonged for several weeks, the switchmen's walkout would hurt 23 States.

We were told here the other day by one witness, as I recall, something to the effect that it is inconceivable that we can have any long, extended strike in the railway industry. Because of the fact that the President of the United States under existing law relative to the war may have power to go into court and procure an injunction restraining such strikes, it may be that it would be impossible to prolong a Nation-wide strike over a period of weeks. But I call to the attention of the Senate the fact that in my State only last year there was a strike on the Wabash Railroad Co. which continued for a number of days, and there was a strike on the Missouri Pacific Railroad Co., one of the largest of the central western carriers, which lasted for, as I recall, 6 weeks and 3 days. For 45 days that great transportation system of ten or eleven thousand miles of railroad was tied up, as was described in another connection yesterday—tied up in knots because of the fact that there was a dispute that could not be settled and was not settled.

Referring again to the Chicago Journal of Commerce article from which I was quoting, the writer says:

And in the background is the July 15 ending of the cooling-off period which has held up a—

And then the next two words appear in blackface type—

Nation-wide strike—

Ending the blackface—

of conductors and trainmen.

Mr. President, I spoke about the Great Northern. The Great Northern is not at all confined in its operations to iron ore or to any other kind of ore. I pointed out yesterday in the RECORD that during the year 1949 the Great Northern handled products of agriculture to the extent of more than 9,000,000 tons, of animals and products thereof to the extent of four-hundred-and-eighty-five-thousand-some-odd tons, of products of mines 31,546,319 tons, of products of forests 3,849,000 tons. I am giving the round figures. Manufacturers and miscellaneous 7,305,000 tons. Forwarder traffic 76,000 tons. L. C. L. 295,000 tons. A total tonnage handled by the Great Northern Railroad Co. for 1949 of 52,710,257 tons.

Mr. President, in that respect I call attention to the fact that the Minneapolis Tribune of June 27 comes out with an article which is headed:

GREAT NORTHERN PUTS EMBARGO ON LIVESTOCK

Great Northern Railway—

Says the article—

ordered an immediate embargo late Monday on all livestock and perishable freight and prepared to shut down repair shops in five cities after 2 days of switchmen's strike—

And so forth and so on. In the course of this article, I note the following:

At Superior, Wis., suspension of Great Northern freight service slowed operation at the big ore loading docks. The railroad is the largest shipper of iron ore from the Mesabi range and also operates the largest dock.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the entire article from the Minneapolis Tribune of June 27, 1950, be inserted at this point in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GREAT NORTHERN PUTS EMBARGO ON LIVESTOCK

Great Northern Railway ordered an immediate embargo late Monday on all livestock and perishable freight and prepared to shut down repair shops in five cities after 2 days of the switchmen's strike.

Two other railroads in this area, the Rock Island and the Chicago Great Western, already had suspended all operations, as had the Western Pacific and Denver & Rio Grande Western.

Great Northern's president, F. J. Gavin, said in St. Paul however, that its passenger trains were operating at close to normal and some freight trains were moving.

Freight service was proving more difficult to maintain in face of the walkout by the A. F. of L. Switchmen's Union of North America, he added.

Commenting on the lay-off of close to 7,000 shop workers and seasonal employees because of the strike, Gavin said that "fewer employees are required to handle diminished traffic and keep the system running."

Engine and car repair shops will be closed Thursday and about 2,260 workers laid off. Involved are the following shops:

St. Paul, Dale Street locomotive shop and Jackson Street car shop and repair track, 830 men; Superior, Wis., locomotive and car shops and repair track, 450 men; St. Cloud, Minn., car shops, 425 men; Great Falls, Mont., locomotive and car repair shops, 195 men; Hillyard (Spokane), Wash., locomotive and car shops, 360 men.

Skeleton forces will be maintained at the shops to protect properties and do minimum repair work, Great Northern said.

Lay-off of seasonal workers is effective immediately and involves about 3,500 men employed throughout the 8,000-mile system in ballasting, rail re-laying, and bank widening projects.

Regular section crews will continue in service to keep the lines in safe operating condition, the railroad said.

The freight embargo, also effective immediately, was announced a few minutes after the lay-offs.

Great Northern headquarters in St. Paul said it applied to all livestock and perishable freight shipments from all points on its line or received by connecting lines.

Freight service in some areas already had been seriously curtailed or suspended entirely. Train crews in South Dakota had refused to cross switchmen picket lines at Sioux Falls, to take out a freight train to Garretson, and passenger and freight runs to Yankton and a passenger train to Watertown were cancelled.

At Superior, Wis., suspension of Great Northern freight service slowed operation at the big ore loading docks. The railroad is the largest shipper of iron ore from the Mesabi range and also operates the largest dock.

Supervisory employees managed to load eight 12,000-ton freighters Sunday but admitted they were far behind schedule.

In Minneapolis, the Minneapolis and St. Louis railway announced that its passenger trains will arrive at and depart from the Milwaukee road station for the duration of the strike. The road regularly uses the Great Northern station.

The switchmen are seeking a 40-hour week at the same pay they now get for 48 hours. The railroads claim that would be equal to a wage boost of 31 cents an hour.

A Presidential fact-finding board recommended the union get a 40-hour week and an increase of 18 cents.

The union now has a contract with the Lackawanna Railroad on terms demanded of other lines. The agreement raised pay of switch foremen or yard conductors from $13.06 a day to $15.67; helpers or yard brakemen from $12.21 to $14.65, and switch tenders from $10.71 to $12.86.

Arthur J. Glover, switchmen's union president, said in Chicago again yesterday that he is "ready to sit down with anybody, anywhere, if they are ready to bargain in good faith."

Glover said he was willing to meet with the National (Railway) Mediation Board whenever it has something to offer. The Board was in Chicago yesterday, and apparently was making little progress in efforts to settle the strike.

Mr. DONNELL. Finally, Mr. President, one of the clippings to which I refer is from today's New York News, and is entitled "Great Northern Starts Layoffs in Rail Strike." I take it that in substance the article emphasizes some of the facts I have already mentioned with respect to that railroad. I ask unanimous consent that this article from the New York News may be printed at this point in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GREAT NORTHERN STARTS LAY-OFFS IN RAIL STRIKE

CHICAGO, June 28.—A substantial number of Great Northern Railroad workers were laid off today as a strike of 4,000 A. F. of L. switchmen cut further into the operations of five western railroads.

A Great Northern spokesman said that by Friday a very large proportion of the road's 28,000 employees would be out of work because of the strike.

The railroad suspended operations yesterday on 15 branches and almost stopped operations in the Minnesota iron ore range. Freight service was considerably restricted, the road said, but most principal passenger trains were running. Four other roads did not attempt to operate after the switchmen walked out Sunday.

The switchmen struck against Great Northern, Rock Island, Western Pacific, Chicago Great Western, and Denver & Rio Grande to support demands for a 40-hour week with no pay cut from the present rate for 48 hours' work. A Presidential board found against the union's demands.

Meanwhile, Chairman Francis O'Neill of the National Railway Mediation Board met representatives of railroads and unions in an effort to avert another strike of trainmen, conductors, and yardmasters scheduled for July 15.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, again I call to the attention of the Senate the compelling importance of having the Congress of the United States enact legislation which will leave available all the processes for the voluntary settlement of disputes, will provide for adequate governmental boards in the event voluntary plans fail, but will make final and binding upon railroad employers and railroad employees alike the findings and decisions of these boards, subject only to the provisions for review by the courts, as set forth in Senate bill 3463.

Mr. President, today most earnestly, and with the utmost vigor within my power, I emphasize the fact that the interests of the public—not primarily the interests of the railroads or the interests of the railroad employees, although the interests of both the railroad companies and their employees are involved—but, primarily, the interests of the people of our country, young or old, rich or poor, black or white, are the interests which are to be safeguarded by the enactment of Senate bill 3463.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGE REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEHMAN in the chair) laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States submitting the nomination of Maj. Gen. Thomas E. Watson, United States Marine Corps, to be lieutenant general on the retired list in the Marine Corps, which was referred to the Committee on Armed Services.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following favorable reports of nominations were submitted:

By Mr. LEAHY, from the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service:

Sundry postmasters.

By Mr. McMAHON, from the members on the part of the Senate of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy:

Sumner T. Pike, of Maine, to be a member of the Atomic Energy Commission for a term of 4 years expiring June 30, 1954; adversely.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there are no further reports of the committees, the Clerk will proceed to state the nominations on the calendar.

NOMINATION OF WILLIS W. RITTER TO BE UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE, DISTRICT OF UTAH

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Honorable Willis W. Ritter, of Utah, to be United States District Judge for the District of Utah.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to this nomination?

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ANDERSON in the chair). A quorum is present.

The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to this nomination?

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, I rise today to discuss a very important matter which has received some attention by the Senate. I do it very reluctantly, because I have never been one to enjoy the questioning of the appointment of any man to public office. My general nature would lead me, ordinarily, without question, to want to confirm the nomination of any good man for office. This matter involves a Federal judgeship in the State of Utah. I have profound respect for the judiciary of the United States when it conducts itself properly, and, for the most part, it has conducted itself properly. I have served as a member of the Bar Commission of my State of Utah, where we have what is known as the integrated bar. That is, the bar of the State acts as its own control and as its own disciplinary agency. In that capacity, and as a member of the bar, and as a member of the judiciary at one time in the State courts in my State, I very early came to the conclusion that some time or other in our State, as well as in most of the other States, we should arrive at a decision which would make our courts nonpartisan.
